From other reports rendered at the meeting it is indicated that many of the bigger power plants in the state are surrendering to the fight waged by the exhibitors. In view of this fact and the additional knowledge that but a few of the smaller companies besides the Public Service Corporation are still 'holding out,' the directorate decided to engage the services of Aaron Dawes, an attorney of Trenton, to help finish the battle. The final skirmish will take place very shortly before the Public Utility Commission. After it the directorate feels assured that entire New Jersey will be free from a situation which has been a serious drain for years.

Vigorous opposition was recorded against the action of Famous Players-Lasky in arranging non-theatrical showings for "The Ten Commandments," particularly in Southern New Jersey. It was the general opinion of the directorate that an appeal shall be made to the Philadelphia Board of Trade.

National President R. F. Woodhull amplified Mr. Seider's observations about the Hays-M. P. T. O. A. negotiations, in that he urged all members of the New Jersey organization to be always fair and upright.

The Sunday opening problem was discussed by Joseph Bernstein of Jersey City. Mr. Bernstein, who has been an exhibitor only a comparatively short time, lauded the work of the state organization and expressed his intentions of joining the rank of its real fighters for Jersey justice.

The guest of the directorate at this session was Sam Bullock of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio. Mr. Bullock lauded the advancement of exhibitor organization in his home state. He originally started business in Paterson. The directors were loud in their praise of Peter Adams, whose guests they were in Paterson.

Organize Abroad

THE representatives of the principal American film companies in Italy have organized on the plan of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. In reply to their request for advice and useful information, F. L. Herron, head of the Foreign Department of the M. P. D. A., has written them an encouraging letter supplying them valuable material for an effective organization.

Although there are some Italian members, the majority of the members represent American concerns. Metro-Goldwyn is represented by Messrs. Thomas Hale and F. Curione, United Artists by the dean of Italian-American film men, Mario Luporini; Fox by Mr. Fuhs, Universal by E. Raphael. Paramount, represented by Messrs. Suami and Aboaf, at first joined out later withdrew.

Conditions in Italy have made co-operation among the responsible companies an absolute necessity. Prints were ruined by the score and there was an alarmingly large "business" done in duping films. Involuntary credits of six and seven months were nothing unusual. The new organization will be a benefit to the entire industry, working for higher standards of commercial honesty. The art of exhibition, by the way, is at its lowest ebb in Italy, a fact which keeps thousands upon thousands of prospective patrons from the box office.

First National Men Give Eschmann a Shotgun

APPRECIATION of the fair treatment they have received under his leadership during the past two years and a half that he has been general manager of distribution of First National Pictures, members of the New York exchange presented E. A. Eschmann, new United Artists' director of distribution, with a Parker double-barrelled shotgun, one of the finest English guns.

The letter accompanying the gift read: "The boys of the sales department of the New York exchange, wishing to show their appreciation in being associated with one of the squarest shooting executives that it has been their pleasure to work with, ask you to accept this gun, with the hope that you will be able to shoot as straight and true during your hours of recreation as you have in your business dealings."

The signers were Stanley W. Hand, branch manager; A. M. Weinberger, W. G. Roosevelt, A. F. Hickox, Howard Levy, Wendell G. Shields, Samuel Lefkowitz, Clive Waxman, Herman Goldman, E. C. Bullwinkle, Jack Zurick and William A. Benson.

Incorporations

Four companies entered the motion picture business in New York State during the past week, according to papers filed with the secretary of state, the amount of capitalization of one company being authorized at $300,000. This company will be known as the Beatrice Fairfax Pictures, Inc., with Mildred Singer, E. G. Adelman and Morris Vogel of New York City as directors. The other companies, which did not specify the amount of capitalization were: F. S. & S. Corporation, with Max Sheinart, H. J. Freedman, of Brooklyn, and F. V. Goldstein, New York City; Tri Boro Theatres, Inc., H. R. Grossman, Julius Joelson, Harmon Yaffe, New York City; H. M. B. Trading Corporation, H. G. Bailey, A. W. Barmby, Lida McCord, New York City.

Seven companies incorporated in New York State two weeks ago. The companies, with the names of the directors and the amount of capitalization where such is stated in the papers filed, are: Forbell Film Exchange, Inc., $10,000, Samuel Seplowin, Gussie and Frances Farbstein, Brooklyn; Emblem Film Exchange, Inc., Harry Lewis, Grant Hoerner, Henry Herbrun, New York City; Joel Coward, Inc., with Joel Coward, J. C. Wilson, New York City; Lester Donahue, Gloucester, Mass.; Golson Theatrical Realty Corporation, $35,000, Samuel Goldstein, Louis Sonenberg, Cecilia Baer, New York City; Entertainment Pictures Corporation, Jacques Kopstein, Michael Moran, New York City; Joe Rock, Hollywood, Calif.; F. A. Russo, Inc., $10,000, F. A. Russo, Robert Zink, William R. Zink, Brooklyn; W. and H. Amusement Corporation, $25,000, Abraham Weinstock, Morris Harris, Hugo Pollock, New York City.

The Security Pictures Company, Cleveland, Ohio, has filed articles of incorporation which show a capital of $10,000, the interested parties being George S. Spencer, N. T. Harrington, Lee W. Chapman, Oscar Stettler and Foster Hathaway.

tion, which was made in India, worked hard and conscientiously, but the entertainment value of the film takes a lot of finding. The Germans call it a "Kultur" film and it may be all of that, but as a dramatic feature in even a second-class house in the States it seems a distinct improbability.

The Germans are inclined just now to go in for military and historic films which have little value for the foreign markets. There are two productions that seem promising. One which has just been released is a comedy based on the stage play of Franz Molnar, "The Bodyguard," and the other is still in the making, a film version of "Faust," in the studio of the Ufa, which is being directed by the director of "The Last Man," F. W. Murnau. "The Bodyguard" is well done in most respects and will stand being judged by American standards. "Faust" is being made on a very large and sumptuous scale. Some new photographic tricks are to be tried in "Faust" and sensational effects are anticipated. The leading part, curiously enough, is taken by a Swedish actor. The film will be released in two or three weeks.

McRAE HEADS "U" CITY PLANT

Confirmation has just been received at the Universal home office that Henry McRae, a veteran Universal director and studio executive has been elevated to the post of General Manager of Universal City, by Carl Laemmle, the Universal president. McRae takes the place of Raymond L. Schrock, who recently resigned, and will have complete jurisdiction of the vast studio plant, located in the San Fernando Valley, 16 miles out of Los Angeles.

New Associated Sales Appointments

Lederman, Theuerkauf and Others Are Named

THESE are fast-stepping days at the Associated Exhibitors home office, as evidenced by a budget of appointments made public this week by E. J. Smith, general sales manager of that organization. Three new district sales directors and an equal number of territorial managers are listed in the latest anouncement, giving proof of the pace that E. J. Smith has set for the sales end of the Oscar Price-P. A. Powers distributing machine.

Probably most prominent in the news items because of his world-wide film experience and extensive acquaintance in the trade is the acquisition of Dan B. Lederman. Mr. Lederman, probably among the best known of the Universal veterans, has been appointed district sales director covering the following Associated offices: Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Denver and Winnipeg.

Before the stir in film circles occasioned by the name of Dan B. Lederman had subsided, General Sales Manager Smith had added another live morsel of news to his budget by closing with Lester Theuerkauf for the post of district sales director covering the Far-West offices: Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Butte, Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, and Vancouver.

Mr. Theuerkauf was formerly general manager of the Universal West Coast theaters in addition to service that earned him high ranking as a sales executive while handling the Universal Los Angeles office. In his new post at Associated he succeeds Oren F. Woody, resigned.

Lew Thompson, well known by theatre owners throughout the Middle West, is the third district sales director to be annnounced. He will be in charge of the Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Detroit offices.

Philadelphia, Chicago and Charlotte are the Associated Exhibitor offices to have new managers named this week, following upon an anouncement last week that told of new directors for as many other offices.

J. S. Mednikow is the new Chicago manager, coming to that post from the Universal organization. Mr. Mednikow's film experience has been all-around, starting when a youngster as a projectionist, later to take up selling with the Celebrated Players Corporation. Merit soon brought him to the top as sales manager of the Friedman exchange, where he remained for eight years before joining the Universal Chicago organization.

From Philadelphia to service abroad in almost every Continental European country and then back to Philadelphia is the record of the new Associated Exhibitor manager for the Quaker City office. A. Blofson, Mr. Smith's appointee, was in charge of Universal's Philadelphia office when Carl Laemmle drafted him for an important job assisting Mr. Smith in Europe. Mr. Blofson was general manager in France for Universal, with supervision over all of Latin Europe.

Raleigh T. Good has been named to succeed Phelps Sasseen as manager of the Charlotte branch. Mr. Good started in the film business seven years ago with the old Mutual and has seen service with Fox, F. B. O. and Universal.

It is an indication of the quality of sales organization being built up for Associated by General Sales Manager Smith, as well as a tribute to that executive's personal qualities, to note that practically all of the men named in recent weeks as additions to his staff have been shoulder to shoulder with him in past sales efforts and are now enthusiastically rallying to the banner of a commander in whom they have faith.

These are busy enough days for the Associated sales chief between building up the selling force that is to keep pace with the new Associated spirit and filling the gap left by the resignation of John S. Woody insofar as the handling of sales is concerned. He found time, however, to express his appreciation of the loyalty shown by the men who are gathering around him and, in response to a query, to outline the remarkable film career of the new mid-western sales director, Dan B. Lederman. In announcing the appointment, Mr. Smith added the following comment:

"Mr. Lederman is one of the real pioneers of the picture business. Starting in the Omaha territory almost twenty years ago, he formed the first chain of the theatres west of the Mississippi River. Later he was connected with the General Film and Mutual Film companies as managers of various branches.

"When the Universal Film Company was formed, Lederman joined Carl Laemmle and has been with him ever since. Seventeen years ago he was manager of the Universal branch office in Des Moines. Later he came to New York as special representative. At one time he was assistant to Mr. Laemmle. Then he was sent into foreign fields and opened all of Universal's Brazilian offices. Recently he has been manager of the Universal home office.

"Mr. Lederman will be remembered by hundreds of exhibitors in the Middle West and his appointment will be welcomed. He was formerly one of the most popular exchange managers in the Middle West. He combined a thorough knowledge of the business with a remarkably pleasing personality."

DAN B. LEDERMAN, District Sales Director, Associated Exhibitors.

Norwalk, Conn., Theatres Sold to Danbury Showman

The Regent and Palace Theatres in Norwalk, Conn., have been sold by Charles and David Esterson, of the Regent Theatre Company and the Stanley Amusement Company to Andrew J. Collins, owner of the Empress Theatre in Danbury. The price is said to be more than $200,000.

Moving pictures will be continued by the new owners, although it is also announced that more legitimate attractions will be added to the programs. Vaudeville also will be a feature. The Estersons purchased the Regent Theatre in 1922, taking over the Palace a month later.

Mr. Collins, the new owner, is an experienced theatrical man, having been associated with the business for several years.

HURT BY EXPLOSION

Eugene Gerbase, manager of Universal in Denver, Col., had a narrow escape from serious injury a few days ago. He was tending his furnace at home when an accumulation of gas exploded and burned him about the face and shoulders. The injured part of his body is plainly noticeable although it is hoped that the healing will leave no scars. The accident did not confine him to his home, as he was on the job as usual ever since the accident.

UNIVERSAL BUYS THEATRE

Si Charnisky has sold a two-thirds interest in the Capitol Theatre at Dallas, Texas, to Universal Pictures Corporation for $92,362 and will retain a one-third interest and the management. Ray Stinnet, president of the Capitol Amusement Company, has resigned but will continue in an advisory capacity, and Miss Jean Darnell will be retained as director of publicity.

J. S. MEDNIKOW, Chicago Manager, Associated Exhibitors.

Adding Theatres

THE American Theatres Corporation, of which Joe Hopp is president and Charles Casanave booking manager, is adding more theatres to its circuit every week.

During the past week, the Echo at Des Plaines, Ill., under the direction of H. L. McGee, the Polo at Polo, Ill., under the management of Walter Young, and the new Paris, Ill., theatre under the B. Vought management have joined the American cricuit.

This gives them thirty-eight theatres in the American booking circuit, and several more have signified their intention to come in before the end of the month, according to the management.

First National Sued For Injunction and An Accounting

THE First National Pictures, Inc., is defendant in a suit filed in the New York County Supreme Court by the Osida Productions and George Fitzmaurice Productions, Inc., for an injunction and accounting of the three last Samuel Goldwyn releases through First National, "The Dark Angel," "His Supreme Moment" and "A Thief in Paradise." The document details the Fitzmaurice contract with First National, alleging that it required an advance of $300,000 on each picture and stating that "The Eternal City" cost $355,531, "Tarnish" $247,520 and "Cytherea" $293,183. "The Dark Angel" cost $300,475, it says, "His Supreme Moment" $300,873 and "A Thief in Paradise" $293,075.

The charge is made that the contract, when renewed, allowed First National to recoup any losses on two of the pictures from the third and that a "conspiracy" made the books show a loss on the first two pictures of the second group, such losses to be recouped from the earnings of "The Dark Angel."

According to the complaint; the exhibition value of "A Thief in Paradise" was reduced from $1,200,000 to $900,000 and that of "His Supreme Moment" from $900,000 to $800,000. The claim is made that First National threatened to reduce the exhibition value of "The Dark Angel;" also that the Fitzmaurice pictures were sold with "inferior product" and the rentals so allocated that the true values were not obtained.

Samuel Spring, secretary and treasurer of First National, replies: "Mr. Goldwyn's charges are utterly unfounded. First National acted within its rights and in a spirit of perfect fairness and is perfectly willing to meet Mr. Goldwyn in court, where it has no question of the outcome."

STAY OF EXECUTION

A stay of execution has been granted by County Judge Charles Hickey in the order which he gave out last week directing the sheriff to dispossess Allan Moritz from the Ritz, formerly the Lumberg Theatre, in Niagara Falls, N. Y., because of the non-payment of rent for several months.

Start Small Chain

Bob Wagner of Little Falls, N. Y., a veteran showman who handled the Gateway in that city for several years until the theatre was taken over recently by the Schine interests, will now be associated with Cliff Servatius, former manager for Nate Robbins in Utica, in a chain of houses which may number anywhere from four or five to a dozen or more. Since Mr. Wagner left the Gateway and since Mr. Servatius decided to divorce himself from the Robbins' interests, following their acquisition by the Strand interests, the two men have been quietly looking around for houses. The first of the chain has been secured in Middleville, and the house, now closed during extensive improvements, will be ready to open on December 5.

According to present plans, the two men will secure their theatres from the smaller places rather than the big cities, and in this respect they will follow the policy of William Smalley of Cooperstown, who has a chain of a dozen or more theatres in villages.

Six New Neighborhood Theatres Planned for Omaha

SIX new neighborhood theatres are to be erected in Omaha and completed by next summer, according to an announcement made by Sam and Louis Epstein, South Omaha realty operators. Each of the six theatres is to cost $50,000. The contract for the first of the six to be built has already been signed, Contractor Alex Beck of Omaha getting the contract. This theatre will be at Sixteenth and Corby Streets.

Each of the six theatres will have a seating capacity of 750 persons. The plans for the first theatre calls for eight exits, the idea being to make it easy to empty the house in case of emergency. The most modern design and lighting system will be used throughout.

Each theatre will also have a nursery where parents may leave small children in the care of competent attendants. This will be the first time this feature has been worked out in any Omaha theatre. The projecting room and projection equipment will be of the most modern design and of fireproof construction.

The Epstein brothers, besides operating in real estate, own the Orpheum and Roseland Theatres in South Omaha.

ASCHERS TAKE OVER PARTHENON

Ascher Brothers have added another theatre to its rapidly growing string of Chicago theatres. They have purchased the Parthenon Theatre in Berwyn from S. J. Gregory and took control on November 23. This is one of the largest and most beautiful of Chicago's suburban theatres and it will be number fifteen in the Ascher string. George Laing of the Ascher office is re-arranging the policy of the theatre, and Lewis P. Newhafer, general manager for Aschers, will personally direct the administration and engage the new staff.

A New Moving Picture World Service

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories, Operas By Gray Strider

There are many producers, scenario heads, directors and stars who are vitally interested in the problem of finding suitable screen material. What they find and what they make vitally concerns the exhibitor, so that this new department will be an aid to many elements of the industry.

"Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint" is designed to supplement existing forms of research. On Broadway plays it will be of particular interest to those on the Coast who do not get a chance to analyze the stage productions from the picture point of view.

Miss Strider comes to Moving Picture World well equipped for her job. She knows the fields she is analyzing, and the screen for which she is analyzing those fields.

We ask your co-operation in making her department a real aid to the industry.—THE EDITOR.

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

THIS Department is being inaugurated with the desire to bring to all interested readers of Moving Picture World a fresh viewpoint on screen material. Most of the Broadway productions will be covered, whether they are considered screen possibilities or not, so that interested readers in and out of New York may have a definite idea of the latest stage presentations.

No doubt some of the stories and plays dealt with here have already had consideration. Anyhow we want to give you our ideas which will not be the stilted words of a bored and weary literateur, but the reactions of normal people whose emotional relaxations come when they are seated in the unobservant movie darkness.

These seeking ones—the harrassed mother who steals away an hour from fretful children, the factory girl, trying to silence the interminable din in her ears, the husband whose shrewish wife never permits a moment of soul peace, the unhappy little rich girl whose only knowledge of mother love may come from a "Stella Dallas," the society woman sick of false fronts and mercenary compliments, the sensitive business man longing for something besides business, the old men and women, pushed aside by hasty modern life, a bit puzzled over it all—these types are the ones whose wishes we are going to respect and not the super-hyper-educationally stuffed few who have more interest in posing than in living, more regard for high (?) art than for humanity, and more praise for a futuristic idea which they can't quite grasp than for an honest human emotion.—GRAY STRIDER.

"In a Garden"

IN Philip Barry's so-called comedy which Arthur Hopkins is presenting at the Plymouth Theatre, Laurette Taylor, the wife, Frank Conroy, the husband, Louis Calhern, the lover, and Ferdinand Gottschalk, the family friend, romp over the stage in a little metaphysical mess which wouldn't bring a nickel into any movie box office short of burlesquing the whole idea or insulting Mr. Barry by dressing up his effort with a few Chinese wars, a train wreck and a happy ending.

It's our old friend the triangle decked out in store clothes. The successful writer and devoted husband, Adrian Terry, decides to give up writing about life and live it instead. Lissa, his wife, is overjoyed but the old friend, Roger Compton, is disgusted. He blames Adrian's marital happiness for this decision and trying to force the husband back to his work makes him bitterly unhappy by telling him that Lissa, before her marriage, had a very romantic half hour in a moonlit garden with Norrie Bliss, who left the next morning to take up his decorative duties in the American Diplomatic Servcie in China. To make things really good, it develops that Norrie is arriving that very afternoon from a seven years' absence—to spend a few days with the happy Terry family.

The logical husband, accustomed continually to dissecting cause and result erects a replica of the garden in his library and plans to have himself called away so Lissa and Norrie may find themselves in the old setting and discover a romantic incident can't repeat itself after such a long time. Adrian hopes to disprove Roger's theory that every woman is mentally the mistress of the man who first brought her romance.

But Lissa has a neurotic complex which only a day over, the wash tub can cure. She yearns for "unreason" and "unryhme." She wants "yellow ducks" and "kings but not cabbages;" "a baby and a star."

Adrian doesn't prove anything and the third act finds three of the most undecided people I have ever seen. The lover leaves to wait for the wife—forever, if ever; the wife departs for strange parts because she doesn't know which man she loves and the husband is left lonesomely and savagely tearing down the perfumed mimosa from the unhappily constructed garden wall.

And a bad time was had by all, which shouldn't be duplicated on the screen—but if it is, be sure to get Ferdinand Gottschalk. He, if anybody, might help the slender idea to survive.

"The Wind Bloweth"

THIS book of Donn Byrne's is so crammed with life—color, beauty, passion, diversity of characters and scenes—that it couldn't help proving an artistic triumph as well as a box office success. As said above, this may be material that has had consideration, but it is good material and we are glad to give our viewpoint on it.

You might have to change the title and have the hero's culminating romance come to him before he reaches forty—instead of after—but with the exception of these minor details, the story will unroll itself.

"O God, my loved one, that you and I were in Dublin town! Or on a white strand where no foot ever touched before. Day in, night in, without food or sleep, what mattered it? But you to be loving me and your white arm around me so generously" was one of the songs of the Gaelic poet, Colquitto Campbell, who at his end had only his deathless poems to bequeath to his little son, Shane Campbell.

Shane lives in the glens of Antrim with his cold Huguenot mother and his two uncles, Robin, an immense learned man, and Alan, the greatest sportsman of all Ireland. He gets the salt water itch in his veins and goes to sea instead of to college. Around the Horn fighting the sails, in the horse latitudes with no breeze stirring, in the night watches off the Azores, he grows to manhood, idealizing women as grand princesses, only to reach port and find them common drabs.

Everything palls in the foreign ports where the coral waters swish sluggishly and he sees a mirage—a home thatched and whitewashed with a cobbled garden, a wife dreaming over the half door, and within a cradled child and drowsing dog.

He goes home and is rushed into a marriage by pretty, sullen-mouthed, red-haired, dowerless Moyra Dolan, and her lying, cheating hag of a mother. It's Moyra's only chance—"And if the Queen of Sheba and she having nothing but her shift were to offer herself in marriage to a strong farmer, he would refuse her for the cross-eyed woman in the next town-land who had twenty acres and five good cows."

Titles come ready made for a picture from the pages of the book. Shane's dream house proves a strange dwelling, his wife a cold woman who dies two years later in a fit of temper while beating her husband's faithful dog.

The soft rain falls as Moyra is lowered into a rectangular slot in the ground and the not-yet twenty-two year old husband is left with a dumb wonder which only the great sea with its crisp winds and treacherous sliding icebergs can cure.

Shane searches years for his true love, and finds her. But first he has two romances whose exquisite tragedy can scarcely be equalled; with Claire-Anne, Mouth of Honey, whom he meets and kills in Marseilles—and with Fenzile, daughter of a Druse chieftan in Beirut, who leaves him for a huge, white-robed, turbanned wrestler whom Shane has crippled for life.

This story is too beautiful to smudge up in a few words, and we can't do it. But Shane finds his real love, a strange, dark woman—one of the greatest Shakesperean actresses the world has ever seen—back in Ireland. And he proposes to her in the sea as she jumps off a sailing ship full of guns which they have just brought back from St. Petersburg to aid an Irish rebellion. She fights him terribly and this strong man says: "Granya, if you don't keep quiet, I'll have to hit you . . ." He drags her back on board and sends for the parson.

"Go below, Granya, and get those wet things off—"

And this unconquerable woman answers meekly "Yes, Shane—Very well Shane."

It's a great book, laying Ireland's pulse bare on the pages, and not only Ireland, but the sea; Marseilles where Pontius Pilate was judge after his Judea tragedy; Beirut with Arab shepherds, Greek priests, veiled women, and donkey boys; Baltimore like a sweet old lady; Rio, like some sparkling jewel; Lisbon, quiet as a cathedral; and the end comes within the sound of our own Broadway with its clop-clop of hansoms, its tram cars with their tired horses and its hawk-eyed commercial men. Shane sits there quietly in the twilight dusk of his New York drawing room, and down the stairs drift the high voices of his two children—his and Granya's saying, "Our Father which art in Heaven."

A wonderful orchestration, woven around the old Irish melodies and the music of the sea, could be made for "The Wind Bloweth."

Somebody, besides making a lot of money is certainly going to send forth a good picture into the world.

Fox Announces Big December Schedule; "The Golden Strain" Included in List

IN addition to the big Christmas special, "The Ancient Mariner," Fox Films' December schedule contains three feature pictures based on red-blooded American fiction and one picturization of a John Golden stage hit. Second in importance to the Christmas picture is "The Golden Strain," the first of the four Peter B. Kyne stories to be brought to the screen this season by Fox. This will be presented for New Year's week.

The Fox short subject program contains another two reeler in the Van Bibber series based on the stories by Richard Harding Davis, two Imperial Comedies and two Fox Varieties.

"When the Door Opened," based on James Oliver Curwood's thrilling story of the North Woods, opens the month on December 6. Jacqueline Logan wins new laurels in the role of the French Canadian heroine. Walter McGrail, Frank Keenan, Margaret Livingston, Robert Cain and the big police dog, Prince Royal, are in the supporting cast. With such a cast and the background of the Canadian Northwest, Reginald Barker, who directed, has produced a masterpiece. The flood scene is one of the greatest ever screened.

Two pictures are scheduled for December 13—"Wages for Wives" and Buck Jones in "The Desert's Price." "Wages for Wives" is the screen version of the Golden stage hit, "Chicken Feed," written by Guy Bolton. Jacqueline Logan plays the role of the bride, and Creighton Hale is the bridegroom in this merry drama of the family bankroll. It's a box-office cast, with Earle Foxe, Margaret Livingston, Zasu Pitts, Margaret Seddon, Claude Gillingwater, David Butler and Dan Mason in the principal supporting roles. Frank Borzage has directed with the skill he demonstrated in bringing "Lazybones" to the screen.

Buck Jones gives a realistic portrayal of the hero created by William MacLeod Raine in his novel, "The Desert's Price." Florence Gilbert, "the Van Bibber girl," plays the leading feminine role, with little Edna Marion in the second lead. Montague Love and Arthur Houseman divide the villainy effectively. The story gives Buck ample opportunity to ride and fight. W. S. Van Dyke directed.

The big event of the month will be the showing of "The Ancient Mariner," based on Samuel Taylor Coleridge's great poem, on December 20 for the holiday season. Paul Panzer plays the title role in the fantasy sequence directed by Henry Otto, with Gladys Brockwell and Vivian Oakland in support. In the modern sequence Clara Bow is the heroine. Earle Williams, hero of many leading roles, has turned villain. Leslie Fenton plays the juvenile male leading role, Nige de Brullier is the mariner of the modern story, which was directed by Chester Bennett. Fox Films is putting over a big exploitation campaign tied up with schools, libraries and newspapers.

The first of the four original Peter B. Kyne stories to be picturized by Fox Films is "The Golden Strain," a story of the old West, scheduled for December 27. Victor Schertzinger has had a large company at Fort Huachuca, the historic old post of the 10th U. S. Cavalry, making the outdoor scenes. Madge Bellamy is the belle of the post and Kenneth Harlan plays the role of a dashing young cavalry officer. Ann Pennington, Hobart Bosworth, Frank Beal, Lawford Davidson and Frank McGlynn, Jr., play the other principal roles.

Earle Foxe, star of the Van Bibber comedies, strays into Paris as "A Parisian Knight," in the latest of this series of inimitable two-reelers to be released on December 13. Florence Gilbert and Frank Beal continue in the principal supporting roles. This was directed by George Marshall, the Fox comedy chief.

For December 13 Fox has also listed "Heavy Swells," an Imperial two-reeler. Gene Cameron and the petite Edna Marion are the newlyweds in this sea-going comedy, which Henry Lehrman directed. Tom McGuire and Edna Boland are in support.

Sid Smith and Marion Harlan are all up in the air in "The Flying Fool," another "Imperial Comedy directed by Lew Seilor, which is scheduled for December 27. Harry Woods is the villain.

Two Fox varieties, one reel armchair journeys through the world we live in, are on the December list. "Toiling for Rest," depicting strenuous vacationists climbing mountains, will be released on December 13. "Iron Trail Around the World" is scheduled for December

Rogell Leaves Universal

Albert Rogell has resigned from Universal City. The young director who first came into prominence as the discoverer of Fred Thompson and later brought Reed Howes and Billy Sullivan to the front, has been under contract at Universal for almost six months. During this time, he directed Art Acord in one picture and Jack Hoxie in four, of which the latest, just completed, is entitled "The Grinner." Rogell made an enviable production record on each of these pictures, in each case besting the estimates of time and money as worked out by the studio's production department. His resignation was tendered because of the lack of opportunity which he saw at Universal, where he was kept making Westerns, when he feels that his forte is comedy drama.

Finishes Sea Film

Kathryn McGuire has finished her work in the leading feminine role of "The Phantom Pilot," the Sovereign Production filmed with the cooperation of the United States Navy, under the direction of Harry Moody, for independent release. During the course of the story, Miss McGuire had her first airplane ride and made her first trip to sea on a battleship, the U. S. S. Pennsylvania. This marks her first appearance in a sea picture since her engagement with Buster Keaton in "The Navigator."

"The Road to Yesterday" Scores Big Hit At Philadelphia and Los Angeles Premieres

ACCLAIMED by the press and the public as one of the finest pictures of the current season, Cecil B. De Mille's first personally directed independent production, "The Road to Yesterday" registered a decided triumph, last week during its premiere presentations at the new Figueroa Theatre in Los Angeles and The Stanley in Philadelphia.

Joseph Schildkraut, featured player in the production, appeared in person at the first two evening showings at the Stanley Theatre and was accorded an ovation at each appearance.

Frank Beuhler, general manager of the Stanley Company of America, presented Schildkraut in an address in which he referred to him as "one of the ablest stage players in the country whose genius was displayed to the full in the picture about to be projected."

In his speech, Mr. Schildkraut paid a tribute to the genius of Cecil B. De Mille, both as playwright, actor and producer which was warmly applauded. He said that with such able men producing pictures, the silent drama was being placed upon a high pedestal of art. He told of the realism of the railroad smashup shown in the production and how hard the players worked to make not only this scene, but that of the duel absolutely realistic, and in the performance of which all personal risks to life and limb were forgotten.

As an expression of gratification over the audience reaction to "The Road to Yesterday," Jules E. Mastbaum, president of The Stanley Company, wired congratulations to W. J. Morgan of Producers Distributing Corporation in which he said:

"Road to Yesterday opened today at Stanley Theatre—capacity and enthusiastic audiences at very performance. Picture acclaimed one of finest of season. Cecil B. De Mille and all concerned are to be congratulated on production which has every element that makes for delightful entertainment—Joseph Schildkraut star made personal appearance—won audience with his personality even as he did with his excellent acting in picture."

(Signed) Stanley Co. of America,
JULES E. MASTBAUM, President.

The picture not only scored a decided hit with the audiences but the press was unanimous in its praise. The Philadelphia Public Ledger said in the course of a long review that "The Road to Yesterday" certainly should be included among the "ten best" of the season and continues with: "It is a great pleasure to report, that for once the picture has all the honors on its side. It is elaborate, as all De Mille productions usually are, and every scene, every incident, is done in good taste. There is a richness of material and an almost embarrassing amount of fine action. Certainly, the five outstanding members of the cast deserve the highest praise."

The Philadelphia Sun reviewer writes that "the picture is far superior to the stage version upon which it is based," and warmly praises both the production and players.

The Evening Ledger referred to the picture as "typical of the artistry of Cecil B. De Mille" and "excellent acting which leaves a tremendous impression of a story quite different from the usual photoplay."

The Philadelphia Inquirer said: "It is a powerful picture and has a notable cast. Joseph Schildkraut, as Kenneth, gives a stimulating, vivid and forceful performance. Jetta Goudal, as Malena, and the gypsy is excellent. Vera Reynolds makes the role of Beth emotional and interesting. William Boyd, as Jack, gives to his part a clean-cut, gripping impression. Trixie Friganza adds to the comedy. Careful attention to details, and the fanciful environment makes this photoplay a splendid success."

The Philadelphia Record reports: "Deserves to rank with the best by Cecil B. De Mille. * * * De Mille did not write the play—that he resurrected from the stage offerings of a score of years ago—but he did generously and lavishly and brilliantly put into the screen production many of the resources of his large photoplay 'plant' and the vast experience he has had in the making of screen successes."

The Evening Bulletin says: "The film presents a delightful fantasy through the medium of a cast of more than usual ability."

The Los Angeles premiere of "The Road to Yesterday" also marked the formal opening of the "palatial" new Figueroa Theatre and the occasion was a brilliant affair in the amusement life of Los Angeles. The enthusiastic reception of the production was a duplication of Philadelphia's open armed acceptance and the California critics vied with their eastern brothers in showering praise upon the picture.

Florence Lawrence, in The Examiner, said: "De Mille has introduced so much spellbinding melodrama and fast action that the presence of a theme may easily be forgotten unless you want to remember it. Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix have linked up the two periods with a sensational climax which has rarely been equalled on the screen. The train wreck promises to bring cold thrills to the most hardened of theatre-goers."

Kenneth McGaffey in the Illustrated Daily News says: "Cecil De Mille shows more stuff than he did when he was cutting stories out of whole cloth. This story receives careful and magnificent treatment at his hands and the train wreck sequence surpasses anything of the sort we have ever seen on the screen."

Edwin Schallert in The Times says: "The picture works up to pitch of excitement with the train wreck one of the most realistic that has ever been filmed and evidences De Mille's technical skill at its best."

Guy Price of the Evening Herald starts his review by saying "The Road to Yesterday" is the best picture Cecil De Mille ever made and states he is willing to stake his reputation on that statement. He refers to the spontaneous applause which broke out at the train wreck scene and says: "When these folk break into enthusiastic praise with pure spontaneity you may write it down that the person being lauded has achieved something worth while with a master touch that has placed him on the topmost rung of cinema fame. De Mille has evolved a screen offering that will live long in the annals of art. It is gripping; convincing; thrilling and heartrending."

Rupert Julian to Direct H. B. Warner in "Silence"

Rupert Julian, who has just finished "Three Faces East," directing the picture and also playing the role of the Kaiser in the production, is enjoying a brief vacation prior to the start of his next picture for Cecil B. De Mille. The latter part of this month he commences work on "Silence,' Max Marcin's greatm ystery melodrama, which has been adapted for the screen by Beulah Marie Dix.

H. B. Warner, widly known stage star, comes direct to the De Mille studio from a year's triumph in New York in the stage version of "Silence," produced there by Crosby Gaige. He will play the lead in the screen adaptation, under the direction of Julian.

"It's a Knockout"
says Photoplay Magazine

THE CALGARY STAMPEDE—Universal

THREE cheers for Hoot Gibson and his director, Herbert Blache! Of all the excellent Westerns that Hoot has appeared in, this is by far the best—in fact it's a knockout. The action is decidedly different from the usual cut-and dried Westerns. The most remarkable riding stunts are performed and we can just imagine the shouts from the young "fellas" when they see this. And, grown-ups, don't miss it!

Reports to Universal Indicate "The Phantom" Breaking Records

BOX-OFFICE reports reaching the Universal home office from theatres of all sizes in all sections of the country indicate that "The Phantom of the Opera" is universally topping the excellent records established by "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," its phenomenal successor on the Universal "super" release schedule. Universal officials are elated over the exceptional results with "The Phantom," which they hardly dared hope would equal "The Hunchback" figures, much less surpass them.

An indication of how "The Phantom" is breaking "Hunchback" records is contained in the following reports recently received by the Universal sales executives now made public:

At Peery's Egyptian Theatre, Ogden, Utah, "The Phantom" broke house records and this despite the fact that theatre had unusual and record-breaking business with "The Hunchback." The manager wired the following report to Carl Laemmle, Universal chief:

"Heartiest congrtaulations to Mr. Laemmle and entire Universal organization on 'The Phantom of the Opera.' Opened yesterday to biggest business in history of the theatre and we have played practically all of the big ones. Give us more like this and 'The Hunchback.'"

At the Martini Theatre, Galveston, "The Phantom" topped "The Hunchback" by $600 despite the fact that it rained during the entire engagement, and despite a higher scale of prices for "The Hunchback."

In the big Stinnet & Charninsky house in Dallas, "The Phantom" played rings around "The Hunchback." Here is the report wired in by the Dallas partners:

"Phantom" going bigger every day. Third night of engagement cashier sold thousand tickets in twenty-five minutes. Four hundred stood through entire performance to see picture and we turned away more than 1,500 people. Played Saturday to 4,652 admissions—this record for house—would have been twice as many if we could have handled mob. Business Sunday 430 admissions better than corresponding day Hunchback—phenomenal!"

In the Plaza Theatre, Sioux City, Ia., "The Phantom" established one of the biggest days in the theatre's history, despite severe weather conditions. The report is as follows:

"We packed them in today despite terrific wind and snow and rain throughout entire afternoon. Played to one of the biggest days in history of theatre. Patrons loud in their praise. We look for a record-breaking week."

In Orlando Flas., "The Phantom" played to 40 per cent of the population in three days. Similar reports reached the Universal home office from Charleston, W. Va., where the picture drew 15,484 admissions in three days in a city of 39,678 inhabitants.

"The Phantom" is making excellent records for itself in piling up high admission figures even in small or comparatively small houses, Universal ponts out. For instance, in the Columbia Theatre, Portland, Ore. it played to 3,615 admissions for the first day and 3,365 the second day in a 822 seat house. In Seattle it played to 4,577 admissions the first day and 4,652 the second day in a 1,074 seat house—the Columbia. In Spokane it played to 6,505 admissions in two days in a 993 seat house—The Clemmer Theatre. In the American Theatre in Denver it opened with 3,941 admissions and topped that with 5,157 the next day, the biggest day in the history of the theatre.

"THE CALGARY STAMPEDE"—That's a whirlwind of action, and you can see that there's tense drama in it the way Hoot Gibson puts it over in Universal's feature of that title.

NORMAN KERRY, star in Universal pictures, is one of featured players in "The Phantom of the Opera."

Only Woman in Cast

Wanda Hawley the Only Girl in "Combat" New "U" Jewel Starring House Peters

When "Combat," the Universal picture starring House Peters is released, fans will witness something never before seen in a feature length photoplay.

In the entire picture Wanda Hawley, leading lady, is the only girl to appear on the screen. Not even a woman extra was used by Lynn Reynolds, director of this rugged tale of the lumber camp. The outdoor scenes were made in the Plumas County, Cal., lumber district.

Long shots and closeups alike are jammed with unshaven backswoodsmen of a poundage that would rival the heaviest football team in the country, and there is not a single feminine figure, except Miss Hawley, in any of the scenes.

The cast includes, besides fifty of the hardest appearing characters in the movies, Walter McGrail, C. E. Anderson and Steve Clemento.

Camera work on the picture was completed early this week. Reynolds and the Universal City Editorial Department are now busy whipping it into final shape.

Neilan Signs Lewis

Will Be Featured in "Wild Oats Lane," a Producer Distributing Corp. Release

Mitchell Lewis has ben signed by Marshall Neilan for a role in the latter's production of "Wild Oats Lane." Lewis at present is playing one of the leading roles in "What Price Glory" with the Los Angeles company. He will be featured in the Neilan picture in a cast headed by Robert Agnew and Viola Dana and which also includes John P. MacSwinney, Scott Welch, Jerry Miley, Margaret Seddon and Robert Brower.

The story was adapted to the screen by Benjamin Glazer from Gerald Beaumont's well known story, "The Gambling Chaplain. It will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

The cast of "Wild Oats Lane" contains the names of three actors who have never appeared on the screen before. John P. MacSwinney, who plays the Chaplain, is well known on the stage.

"REGISTER AMBITION—'is my idea of how to put it into the lens." Charles Murray, in the Metropolitan production, "Steel Preferred," is speaking.

Next Barthelmess Picture

"Kid From Montana" Announced As Next Release

"The Kid From Montana" has been selected as the next Richard Barthelmess picture for First National release to follow "Just Suppose," according to an announcement made by J. Boyce Smith, general manager of Inspiration Pictures, producers of the Barthelmess productions.

In the coming picture, an adaptation of the novel "Q" by Katherine Newlin Burt, published by Houghton, Mifflin Co., Mr. Barthelmess will have an opportunity to add another to his long list of distinct characterizations which have marked him as one of the most versatile stars on the screen. He will take the part of a breezy young cowboy who falls in love with an aristocratic girl while she is summering on a ranch in Montana. Inheriting land on which there is a fortune in oil, he conceals his wealth and woos the girl under the guise of a poor man. Much of the action in the later sequences of the pictures transpires in the fashionable suburbs of Boston.

The adaptation of the story will be made by Mrs. Violet E. Powell and C. Graham Baker and the scenario will be written by Don Bartlett. The role of the dashing cowboy appeals strongly to Mr. Barthelmess. It will be unlike anything he has done in the past.

Returns to "U" City After Long Absence

Virginia Valli, Universal's popular star, is working under the banner of her own company again for the first time in almost a year.

She is playing the featured feminine role in "Wives for Rent," in which she co-stars with at O'Malley. Since she completed her featured role in 'Siege" in the early part of 1925, she has been loaned out to other film companies. Her wanderings have taken her to Europe, where she made one picture.

"Wives for Rent" is being directed by Svend Gade, who also made the last Universal production in which Miss Valli appeared.

Cummings Starts Filming "Johnstown Flood" for Fox

WORD comes from the Fox West Coast Studios that "The Johnstown Flood" has been started under the direction of Irving Cummings. As the title indicates, this dramatic production concerns the spectacular happenings of the great disaster.

In 1901, at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, a spectacle of the flood, with stage effects, showed the high points of the catastrophe. It is interesting to note that this show made the most money of any attraction on the Midway. It was bought later by Thompson and Lundy, for Luna Park. At Coney Island "The Johnstown Flood" repeated its financial success. That is a slight indication of what exhibitors may expect when they play the film.

What was only a stage effect in miniature, lasting possibly five minutes in the Exposition spectacle, runs for a half hour or more on the screen, with actual life-size scenes. The advantage of the motion picture over the stage has been utilized to its fullest extent in "The Johnstown Flood." Exhibitors who remember the rushing, roaring flood in the Fox production, "The Town That Forgot God," will be pleasantly astonished at the greater sweep of the deluge in this offering.

The story was written by Edfrid Bingham and the scenario by Robert Lord. The cast is headed by George O'Brien and Florence Gilbert. Others in the cast are Janet Gaynor, Anders Randolf, Paul Nicholson, Paul Panzer, Walter Perry, Georgie Harris, Sid Jordan and Max Davidson.

Exploitation will surely have its inning when such a showman's picture is released next January.

Laemmle Night is Big Success in Los Angeles

Carl Laemmle Night was observed November 21st at the Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, where "The Phantom of the Opera" is having a long run. In addition to the theatre's regular audience, practically all the employees of Universal were in attendance. This number was augmented by stars and stock players.

Before the showing of the picture there were demands for the Universal president. He was forced to mount the stage and respond to the applause of the audience. In addition to Lon Chaney, Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry also were introduced. Up to the present "The Phantom of the Opera" has broken all attendance records at the Rialto.

Finish Big Fox Film

Fox Completes Production of "The Gilded Butterfly"

Fox Films announces that production has been finished on the supreme attraction, "The Gilded Butterfly," directed by John Griffith Wray, who also made "The Winding Stair." The story is by Evelyn Campbell and the scenario by Bradley King.

The production sets forth the folly of following the crowd in social and business life. The care with which this picture was made is indicated in the cast, which is made up of several actors who have recently been stars in their own right. Alma Rubens, now at the high point of her brilliant career, has the feminine lead. Bert Lytell, popular for years, plays opposite Miss Rubens, in the role of an artillery captain. Herbert Rawlinson, Frank Keenan and Huntley Gordon have prominent parts.

The richness of the settings, the fine attention to detail and the excellent photography are noteworthy in this screen offering, which will be released January 3rd.

EVIDENTLY ANSWERING "WHERE WAS I?"—"There you are," says the pointing finger to the question which gives the title for Universal's feature in which Reginald Denny stars.

Hines' "Driverless Car" on Exploitation Trip to 91 Important Cities in Country

IN LINE with C. C. Burr's policy to back up the Johnny Hines First National series with as comprehensive an advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign as possible, this producer has just started the famous "driverless car" on a transcontinental trip that will bring the message of "The Live Wire," "Rainbow Riley," and "The Brown Derby" to ninety-one important cities throughout the country.

Due to the remarkable success which this car met in the Eastern part of the country and also in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, in Canada, where it succeeded in obtaining front page stories and photos concerning Johnny Hines and the calibre of his pictures, Mr. Burr, in conjunction with First National, deemed it advisable to further help the exhibitors of the country by sending this "driverless car" on its transcontinental tour.

Wherever this unique automobile has gone, it has caused comment of a most unusual box-office nature, since the car wends its way in and out of the heaviest traffic with no driver visible at the wheel. This car has been so constructed as to have the entire steering mechanism and driver's seat hidden beneath the cowl. On each of its trips, this bizarre ballyhoo has proved so effective from an exploitation standpoint that many requests from exhibitors throughout the country have been pouring into the C. C. Burr office daily for an appearance of the "driverless car" in their particular cities. So many were these demands, that Mr. Burr routed the car directly across the country in order that exhibitors everywhere who have booked "The Live Wire," "Rainbow Riley" and "The Brown Derby" may profit by the publicity.

The car is under the guidance of M. A. Lafayette, who has driven it for upwards of 100,000 miles during the past year. He left for Wilmington, Delaware, as the first leg on its journey. The cities in which the "driverless car" will appear and remain for a period of from three to six days are as follows: Wilmington, Del.; Fredericksburg, Richmond, Newport News, Norfolk, Va.; Henderson, Durham, Raleigh, Winston-Salem, Charlotte, Asheville, N. C.; Spartanburg, Columbia, Charleston, S. C.; Augusta, Savannah, Macon, Atlanta, Ga.; Knoxville, Chattanooga, Nashville, Tenn.; Florence, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile, Ala.; New Orleans, Monroe, Shreveport, La.; Natchez, Jackson, Vicksburg, Miss.; Beaumont, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Waco, Ft. Worth, Dallas, Wichita Falls, Texas; Chickasha, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Bartlesville, Okla.; Wichita, Hutchinson, Dodge City, Kan.; La Junta, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Denver, Loveland, Colo.; Cheyenne, Wyo.; Salt Lake City, Ogden, Utah; Pocatello, Idaho Falls, Boise, Nampa, Lewiston, Idaho; Baker, Pendleton, Portland, Salem, Corvallis, Eugene, Marshfield, Grants Pass, Ore.; Walla Walla, Spokane, Wenatchee, Seattle, Tacoma, Olympia, Wash.; Redding, Chico, Marysville, Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, San Francisco, San Jose, Santa Cruz, Madera, Fresno, Visalia, Porterville, Bakersfield, Los Angeles, Santa Ana, San Diego, Calif.

Arrangements have been made whereby advance and current stories concerning the car and its mission are being sent daily by Dave Weshner of C. C. Burr's office to both newspapers and exhibitors in each key city visited by the car. According to the route planned and the comprehensive tie-ups effected, it is expected that the "driverless car" will spend a complete year on its itinerary.

CAN YOU PINCH A CAR—for driving without a driver?—that's going to worry the cops in the ninety-two cities that Johnny Hines and M. A. Lafayette will hit with the driverless car, putting Johnny over for C. C. Burr's First National "pepsters."

To Co-Star in "Wives for Rent"

Pat O'Malley will be co-starred with Virginia Valli in "Wives for Rent," a Universal Jewel production now under way at Universal City. Considerable difficulty was experienced by Svend Gade, who will direct the picture, in finding a suitable actor to play opposite Miss Valli. Several prominent players were considered but O'Malley's finished work as the Grand Duke Sergius in "The Midnight Sun," convinced Gade that Pat was the man he wanted.

"Wives for Rent" is after a novel by Goesta Segercrantz. It was Americanized and adapted to the screen by Charles Whittaker and Gade. It is a domestic comedy drama containing a new and startling idea.

"His Secretary" Is Title of Norma Shearer's New Play

"His Secretary" has finally been decided upon as the name under which Norma Shearer's new starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer heretofore known under the working title of "Free Lips," is to reach the screen. Hobart Henley is director of this production, in which Lew Cody has the leading male role. The picture is said to contain without question Miss Shearer's finest work. Studios officials predict that "His Secretary" will exceed in popularity even the remarkably successful "A Slave of Fashion," also directed by Henley and based on a Samuel Shipman story adapted to the screen by Bess Meredyth.

"His Secretary" is based on an original story by Carey Wilson, scenarized by Louis Leighton and Hope Loring. The picture boasts a distinguished cast, including Willard Louis, Karl Dane, Estelle Clark, Gwen Lee, Mabel Van Beuren and others.

Carewe Signs Dolores Del Rio and His Daughter Yvonne

As a result of the excellent work they did in "Joanna," Edwin Carewe, the First National producer-director, who has just returned to the Coast after a brief stay in New York, announces the signing of Dolores del Rio and Yvonne Carewe, his own daughter, on three-year contracts with a two-year option clause.

Mr. Carewe discovered Dolores del Rio, a a society woman of Mexico, during a tour of that country and offered her a chance to test her screen possibilities in "Joanna." Her work, according to an announcement, was so conspicuously good that she was offered and signed the contract to appear hereafter on Carewe-made productions.

Metro Can Be Proud of Achievement As "The Big Parade" Opens At Astor

A MOST enthusiastic audience greetedit in reproducing the heart-breaking realities the premiere of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Big Parade" at the Astor Theatre last Thursday evening, November 19. John Gilbert is starred in this Laurence Stallings story. Metropolitan newspaper critics, every one of them, acknowledged "The Big Parade" to be one, of the greatest motion pictures ever produced anywhere at any time. Players, directors, executives, people thoroughly familiar with the production of pictures and tricks of the camera, sobbed audibly one moment, cheered wildly the next and laughed boisterously a moment later.

The premiere at the Astor Theatre ran as smoothly as clockwork. It was not until the Sunday previous that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company took over the theatre. Within the space of four and one half days experts of Loew's, Inc., and the M-G-M organization had completely redecorated the house from top to bottom, installed new seats, carpets, lighting fixtures and so changed the interior of the theatre that the former lessee did not recognize it when he came to witness "The Big Parade." At the same time the lobby was entirely redecorated, new signs placed on the marquee and one of the largest flash signs ever erected on Broadway put up. Four and a half days to completely refurnish, light and redecorate a theatre probably in itself constitutes a record.

A brilliant first night audience attended the premiere of "The Big Parade." John Gilbert, who had come East for the opening, headed a large delegation of well known stars who were in evidence. Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Mae Murray, Lewis Stone, Elsie de Wolf, Alice Joyce, Hope Hampton, Fannie Ward, Anna Q. Nilsson, Richard Barthelmess, Ruby de Remer, were among the stars present.

Other well known personages of the theatrical world who attended included Lee Shubert, E. F. Albee, David Warfield, the author Laurence Stallings, Jules Brulatour, Henry King, Sydney Olcott, Tom Terriss, Edgar Selwyn, Jessie Lasky, Samuel Goldwyn, Messmore Kendall, Harold Franklin, Jules Murray and the following Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew's, Inc., officials and executives: Marcus Loew, Arthur Loew, David Loew, Major Edward Bowes, David Bernstein, Leopold Friedman, J. T. Mills, Charles C. Moskowitz, Charles K. Stern, Felix Feist, Edward M. Saunders, Edward Schiller, M. H. Meinhold, Charles J. Sonin, Howard Dietz, Joe Vogel, Paul Burger and Col. J. E. Brady.

Excerpts from the remarkable reviews in the New York dailies follow:

"'The Big Parade,' with its orchestration, is by all odds the most stirring of all motion pictures which I have seen," writes Quinn Martin in the New York World. "There has been nothing out of the World War acted either on stage or screen to approach of the battlefields; the sacrifice; the glorious valor of muddy soldiers moving bravely on to death; little moments of happiness while the heavens burst in flames; the fine, stout thread of romance which wove itself into the pattern of the conflict as American soldiers hailed and said farewell to their Frenchies. In this picture you see the spit of the fire of the German machine gun, the horror of its accuracy, the desolation that comes of its monotonous song. You see it all. And written so expertly, directed so understandingly, and acted with such brilliance is the story of love which runs through it that it is safe to assume no drama drawn from the experience of American soldiers in the war could be expected to burn so white in the excitement of its telling.

"But 'The Big Parade,' grim and terrifying as it becomes in its swiftest moments, is then again comedy of the lightest, brittlest stripe. I think the hefty bartender, Bull, and the riveting expert, Slim, who enlist with Jim and carry on as his buddies until they fall in No Man's Land, are two of the most delightful persons ever placed upon a screen. The work of Renee Adoree, as Melisande, is a revelation. Miss Adoree is an extremely talented young woman. Of the performance given by John Gilbert it is only proper to remark that I know of no one who could have done better. It is a picture play of surpassing loveliness. I cannot quite find the word to do it justice."

"Such direction, such writing, such acting, such titles!" exclaims Harriet Underhill in the New York Herald Tribune. "It isn't possible to describe this perfect thing, for 'The Big Parade' is just a series of scenes so alluring in their reality that one feels inclined to break into cheers. There is a charming love story and the biggest scene in the picture comes when the lovers are torn apart by the vicissitudes of war. It was one of the most thrilling things we ever sat through. This is undoubtedly the finest picture of the war that ever has been made."

"Something Gargantuan leaped into the Astor Theatre last evening," reports Frank Vreeland in the New York Telegram, "when the war came alive again for the sake of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, 'The Big Parade,' and raked the screen fore and aft. It was such a formidable frontal attack on the feelings of the spectator that for once the applause of the usual hysterical first night audience was smothered at times as they sat silent, lost in honest enthrallment. It was at the end that the hallelujahs burst forth like bombs."

"'The Big Parade' is splendid," remarks Palmer Smith in the New York Evening World. "It moves with the power and sweep of a tide and has a grip like the undertow. It is one of those rare achievements in picture making that is all good and grows progressively better with each reel. 'The Big Parade' is infinitely more than a war play. It deals with humanity in war, the bitter and the sweet, the fineness and the hellishness, the friendliness and the hate. It is utterly free from sentimentalism and hokum, but full of sentiment."

"The motion picture of the war, 'The Big Parade,' opened at the Astor Theatre last night," testifies Rose Pelswick in the New York Evening Journal. "Wonderful, remarkable, extraordinary, thrilling — superlatives that have been used so often in connection with other pictures can hardly do justice to it. War scenes have been done before, but they were futile compared to these. There is comedy and there is pathos—you live with the characters, you suffer with them, you laugh with them—and you love them."

IMAGINE YOUR THEATRE NAME in place of "Astor"—the crowd and the title of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's vast panorama of human emotions can stand as they are—the opening day of the run.

ALONG THE LINE OF MARCH OF "THE BIG PARADE"

Humor, pathos, drama, tragedy—all the emotions of human life lived by human people—that's the line of march that takes Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's overwhelming story straight to its destination—a responsive throb in every human heart.

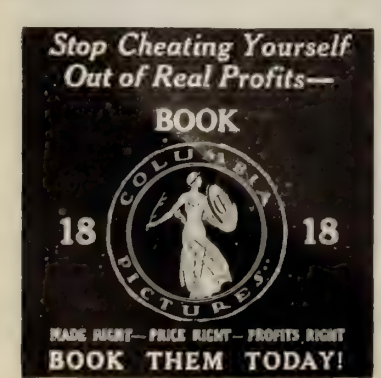
"The huge crowd was fairly electric with enthusiasm," testifies Regina Cannon in the New York Evening Graphic, "and when the last of the twelve reels was run off they voiced their approval and appreciation with longer and louder applause than has greeted a cinema spectacle in many a movie moon. The story is so human that it hurts. It contains grim tragedy, sparkling comedy, deep pathos, and a realism that has never before been translated so successfully to the screen. Words fail us when we speak of John Gilbert's performance. Mr. Gilbert surpasses himself as the hero of this World War Drama. The naturalness with which John Gilbert comports himself on the screen is something to be marveled at. His characterization in 'The Big Parade' is the finest we've ever seen in motion pictures."

"'The Big Parade' passed before a notable audience at the Astor last night," observes Norbert Lusk in the New York Morning Telegraph, "and left laugher and tears and thrills in its wake. Laurence Stallings' chronicle of the war has been translated into terms of the screen by King Vidor and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and the result is such as to make the spectator forget virtually every war scene ever filmed before. The story is crowded with comic and dramatic and touching moments, rich in characterization, packed with incident and large movement. As nearly as could be judged in the excitement of a first-night audience, 'The Big Parade' will duplicate its effort wherever shown and should crowd the Astor for months to come. It is one of those fine achievements of the screen which no one can afford not to see and to talk about."

"An eloquent pictorial epic of the World War was presented last night at the Astor Theatre," says Mordaunt Hall in the New York Times, "before a sophisticated gathering that was intermittently stirred to laughter and tears. This powerful photo-drama is entitled 'The Big Parade.' It is a subject so compelling and realistic that one feels impelled to approach a review of it with all the respect it deserves, for as a motion picture it is something beyond the fondest dreams of most people. The thunderous belching of guns follows on the heels of a delightful romance between a Yankee doughboy and a fascinating French farm girl. There are humor, sadness and love, and the suspense is maintained so well that blasé men last night actually were hoping that a German machine gun would not 'get' one of the three buddies in this story. The battle scenes excel anything that has been pictured on the screen, and Mr. Vidor and his assistants have ever seen fit to have the atmospheric effects as true as possible. This is a pictorial effort of which the screen can well boast."

"Miracle of miracles—the perfect picture has arrived!" writes Mildred Spain in the New York Daily News. "'The Big Parade' is the best picture that has ever been made. It is the justification of the moving picture industry. 'The Big Parade' gets you, hammers down your defenses and then, miraculously, leaves you with the glow of idealism."

"'The Big Parade' is a tale of the war such as no one before has had the courage to relate," declares Martin B. Dickstein in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. "The performances of the principals are true portrayals of honest types, vivid, sincere, convincing, charming in their utter naturalness. No finer exhibition of play-acting is to be seen on any screen in the film theatre. It is unquestionably one of the most outstanding pieces of cinematics which have come along in a decade. And as such it merits your early attendance."



Production Plans at M.-G.-M. Studios Call for Record Winter Activities, Says Mayer

PRODUCTION plans for the final quota of pictures to be filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the 1925-26 season forecast record winter activities at the Culver City studios, announces Louis B. Mayer, executive in chief for M-G-M.

Among the most important pictures to be filmed, commencing within the next few weeks, is Marion Davies' next starring vehicle, "Beverly of Graustark," a Cosmopolitan production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer based on George Barr McCutcheon's famous mythical kingdom story, which has been read and loved as a popular novel by millions of people throughout the world. Antonio Moreno has the leading male role.

The story lends itself admirably to Miss Davies' wide range of histrionic ability and offers a pictorial background and elegance of settings seldom found in a piece of fiction of such delightful character. The Cosmopolitan star will be directed by Sidney Franklin, who has been loaned to M-G-M by Joseph M. Schenck, and who has directed many of the finest photoplays of Norma and Constance Talmadge.

Another production which is expected to attract considerable attention will be "The Light Eternal," which will mark Benjamin Christianson's American debut as a director. This picture is scheduled to start within the next two weeks with Norma Shearer as the bright and particular star.

The story is an original by Christianson who has won an enviable reputation in Denmark, Sweden and Germany as author, director and actor. The tale is modern, opening just prior to the World War and closing some few months after the termination of hostilities. The story centers about the activities of the underworld with an emphatic proportion of heart interest.

One of the greatest productions of the winter producing schedule, "Bardelys the Magnificent," falls to the lot of King Vidor, who has made two of the greatest pictures in the history of the screen—"The Big Parade," the Laurence Stallings story starring John Gilbert and adapted by Harry Behn, and "La Boheme," starring Lillian Gish, the latter still in the making with Miss Gish and Gilbert making their first film appearance together. "La Boheme" has been adapted by Mme. Fred Degresac from the Henri Murger narrative, "The Latin Quarter," and scenarized by Harry Behn. "Bardelys the Magnificent" is to be done almost entirely in technicolor and John Gilbert will be starred in the leading role. Dorothy Farnum has scenarized this Sabatini story.

Jack Conway is to direct another big picture, "Brown of Harvard," which is to be filmed at Harvard University, in Massachusetts. It will be an intimate story of American college life based on the famous stage play by Rida Johnson Young which, almost two decades ago, was one of the most successful of American plays.

"Paris," an original story by Carey Wilson, is to be directed by Paul Bern as his initial M-G-M directorial effort and the cast will include Charles Ray as the hero and Eleanor Boardman in the featured feminine role. The story is to have a setting of elegance and luxury unequalled on the screen, and will include a number of ballet creations and a great number of startling costumes.

Among the M-G-M pictures on which production is now nearing completion are "Dance Madness," the S. Jay Kaufman story adapted by Federico Sagar and directed by Robert Z. Leonard with Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor in the leading roles; Elinor Glyn's "The Reason Why," directed by Jack Conway from the screen adaptation made by Carey Wilson and featuring Aileen Pringle and Edmund Lowe; "His Secretary," starring Norma Shearer and directed by Hobart Henley from the Carey Wilson story adapted by Louis Leighton and Hope Loring; "The Barrier," adapted from Rex Beach's famous novel by Harvey Gates and directed by George Hill with an all-star cast including Norman Kerry, Lionel Barrymore, Henry B. Walthall and Marceline Day, and "Sally, Irene and Mary," the Edward Dowling stage success adapted to the screen by Louis Leighton and Hope Loring and directed by Edmund Goulding, with Constance Bennett, Joan Crawford and Sally O'Neil featured.

"Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea), a Rex Ingram production for Metro-Goldwyn featuring Antonio Moreno and Alice Terry, and adapted by Willis Goldbeck from the Blasco Ibanez novel, is now being cut and titled by Director Ingram abroad.

And finally there is "Ben Hur," which is expected to be the greatest motion picture ever produced. Directed by Fred Niblo with Ramon Novarro in the title role, and played by a notable cast, this mammoth picturization of the Lew Wallace play and novel is scheduled to hold its world premiere in New York on Christmas Eve. The story has been adapted to the screen by June Mathis and is being produced by arrangement with A. L. Erlanger.

To Direct "Second Chance"

John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production activities for First National, has selected Lambert Hillyer to handle the directorial responsibilities of "Second Chance."

Hillyer recently returned to the Pacific Coast after a successful directorial season with First National in the East. Production on the picture will be started at an early date.

NOT EVEN A DIAMOND NECKLACE CAN MASK THIS BRIDE

In her forthcoming picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, directed by Christy Cabanne, Mae Murray wears a diamond necklace with ninety perfectly cut gems, composing the only violet phosphorescent necklace in existence. (We are informed that this bauble is insured for $300,000, and, while Miss Murray sports it about the set, she is guarded by ten armed men.) The picture is "The Masked Bride."

Eleven Companies at Work On Big F. B. O. Productions

EARLY winter finds the F. B. O. lot buzzing merrily with many companies at work.

James Hogan is off in a cloud of dust, so to speak, with "King of the Turf," a racing melodrama from the joint pens of Louis Joseph Vance, the novelist, and John C. Brownell, home office scenario head of F. B. O. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the script. The principals will be Kenneth Harlan, Dolores Costello and Henry B. Walthall.

Harmon Weight is cutting and editing his oil field melodrama "Flaming Waters," produced for F. B. O. by Associated Arts Corporation, to whose credit goes also "Drusilla With a Million," F. B. O.'s outstanding hit of the year. Mary Carr, Pauline Garon and Malcolm M'Gregor are featured in the new production.

"The Midnight Flyer," a railroad melodrama also is in the hands of the F. B. O. editors. It was adapted by J. Grubb Alexander and directed by Tom Forman with Dorothy Devore and Cullen Landis featured.

Emory Johnson will shortly launch "The Non-Stop Flight," a dramatization of the recent naval air flight to Hawaii. It will have an all-star cast and be Mr. Johnson's most ambitious effort to date.

Evelyn Brent has just completed "A Broadway Lady," by Fred Kennedy Myton, and will start work next week on "Bright Lights," by the same writer.

Fred Thomson is preparing his next.

Dick Talmadge is at work on "So This is Mexico," (tentative) a melodramatic comedy.

Maurice (Lefty) Flynn is preparing a football drama after completing "Smilin' at Trouble." Flynn, be it known, was a gridiron hero at Yale and the most popular player in the collegiate world a decade ago. Harry Garson will film this story.

Tom Tyler is shooting exterior scenes for "The Cowboy Musketeer" with Bob De Lacy handling the megaphone.

Bob Custer has finished "The Ridin' Streak" and is filming fight scenes for "The News Buster," in which he plays the role of a cowboy reporter. Del Andrews is directing.

Alberta Vaughn, Larry Kent, Kit Guard and Al Cooke are working on Episode Nine of "The Mazie" series with Ralph Cedar directing.

Attractive Press Book on Keaton's "Go West" Ready

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's book on Buster Keaton's "Go West" is out, and contains an array of exceedingly useful and attractive information, including every imaginable suggestion of worth to the exhibitor in arousing the interest of his public.

The booklet, printed in window card size, contains, suggested posters, accessories, production and feature stories, advance and review stories, catchlines, ads and slugs, news paragraphs, lobby cards, heralds, throwaways, biographies of the star and of the cast and exploitation material in abundance, including new suggestions as to tie-ups and contests of a decidedly practical and worthwhile nature. The "Go West" press book is among the liveliest and valuable ever issued.

"Go West" is a Joseph M. Schenck presentation for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer written, adapted and directed by Buster Keaton himself.

Advance Reports Show Big Grosses on "Merry Widow"

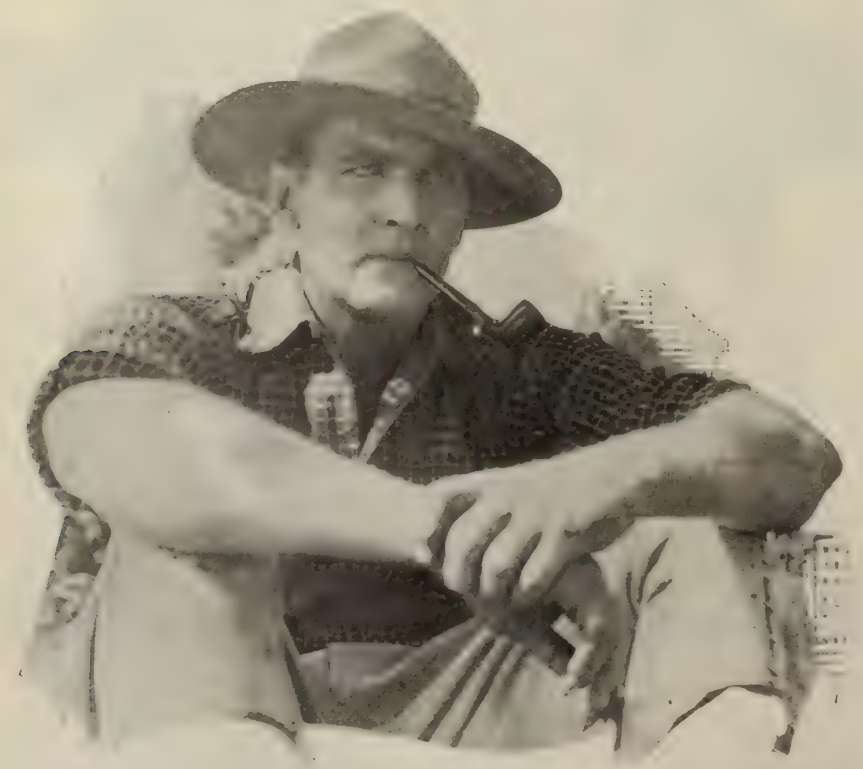
ADVANCE reports of big grosses being rolled up by preview showings of Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow," starring Mae Murray and John Gilbert, are pouring into Metro-Goldwyn's offices from enthusiastic exhibitors. Small towns and large are greeting this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production with the same unequalled applause and enthusiasm which the film aroused at its Chicago premiere at the Roosevelt Theatre, where it is in its fifth big week, and in New York at Gloria Gould's Embassy, where it has been playing since opening in August.

"Von Stroheim's 'The Merry Widow' opened at my Paris Theatre yesterday," wires Don Nichols, Manager of the Durham Amusement Company in Charlotte, N. C., "with the weather man against it. We had the worst weather we have had this year. In the face of this we had to use the S. R. O. Today with weather not much better we topped the opening day. All the flowery things Gloria Gould has said of 'The Merry Widow' does not tell the half of it. Congratulations to you and to the 'Widow.'"

A wire from Metro-Goldwyn's exchange in Cleveland, O., reports that the film has been held over a second week at the Valentine Theatre in Toledo and also at the Allen Theatre in Akron. Also that on opening at the Stillman in Cleveland the picture has equalled the house record and is building daily, and that the film has been held over at the Grand Opera House in Canton, O.

Another wire, from M-G's Oklahoma Exchange, reports that the film is being held over for a second week at the Sun Theatre in Omaha, Neb.

Variety, theatrical trade sheet, heads its report on the financial returns being registered in Chicago for the week with the statement that "The Merry Widow" alone among pictures in the Windy City showed life in the box-office, and continued to draw capacity audiences to the Roosevelt Theatre. These reports on pre-view showings foreshadow unequalled success for the film throughout the country.



ONE OF THE BIGGEST MEN IN PICTURES (and that goes in more ways than one) is Maurice B. ("Lefty") Flynn, the F. B. O. star, seen here in the character he portrays in "Smilin' at Trouble," shortly to be released.

"Fifth Avenue" Completed

The filming of "Fifth Avenue," Robert G. Vignola's production, which has been in the making by A. H. Sebastian for many weeks, ended in a veritable blaze of glory, when final scenes for the picture were taken among the hills of Westwood.

The setting represented a row of shacks forming the colored quarters on a southern plantation, and the entire scene for a quarter of a mile was illuminated with great searchlights.

The principal actors were two score negroes, who entertained the large crowd of sightseers, as well as themselves, by putting on a rousing series of dances in the light of a great campfire.

Changes in M-G-M Sales Staff

A number of changes in the administration of Metro-Goldwyn's exchanges is announced by the New York offices of the organization, effective November 16.

Samuel Eckman, Jr., has taken over the supervision of the Boston and New Haven offices in conjunction with his present supervision of the New York, Albany and Buffalo offices.

George A. Hickey has assumed supervision of the Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh and Charlotte offices, and Felix Mendelssohn has been placed in charge of special work for the home office sales department.

Blackton Will Make Four a Year for Warner Bros.

WARNER BROS. and J. Stuart Blackton have completed final arrangements whereby Blackton will make four pictures a year for release by the former organization.

The first Blackton production on the current Warner schedule will make its appearance at about the beginning of the coming year. This is "The Bride of the Storm," adapted from James Francis Dwyer's story, "Maryland, My Maryland." Dolores Costello and John Harron have the featured roles, and the strong supporting cast includes Otto Mattieson, Sheldon Lewis, Tyrone Power and Julia Swayne Gordon.

This is the second picture Blackton has made for Warner Bros., but, because of arrangements previously made for the release of other features, it is to make its public appearance first.

Jack Warner and Bennie Zeidman, Warner West Coast studio executives, in particular feel that in his acquisition they gained a valuable asset to the organization.

Dates Set for Pro-Dis-Co. Releases Through February

PRODUCTION activities at the De Mille, Metropolitan and Christie studios have now progressed to the point where Producers Distributing Corporation has set positive release dates for all pictures to be released during the current season which ends February 1st.

The release schedule as now definitely arranged, shows that Producers Distributing Corporation will release a variety of subjects of particularly wide range and a list of titles that embrace the best works of the most popular and famous authors and playwrights and the best known screen writers and scenarists.

During November four features will be released; these include Cecil De Mille's personally directed production "The Road to Yesterday," Frances Marion's "Simon the Jester," Metropolitan's "The People Vs. Nancy Preston" and "The Wedding Song" starring Leatrice Joy; directed by Alan Hale at the De Mille Studio.

"Madam Behave" the Al. Christie feature will be released on December 6., "The Man From Red Gulch" on December 13, and "Three Faces East," the Rupert Julian production with an all star cast on December 27.

The January releases include: "Steel Preferred" featuring William Boyd, Vera Reynolds and Charlie Murray on the 3, "Rocking Moon" with John Bowers and Lilyan Tashman on the 10, "Braveheart" starring Rod La Rocque on the 17., "Fifth Avenue" with Marguerite De La Motte on the 24, and "The Danger Girl" the first Priscilla Dean picture from Metropolitan will be released on January 31.

Beaudine to Direct Classic for Warners

William Beaudine will direct a screen classic for Warner Bros. as his next contribution to the year's program of this firm. One of the most lavish and costly productions ever turned out under the Warner banner is to be entrusted to the director who but recently concluded the filming of two pictures for Mary Pickford. This announcement comes as a tribute to Beaudine because of his exceptional work during the past year, according to Jack Warner and his associates. More details as to the nature of the production the elongated megaphone wielder will next film, will be forthcoming shortly.

Finishes "American Venus"

Many Prominent Players in Cast of Big Frank Tuttle Production for Paramount

Frank Tuttle has completed his biggest Paramount production to date. "The American Venus," begun in Atlantic City during the September beauty pageant which culminated in the award of the "Miss America" title to Fay Lanphier, was finished recently at a swimming hole near Ocala, Fla.

Esther Ralston, Ford Sterling, Lawrence Gray and "Miss America" head a cast which includes a list of notable players. They are Louise Broks, Follies dancer, who has been given a long-term contract with Paramount; Edna May Oliver of the stage comedy hit, "The Cradle-Snatchers;" Kenneth MacKenna, William B. Mack and W. T. Benda, prominent painter and original actor of the "Benda masks." Ernest Torrence and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who as guests of Atlantic City and hosts to the 80 inter-city bathing beauties entered in the contest, played King Neptune and his son Triton during the carnival, also are in the picture. Seven of the leading contestants in the pageant were given minor roles.

Many scenes are photographed by the Technicolor process, among them an elaborate fashion show and a series of artistic tableaux presented by 20 beautiful girls.

Assisting Frank Tuttle was Russell Matthews.

LAURA LA PLANTE IN A NEW POSE. This beautiful Universal-Jewel star has her first dramatic role in Olga, chief ballet dancer of the Russian Imperial Opera Ballet, in "The Midnight Sun," Universal's next super-production, being directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki, the noted European director. Laura is seen here as a slave girl in one of the elaborate opera sequences. The production is scheduled for early release.

THOMAS MEIGHAN paid a visit to the Dolly sisters at their home in Maidenhead-on-Thames, during his recent visit to the British Isles. The Paramount star made part of his forthcoming production, "Irish Luck," in Ireland. The girl seen here with Tom is Rozika Dolly, one of the jolly sisters now playing a long theatrical engagement in London.

We have evolved an organization of the producing department which gives us the producing brains of some of the ablest showmen in the picture business, and our reorganization makes it possible to give even greater individual attention to each production."

Made Story Dep't. Manager

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has just announced that Maude Kirk Miller, who for several years has served in the editorial department of the company, has been appointed manager of the story department. New Blackton Picture

Deep Human Appeal is Seen in Warners' "Gilded Highway"

An intensely human document, finely presented, was the characterization given "The Gilded Highway" by officials and executives of Warner Bros., after viewing the first print this week. "The Gilded Highway" is a J. Stuart Blackton production, adapted from W. B. Maxwell's moving tale, "A Little More."

The story of a family that suddenly acquires wealth without earning it, only to see the supposed good fortune slip away, it plays upon the pride, the yearnings and the jealousies of every-day folk and presents a logical commingling of humor, pathos and heart appeal.

John Harron and Dorothy Devore have the leading roles. Florence Turner, one of the earliest stars of the screen, has an appropriate part, while other important roles are filled by Myrna Loy, the new Warner "vamp"; Macklyn Arbuckle, Andre Tourneur, Sheldon Lewis, Tom Mills, Gardner James and Mathilde Comont. Marian Constance was the author of the scenario.

Cast of "Far Cry" Complete

Four Prominent Players Have Been Added to Big First National Production

The cast of First National's "The Far Cry" is complete. Four names, all prominent in the land where pictures are made, have just been announced from the First National offices as the last of the important players to be cast. These are Julia Swayne Gordon, who will play Claire's (Blanche Sweet's) mother; William Austin, who is engaged to essay Eric Lascerfield; Dorothy Revier, 1925 Baby Star of the Wampus, who will play Yvonne Beaudet, and Mathilde Comont engaged for Margaretta.

"The Far Cry" is Balboni's initial effort for First National and is being made under the supervision of June Mathis. Blanche Sweet plays the leading feminine role with Jack Mulhall opposite. Other important members of the cast include Hobart Bosworth, Leo White, Myrtle Stedman, and John Sainpolis.

"U" Gets "Les Miserables"

Carl Laemmle Obtains American and British Rights to Photodrama of Victor Hugo's Greatest Masterpiece

Carl Laemmle has purchased the rights for the United States, Canada, Great Britain and other territories, of the negative of "Les Miserables," recently produced in France. Probably the most famous of Victor Hugo's thrilling romances, "Les Miserables" will be the third of this great masters works being handled by Universal. Mr. Laemmle's big success with "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," was followed first by his acquisition of the screen rights of "The Man Who Laughs," and now, by the distribution rights of "Les Miserables."

Continental authorities have appraised the current film version of "Les Miserables" as "one of the most valuable, outstanding productions of modern times," according to E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal. The picture was produced by Les Films de France, a subsidiary of La Societe des Cineromans, under the direction of Henri Fescourt.

Sandra Milovanoff, the noted Russian stage and screen star, enacts the role of Fantine, while Gabriel Gabrio, one of the most brilliant of Continental artists, is cast as Jean Valjean.

Title of Mrs. Valentino's F. B. O. Picture Temporary

F. B. O. announces that "Do Clothes Make the Woman?" the title of the Gold Bond production starring Mrs. Rudolph Valentino (Natacha Rambova) is temporary. Announcement of the new title will be made as soon as a more fitting name for the picture is selected.

The entire unit, consisting of Mrs. Valentino, Clive Brook, leading man, Sam Hardy, heavy; Kathlene Martin and Johnnie Gough, is at work at the Tec-Art Studios in West 44th Street, New York, concluding interiors. Daniel Carson Goodman is personally supervising the production, while Harry O. Hoyt is directing with Jack Hyland acting as assistant director.

CHARLES RAY

Having completed his work in "Bright Lights," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has signed a long contract with Louis B. Mayer to remain in M.-G.-M. galaxy of stars.

HERE THEY ARE — Conway Tearle and Agnes Ayres — the way you'll see them in the Tiffany production, "Morals for Men," in which they are featured.

F. B. O. at Work on 4 Gold Bond Specials for Current Program

At least four more big productions will be produced by F. B. O. before the current program is completed, it was announced by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the company in charge of production.

This work, in addition to filming at least fifteen star series features with Fred Thomson, Evelyn Brent, Dick Talmadge, Lefty Flynn, Tom Tyler and Bob Custer, will keep the big F. B. O. plant functioning at full blast for some time to come, it is stated.

Still another important addition to the season's program is being produced in New York City by F. B. O. with Mrs. Rudolph Valentino in the leading role. It is called temporarily "Do Clothes Make the Woman?" This title will be changed as soon as a more fitting name is selected. Harry O. Hoyt is directing, Daniel Carson Goodman is personally supervising the production and Olive Brook is featured in support of the star.

The first of the remaining big features to go into production at the coast studios is "The King of the Turf," a racing melodrama by Joseph Louis Vance and John C. Brownell, home office scenario head of F. B. O. James Hogan has been engaged to direct and casting has already begun.

Emory Johnson, F. B. O. producer-director, who has just completed "The Last Edition," will shortly begin work on a film dealing with aviation which bids to be one of F. B. O.'s outstanding attractions of the year. It will dramatize the recent non-stop flight of the navy to Hawaii.

Laura Jean Libby's "A Poor Girl's Romance" also has a place on the schedule. This will be filmed shortly after the first of the year and will be a modern romantic drama. The story was one of the most popular that came from the pen of the late Mrs. Libby whose readers were numbered by millions two decades ago.

The fourth feature to be made will be "The Isle of Retribution," a novel by Edeson Marshall, which has run into many editions.

Recent Gold Bond specials completed by F. B. O. and shortly to be released are "The Midnight Flyer," directed by Tom Forman and co-starring Dorothy Devore and Cullen Landis and "Flaming Waters," featuring Mary Carr, Pauline Garon and Malcolm M'Gregor, which Harmon Weight directed.

Begins "Dancing Mothers"

Herbert Brenon has begun production of "Dancing Mothers" at the Paramount Long Island studio. The story is an adaptation by Forrest Halsey of the stage success of that name by Edgar Selwyn and Edward Goulding. The cast includes Alice Joyce, Conway Tearle, Clara Bow and Donald Keith.

HIS PEOPLE—Universal

A MARVELOUS picture dealing with the simple happenings from the everyday life of the Ghetto folks. The story is filled with the human interest stuff that is appreciated by so many fans. The Comisky family is no different than a goodly number of families now living on the East Side today. Many have the same high ideals as the father, a Russian immigrant. Realism is the keynote throughout the picture and never does it become stagey.

The production ranks high in quality, which speaks for the masterly direction of Edward Sloman.

The cast, consisting of Rudolph Schildkraut, Gordon Lewis, Blanche Mehaffey and Kate Price, is excellent. Schildkraut, as the father, gives one of the most impressive performances seen on the screen this year.

Sax Has Production Plans for Next Season

SAM SAX of Gotham Production and Lumas Film Corporation returned to New York last week after a flying trip to Los Angeles and prepared to set the machinery going on production plans for the season of 1926-27.

His trip to the coast accomplished two important things. First the start of the last four productions to be released on this year's schedule. Camera work on the first of this four will begin the day after Thanksgiving, the subject being, "The Speed Limit." The complete cast of this subject to be announced shortly. Following, there will be made in the order named, "Hearts and Spangles," a circus story; "Racing Blood," a new angle on a racing picture and finally, Thunder, the marvel dog, in "The Sign of the Claw," the first "dog story" with the entire action taking place in a large city and minus the old familiar back woods locations.

Upon being questioned as to next season's activities for his organization, Mr. Sax said, in part: "Although the basic foundation of my next year's line-up has been formulated for, I feel it is a little too early for business reasons to announce exact details. I will say this, however, that for 1926-27 Lumas Film Corporation will be in a position to supply the entire needs of an exchange as far as feature photoplay material is concerned.

"We will produce a diversity of subjects such as to suit the requirements of any type of exhibitor. This does not necessarily imply a great volume of subjects, merely a matter of selective grouping and careful classification.

"We are constantly improving both our production and distribution facilities and it is our intention to make each picture a little better than the predecessor. The kind of subjects released by us are the result of a careful canvassing of both the distribution and exhibition branches of the industry and our exact line-up will contain a great many elements of surprise in it."

The present program of 12 Gothams will be completed and ready for delivery well in advance of previously announced release dates it is stated from the New York office of Lumas Film Corporation.

London Society to Revive Warner Pictures

"THE MARRIAGE CIRCLE," starring Monte Blue and Marie Prevost, the Ernst Lubitsch production released on the Warner Bros. 1923-24 schedule, is one of five films so far selected by the Film Society of London for Sunday revivals in that city. This organization purposes to present to the British public the best screen offerings of the past, in addition to newer European photoplays which the English picture theatres have let pass by.

The International Film Guild has recently been formed in New York, intending to follow the lead of the London society, as far as revivals are concerned. Attractions which it intends to revive are those which have attained "a definite aesthetic standard."

John S. Cohen, Jr., motion picture editor of the New York Sun, published a few days ago a brief list of attractions whose revival he requested by the Guild. In this last also a Warner-Lubitsch production was included, "Kiss Me Again," in which, too, Monte Blue and Marie Prevost had the leading roles.

In the same issue of the Sun appeared a letter from J. Hyatt Proper, a fan, submitting "ten pictures of the past which ought to make very interesting screen entertainment if revived by the Screen Arts Guild." Of these, two mere Warner Bros. triumphs, John Barrymore in "Beau Brummel" and "The Marriage Circle" again.

Trevor in "Dancing Mothers"

Norman Trevor, who is playing on the New York stage in "Young Blood," has been added to the cast of "Dancing Mothers," which Herbert Brenon is producing at the Paramount Long Island studio. His last picture was "The Song and Dance Man," also under the direction of Mr. Brenon.

Others in the cast of "Dancing Mothers" are Alice Joyce, Conway Tearle, Clara Bow, Donald Keith, Dorothy Cumming, and Elsie Lawson.

Arlen Added to Cast

Richard Arlen has been added to the cast of "Behind the Front," it has been announced at the Lasky studio. "Behind the Front," a comedy of the A. E. F., features Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton and Mary Brian. Edward Sutherland is directing the picture.

Balsdon Joins Vital

George A. Balsdon, for ten years assistant general manager for Vitagraph, has joined Vital Exchanges, Inc., as home office representative and starts immediately on a tour to all Vital exchanges. He will begin with a trip to Canada.

WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES—Universal
MORAL "Girls never marry a man from out-of-town unless you go out of town to marry him."
William A. Seiter has taken the famous stage production and turned it into one of the funniest laugh-producers. Aside from the comedy viewpoint he has succeeded in keeping a suspense element throughout the picture which is rarely found in comedies. So much so that one wonders just how things will turn out
Reginald Denny, as usual, handles his rôle with an evenness and originality that marks him a true blue comedian He and Otis Harlan do a Syd Chaplin stunt that is a perfect riot Three guesses? Marion Nixon is a charming heroine and Zasu Pitts lends a hand to furnish some laughs The children won't mind this a bit

JUDGING FROM THIS FLASH they're going to call F. B. O.'s "The Wyoming Wildcat"—with that new boy, Tom Tyler—a "howling success."

Illustrated Weeklies Laud "The Freshman"

ILLUSTRATED weeklies in the East and West have given unstinted praise to "The Freshman," Harold Lloyd's newest feature comedy production for Pathe release.

Herbert Crooker, writing in the New York Mid-Week Pictorial, made the following comment on the Lloyd picture:

"'The Freshman' is one of those happy college comedies in which the dignified dean is upset and tumbled into the mud—but who cares! Never was such a freshman seen on any campus—but who cares! Liberties are taken on the football gridiron which would amaze the late Walter Camp—but what of it! The laughs are all there, and that's about all you want when you buy your tickets at the box-office.

"With the many discreet hints tabulated above, you can readily see the great possibilities for laughter with Harold leading the cheers. The comedian has extracted hilarious situations from football practice that this writer never believed existed. In giving a party for the students Harold manages to lose his evening clothes in an astonishingly new manner. And the football game is a downright howl that should worry the building inspectors of any theatre.

"As the naive undergraduate Harold Lloyd is at his best. He handles his wistful moments splendidly and his humorous capers are a joy. The comedian's best work is probably during his moments of discomfiture, both on the gridiron and the ballroom floor; and a scene on the latter, in which he keeps up a spirited conversation with a young lady, while from behind a curtain a tailor sews up his ripped garments, is a gem of comedy. Jobyna Ralston, as the girl, acts with sympathy and understanding, making an exceedingly pretty picture and one worth going to college to find."

The photoplay reviewer of the Town Crier, a Sunday magazine section of the Wichita Beacon, Kansas, writing in the same vein, said in part:

"The fact that Harold Lloyd is probably the keenest student of humanity in the ranks of the picture stars is proven by the unfailing accuracy with which he is able to gauge the public demand. He has set for himself the task of knowing at all times just what the amusement seekers want, and he gives it to them, embellished and idealized as only he can do it. This is the reason for the unprecedent popularity that is his—this, and the clean, frank and wholesome note that rings aloud in every picture he has produced.

"It has been some time since the screen has had a story of college life, and never has Harold Lloyd himself appeared as a college boy—so what better than to add to his gallery of humorous portraits a freshman—a boy trying earnestly to enter into college life with his best foot ever forward, and always getting it stepped on!

"But even a water boy can achieve fame and glory, as is proven in the grand climax of 'The Freshman,' which is said to outdo every laughing thrill Harold Lloyd has ever closed a comedy with.

"Jobyna Ralston is again Lloyd's leading lady, but the remainder of the cast is made up of faces new to his pictures. They are Brooks Benedict, Hazel Keener, Pat Harmon, James Anderson and Joe Harrington, and hundreds of college kids and co-eds, and eighty thousand spectators crammed into Leland Stanford's beautiful stadium at Berkeley, Calif., to see the big game."

Ruth Roland's New Pony

"Beans" is the name of Ruth Roland's new cow pony, a recent addition to her large stable of riding horses. Beans won his "monicker" as the result of a contest conducted by a motion picture "fan" magazine, in which thousands of names were suggested by Ruth Roland fans, and over three hundred dollars in prizes were given by Miss Roland. Gertrude B. Frank, of Waukesha, Wisconsin, was the winner of the first prize—a lovely diamond ring. Beans is almost a twin, in looks, to "Joker," the famous horse used by Miss Roland in so many of her serials, and throughout her most recent feature picture, "Where the Worst Begins," now being released through Truart Films Corporation. But now Ruth is puzzled as to Beans' family tree—he doesn't seem to belong to any of the ordinary families of "Lima," "Chile," "Navy" or "String" Beans.

Hoxie Starts Soon on New Western

"The Tuneful Tornado" is the title of the new picture Jack Hoxie will do for Universal. It was written by Harrison Jacobs, who also adapted it to the screen. Albert Rogell, who has been directing Hoxie recently, will supervise the making of "The Tuneful Tornado." The picture will go into production shortly. Hoxie recently completed "Grinning Guns," in which he played the role of a newspaper man.

"WHEN THE DOOR OPENED"—WHAT?—Heartache and drama, building to a huge climax, in which these three—Jacqueline Logan, Walter McGrail and Frank Keenan—figure intimately in the William Fox feature of that title.

Rolland Flanders in Three Big Pictures Simultaneously

ROLLAND FLANDERS is the latest to achieve fame as a multiple motion picture actor, having acted in three pictures simultaneously. He was pursuing his way as a young juvenile, when he received a call to take part in the Pathe Serial, "Enemies of Uncle Sam," starring Helen Ferguson and George O'Hara, under the direction of William Nigh.

When the call came to report for work he found that the picture was being "shot" at night owing to the fact that there was a rush of work on at the studio. This left his days entirely free, so when First National sent for him to play the juvenile role in "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," with Ben Lyon and Blanche Sweet, under the direction of Al Santel, he saw no reason, just because he was working in one picture, to treat with disdain this unlooked for gift of the Gods. So things went along merrily without conflict.

Just about this time Fred Newmayer started casting for the Leon Errol picture, "The Lunatic at Large," for First National, and he signed Mr. Flanders for one of the important roles, expecting that work would not start until after all of the scenes in "Bluebeards Seven Wives" had been shot. But a shift in the schedule caused a change in plans, with the result that time became something to think about and to worry about. It all worked out right, however, and no directorial war resulted.

Mr. Flanders made his real start in picture work in the Marion Davies feature, "Janice Meredith." Later he appeared in D. W. Griffith's, "Isn't Life Wonderful"; the Davis production, "Red Love," the First National, "The Live Wire" and "The Pace that Thrills" and the Famous Players-Lasky productions, "Wild, Wild Susan" and "Man to Man." Other pictures which he will be seen in are "The Pinch Hitter," starring Glen Hunter and Constance Bennett and "Camille of the Barbary Coast," with Owon Moore, for Associated Exhibitors, and the Marshall Neilan production, "Wild Oats Lane," with Viola Dana, for United Artists.

Starts "Danger Girl"

Priscilla Dean has started work in her first starring vehicle for Metropolitan Pictures Corporation.

"The Danger Girl," an adaptation of "The Bride," a stage play written by George Middleton and Stuart Olivier, will be the first Dean-Metropolitan offering. It is being directed by Edward Dillon.

ROLLAND FLANDERS
One of the coming young leading men in motion pictures, who recently appeared in three productions in the East simultaneously.

Anita Stewart Signed for Role in Belasco's "The Prince of Pilsen"

Anita Stewart the aesthetic, affixed her signature to a contract with A. H. Sebastian whereby she will appear in the Belasco Production of "The Prince of Pilsen" to be produced at the Metropolitan Studios for release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Miss Stewart, whose recent most sensational success was the Cosmopolitan film "Never the Twain Shall Meet," has been much in demand since that film was released. Negotiations on the present contract have been pending for several weeks.

Miss Stewart has been signed for a minimum of two pictures with an optional contract for two additional productions.

Her first featured role will be in "The Prince of Pilsen," based on the comedy operetta of that name which several years ago swept the entire country off its feet. At one time no less than ten companies were touring the country in the production. "The Prince of Pilsen" was reported to have beaten the box office record of "The Merry Widow" when the latter was showing in its comic-opera form.

Anita Stewart was given the role largely on the strength of her excellent work in "Never The Twain Shall Meet," says Mr. Sebastian. As for the star herself, she is elated at the prospect of appearing in this new picture, especially as the role will call for intricate dramatic interpretation with great opportunities.

It is not yet certain who will play the star male role in the picture.

"The Prince of Pilsen," of course, will have a military setting. Commenting on the picture plans, A. H. Sebastian said: "It is our intention to produce this new picture on a lavish scale. I fondly hope that it will be the biggest and best production of my career. Its possibilities are little short of wonderful, and from all present indications it should develop into the outstanding motion-picture of this season."

It is likely that the company will go to Cincinnati to film part of the exteriors for the picture.

"The Prince of Pilsen" in operetta form was written by Frank Pixley and Gustav Luders. The continuity for the film version was written by Anthony Collewey.

Five Completed Columbia Features in Laboratory

"The Handsome Brute," "Lure of the Wild," "Ladies of Leisure," "Fate of a Flirt," and "The Thrill Hunter" are scheduled for release before the Columbia 1926 season begins. "Lure of the Wild," which was directed by Frank R. Strayer, starring Lightening, the wonder dog, and an all star cast headed by Jane Novak, is expected to be a box office production with all the record smashing qualities of "Steppin' Out," made by the same director, which has established new records in practically all the first run houses in which it has been shown.

"Amundsen Polar Flight" Booked by Stanley Theatre

"The Amundsen Polar Flight," the authentic motion picture log of the Amundsen-Ellsworth expedition, which is being distributed by Pathe, has been booked for first-run showing at the Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia and for the other theatres in the large circuit to follow the initial presentation at the Stanley.

Presented in three reels of dramatic action, "The Amundsen Polar Flight" offers a "personally conducted" trip with the noted explorers on their perilous flight to the Arctic Circle to within a short distance of the North Pole.

Associated Exhibitors Announce the Release of Weaver's "Hearts and Fists"

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announce for early release "Hearts and Fists," a smashing drama of the lumber camps, directed by Lloyd Ingraham and featuring Marguerite de la Motte and John Bowers. The picture was adapted from the popular story of the same title which appeared in the American Magazine.

Produced by H. C. Weaver Productions, "Hearts and Fists" was photographed in the heart of the big timber district of the state of Washington. Through the courtesy of a lumber company, the lumber camp scenes were pictured in one of the biggest and most up-to-date lumber camps in the Northwest. The result is that a stirring drama has been screened against backgrounds as compelling and towering as the big trees themselves.

The idea of fidelity to detail has been carried out in every instance, which fact adds immeasurably to the entertainment value of the picture. With a real lumber camp, real lumber-jacks, a real lumber-camp railroad and all the other necessities at hand, Director Ingraham is said to have made a picture that fairly breathes the aroma of love and battle in the big pines.

The story deals with the strenuous efforts of the son of a lumber king to carry on after his father's death. The son starts out with his only possession a few thousand dollars, unlimited determination and two loyal friends to help see him through. Naturally he triumphs over adversities and wins the girl of his choice, but so compelling and thrilling is the screen telling of the story with its dramatic complications as to make an unusually entertaining photoplay.

An interesting feature regarding the cast is that it includes Lois Ingraham, daughter of Director Lloyd Ingraham, who makes her screen debut in "Hearts and Fists." Also in support of Marguerite de la Motte and John Bowers are Alan Hale, Charles Mills Mailes, Kent Meade, Jack Curtis, Howard Russel and others.

De Mille's Current Producing Program Nearing Completion

WITH the starting of production on the eighth picture of Cecil B. DeMille's 1925-1926 schedule, the editorial force of the De Mille Studio is concentrating on the preparation of the last four units of De Mille's 1925-1926 production program.

De Mille himself is now directing "The Volga Boatman," eighth on his schedule of twelve pictures for the season, opening scenes of which are being filmed on location near the Sacramento River, with William Boyd, Julia Faye, Elinor Fair and Theodore Kosloff featured. Meanwhile, finishing touches are being applied to "Braveheart" by Alan Hale, who is directing this picture, with Rod La Rocque starring. Jeanie MacPherson is superintending the preparation of the script for La Rocque's next starring vehicle, "Red Dice," due to go into production November 30. Beulah Marie Dix has completed her adaptation of "Silence," the great crook drama, and Rupert Julian will start shooting November 23, his cast headed by H. B. Warner, who starred in the New York stage presentation of the play.

Leatrice Joy, who is now vacationing in New York, will return by the middle of December to prepare for her starring role in "Eve's Leaves," her fourth picture under the De Mille banner. Paul Sloane will direct the production from the adaptation by Elmer Harris, starting January 4.

The last production on the present schedule, "Bachelor Brides" will go into production January 14, with Rod La Rocque starring in the screen adaptation of this rollicking stage success. Alan Hale is to direct the picture, for which Douglas Doty is preparing a screen treatment. Due to the recent consolidation of the De Mille and Metropolitan studios, next season's production will be even larger than De Mille's first activity as an independent motion picture producer.

CHARLOTTE BIRD

This clever young actress will be seen in Sidney Olcott's production of "The Best People," for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The two brothers are nationally known stage stars and have recently entered the movies, where they are broadening the popularity of their names by their excellent screen work.

Both are character actors. Nat made his debut with Universal in "The Beautiful Cheat" in which Alexander also played. Following that Alexander was loaned to other companies, while Nat has played in "His People" and 'The Cohens and Kelleys."

As a result of the work in these last two pictures, he was put under contract and now has a prominent role in "Wives for Rent," which has just gone into production under the direction of Svend Gade. Pat O'Malley and Virginia Valli are co-starred in it.

Chadwick Pictures Corporation's production has been progressing so rapidly at the company's West Coast studios that eleven of the fifteen releases on the 1925-26 program have already been completed. It is expected that the remaining four will go into production shortly.

"The Wizard of Oz," released on September 1st, the first Chadwick picture of the 1925-26 program, has proven one of the outstanding comedies of the year. Another Larry Semon special comedy, "The Perfect Clown," to be released December 15th, has already been completed.

"American Luck," George Walsh's first modern action romance for Chadwick, is one of this star's four which have already been completed. "Blue Blood," the second, will be released on December 1st. There will be six productions to this series.

"The Last Edition" Plays to Capacity at the Belmont

Louis Gans, manager of the Belmont Theatre, 650 Tremont Avenue, New York City, contends that "The Last Edition," Emory Johnson's tribute to the journalistic profession, is the greatest box office picture of the year. As evidence, he points proudly to the fact that "The Last Edition" played the Belmont Theatre day and night with "Don Q" and "The Gold Rush" on the same street, and his theatre was jammed to the doors at every performance.

Third Tyler for F. B. O.

"The Cowboy Musketeer" has been chosen as the release title for Tom Tyler's third F. B. O. Western feature now in course of production at F. B. O. under the direction of Bob De Lacy. From One Skyrocket to Another

ON HER RETURN FROM EUROPE, PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE, star of Associated Exhibitors' "The Skyrocket," was showered with roses from the sky. The man who bombed the famous beauty with flowers was R. Rex Renee, famous French war ace. The photo shows the airplane in which he convoyed the Mauretania to her dock. Renee has just been made a sales representative for Associated Exhibitors in Albany.

Tom "Still Doing His Stuff"

One day last March, Mary Pickford issued a hurry call for Tom McNamara to join her staff for a week in an advisory capacity. The famous star wanted Tom's advice relative to certain phases of the story, "Little Annie Rooney," she was about to produce and she assured McNamara that she would not require his service more than one week. Eight months have elapsed since that time and Tom is as yet "doing his stuff" on the Pickford lot and judging from present indications it will be some time before he removes his bag and baggage to another studio.

Billie Dove and Husband Looking Forward to Vacation

If Billie Dove and her husband, Irving Willat, are fortunate enough to conclude their present occupations simultaneously, they will enjoy a brief vacation together for the first time since they have been married. To date the petite star and the director have never finished their respective pictures at the same time, hence if either one desired a holiday they necessarily had to journey alone. But now it looks like Miss Dove will appear in her concluding scenes of "The Black Pirate," opposite Douglas Fairbanks, at the same time Mr. Willat films concluding scenes for the Paramount picture he is producing and the noted screen couple will at once embark on a second honeymoon if their anticipation is at last realized.

"Joanna" Completed

Having completed the final editing and titling of his latest First National Picture, "Joanna," Edwin Carewe left New York for the Coast. He made a brief stop-over in Chicago to confer with Watterson R. Rothacker and then headed straight for Hollywood where he will begin preparations for his next production.

Renee Greets Peggy Joyce

Famous French Flyer Drops Flowers on Ship Bringing Home Associated Exhibitors Star

When Peggy Hopkins Joyce, star of Associated Exhibitors' "The Skyrocket," arrived from Europe last week on the Mauretania, she was greeted by another "skyrocket"—R. Rex Renee, famous French Ace. Hovering over the giant steamer as the greyhound glided through Quarantine, Renee bombarded the star with roses, and helped give the star a reception that made the front page of practically every New York paper.

And now Renee, holder of every decoration for bravery that it is possible for one man to obtain, has earned new laurels in the Battle of Business. Through appointment by E. J. Smith, sales manager of Associated, Renee becomes a member of the sales force of Associated Exhibitors, working out of the Albany branch under Abe Eskin, recently-appointed manager.

Renee is by no means new to the film selling game. Back in 1912 he rolled up sales records in the Oklahoma territory that augured well for his future as a sales executive But with war he enlisted as a flyer. His war record is history.

So if a film salesman should happen to call on you by way of the roof, you will know that R. Rex Renee, famous French ace and "skyrocket," has arrived to tell you more about Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket."

Pete Morrison's Next?

"The Hidden Cabin" is the title of the third of the Pete Morrison series of pictures that the popular Western star is making for release by Universal. The story was written by Frank C. Robertson and ran as a magazine serial. The players supporting Morrison have not yet been selected.

King Vidor Feted

At Testimonial Reception and Supper Director Is Presented with Handsome Military Rifle

Signal honors were conferred on King Vidor, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, by his fellow craftsmen of the Motion Picture Directors Association at a testimonial reception and buffet supper staged at the megaphone wielder's clubhouse, in Hollywood, recently.

The affair was in tribute to genius shown in directing of "The Big Parade." Ceremonies reached their zenith, with a presentation of a handsome military rifle to the M-G-M producer, by William Beaudine, president of the directorial association.

Compliments to Vidor were paid by Louis M. Mayer, vice president and general manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Edwards Davis, president of the 233 Club, and President Beaudine.

An elaborate entertainment program, headed by Master Vincent Caruso, juvenile star of Thomas C. Regan Productions, who just returned from a six weeks' vaudeville engagement at the Palace theatre, New York, was intermingled with the speeches.

Practically every prominent producer and director in the industry attended the festivities.

Boasberg Leaves F. B. O.

Al Boasberg, for several years connected with the Home Office of Film Booking Offices, has resigned and left for Hollywood to assist in the production of Buster Keaton comedies.

Boasberg has written many vaudeville acts, and has contributed several sketches for the musical comedy stage, which were presented by the Music Box Revue and other musical productions in New York.

OLGA CALVE

European motion picture beauty, is a Russian Countess. She recently arrived in the United States with her husband, Lou Marangella, well known motion picture publicist, who met Calve when he went to Rome to handle publicity on the Fred Niblo production of "Ben Hur" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Calve played a role in this picture.

Countess Goubarev is Here

Accompanies Her Husband to America And Will Play in Pictures

Lou Marangella, the journalistic impresario who journeyed to the land of the Caesers in behalf of "Ben Hur," has fallen from grace and become a Benedict. Lou was married in gay Paree, that charming city on the Seine, several months ago.

Unlike the American girl who seeks a foreign title, Lou has turned the tables on the usual plot, and married the Countess Goubarev, known in film and theatrical circles on the Continent as Olga Calve. Miss Calve has a remarkable record of achievements. As a member of the Russian nobility she fought in the World War, serving as a lieutenant in the Cossack ranks of the Black Army. Her experiences, not only in the war but also in the Bolshevik revolution that followed, are declared to be full of thrilling dramatic incidents, and the new Mrs. Marangella is writing her memoirs for future publication.

There is nothing to be said about Lou's career, except that he met his bride across the sea, came back with the "Ben Hur" company, and then journeyed overseas again for the marriage ceremony. His best man was Ted Taylor, a Los Angeles newspaper man, at present on the editorial staff of the Paris Times.

Miss Calve has been on the Russian stage, and for the last few years has been playing leads in French films. She has also played minor roles in a number of American films made abroad. Our hearty congratulations to the bride and groom, who are now in the East.

PAULINE FREDERICK

One of the things that has not been "Right with the Movies" for more than a year, past, has been the absence of this great actress from the Hollywood Studios. We hear Miss Frederick is returning from Australia, and may return to the screen immediately.

Pauline Frederick Returning

Actress Appeared in Every Important City in Australia

After eight months in the Antipodes, Pauline Frederick, noted star of stage and films, is returning from Wellington, N. Z. aboard the S. S. Tahiti for San Francisco.

It was in March of this year that Miss Frederick and her supporting company sailed for Australia on what was scheduled to be a three months tour under the direction of J C. Williamson and the personal management of "Snowy" Baker. Her repertoire, consisting of "The Lady" and "Spring Cleaning," both plays she had used as vehicles in California theatres, proved so popular that her stay was prolonged five months beyond the original period. During her Australasian tour, Miss Frederick appeared in every important city on the continent.

Upon her return to the United States, Miss Frederick will spend a fortnight at her Beverly Hills estate and will decide, during this time, whether she will accept a theatrical engagement to bring her plays to New York and London, or remain in California on one or more of the film contracts which have been proffered to her attorney, M. J. Herbert.

San Francisco to See "Phantom of Opera" Again

"The Phantom of the Opera" is going back to San Francisco for a triumphant return engagement, according to announcement from Carl Laemmle. The Universal production had its pre-release showing there several months ago, and had a successful run of eight weeks at one of the larger theatres. So popular was the picture that the St. Regis theatre has booked it for a second showing.

A party of Universal stars, including Mary Philbin, who plays the feminine lead in "The Phantom," Raymond Keane, Louise Dresser, Arthur Edmund Carew, Charles Puffy and others, will attend the opening of the picture.

Paul Kohner, Universal casting supervisor, will chaperone the theatre party.

"Lady Windermere's Fan"

ERNEST LUBITSCH, the distinguished German director, produced this Oscar Wilde play for Warner Bros., with Irene Rich, May McAvoy, Bert Lytell and Ronald Colman in the cast.

NEXT Tuesday evening, December 1, has been definitely set as the date for the gala world preview of the Warner Bros.-Ernst Lubitsch production "Lady Windermere's Fan," at the exclusive Casa Lopez in New York. Preceding the actual preview, Vincent Lopez will be host at an elaborate dinner-dance to Miss Irene Rich, the "Mrs. Erlynne," of the picture.

More than two hundred persons, prominent in the picture industry or in artistic, professional or social life, have accepted Mr. Lopez's invitation, and the affair has been given an international flavor in keeping with the world-wide appeal made by the masterpiece of the British literary genius, Oscar Wilde.

The executors of the celebrated dramatist's estate, it wlil be recalled, were importuned by film organizations of several nationalities to dispose of the screen rights before they finally yielded to the American company, and then only on the implicit understanding that the picture should be directed by the German-born producer, Ernst Lubitsch.

Thus, the best in each of a group of countries was called upon to make his contribution. Finally, it remained for Mr. Lopez, representative of yet another nationality, to arrange an elaborate entertainment which should emphasize impressively the international character of the event.

Incidentally, Miss Irene Rich, Warner Bros. star, cut short her vacation in Europe and hurried back across the Atlantic to be the honored guest at Tuesday's entertainment.

Miss Rich will be the hostess of the evening by special invitation of Vincent Lopez. During the dinner an elaborate revue will be given, to be followed in turn by dancing and the presentation of the screen production. Mr. Lopez's famous orchestra will furnish the music for the entire evening, and the event will be broadcast on the radio.

The attitude of the literary world toward this presentation is evinced by the fact that there will be present several English authors who are in this country, prominent American writers and official representatives of the Society of Authors of both the United States and England.

Screen Stars Will Appear At Customs Service Ball

FAMOUS motion picture and stage actors and actresses will appear on the program of entertainers at the entertainment and reception of the New York Branch, National Customs Service Association, to be held on Tuesday evening, December 8, in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Commodore.

Four operatic stars will appear and sing operatic selections. Opera stars, actresses and actors have at all times received most courteous treatment from the Inspectors, and other Customs employees, with whom they have had occasion to meet in the conduct of their business. This has been the experience particularly of those in the theatrical profession, who make frequent visits to Europe. Many times individuals in the profession have been able to keep their engagements only because the Customs men have facilitated the handling of their baggage.

The entertainment and reception is given in honor of Collector of Customs of the Port, Philip Elting; Arthur F. Foran, Comptroller; Thomas W. Whittle, Surveyor; and Fred. J. H. Kracke, Appraiser.

Vincent Lopez has been engaged to furnish the music for the occasion and will appear personally with his renowned Club Orchestra.

The coming entertainment and reception is the first social event planned by this organization, and the cooperation by the public has instilled the members and their friends with great enthusiasm in working up the social.

More than three-fourths of the United States Customs employees at the Port of New York make up the roster of this Association. When it is realized that the Port of New York includes all these cities with a waterfront near Greater New York, such as Jersey City, Newark, and Perth Amboy, extending as far north as Albany, and east as far as Montauk Point, one may comprehend the extensive area covered and the widespread locations of the members.

The officers of the Association are:

George L. Conell, President; John J. Viele, 1st Vice-President; E. T. Humphrey, 2nd Vice-President; Charles W. Nelson, Recording Secretary; F. A. Ostrick, Corresponding Secretary; Julius Waldauer, Financial Secretary; Ernest S. Braidwood, Treasurer and Jeanne Bruce, Register. Committee on Arrangements, James S. Long, Chairman, Room 219, Barge Office. E. S. Braidwood, John J. Viele, Frank Sullivan, Harry Wanamaker, F. A. Ostrick, Julius Waldauer, Jesse Moir, Charles W. Nelson, Charles Connolly, E. T. Humphrey, Jeanne Bruce, Robert Behr, John E. Lenz, August K. Thomas, William F. McKenzie, Jesse L. Perry and Walter A. Kennedy.

EAST OF BROADWAY. (5,783 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A fair police story with some good acting and a very good cast. Have run better pictures from Pathe. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

HEADLINES. Star, Alice Joyce. A very ordinary offering in the opinion of my patrons, and I acquiesce. A newspaper story, rather far fetched, with Virginia Lee Corbin doing a fine "flapper," and that let's it out. Not a picture for the small towns. I'd think this over very carefully before I played it, screen it before buying if possible. Weather fair. Attendance so-so. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

town of 1,000. Admisison 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville Louisiana.

SCAR HANAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. A real western picture filled with lots of action in it. There is an outlaw horse they ride in this picture that is worth the advertising to see it alone. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and rural class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

SCAR HANAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. A fair western that pleased the devotees of that class of pictures, and there are quite a few of them yet. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

SMOOTH AS SATIN. Star, Evelyn Brent. They liked this here. Played it on a Saturday and it pleased greatly. A nicely made program offering that moves along and keeps entertaining all the way. Weather fair. Attendance Saturday excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A good action picture that will please any audience. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

WHITE SIN. Star cast. Fair picture that played to fair business. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

First National

BAD MAN. (6,404 feet). Star, Holbrook Blinn. A different picture that will please. Book it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers town of 400. Admission ten cents on program pictures and 10-25 on specials. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

BELL BOY 13. (5 reels). Star Douglas MacLean. A fine little program picture and went over in fine shape. Weather was very bad, so didn't do very much at the box office, but those who saw it were well pleased. Print in good condition. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

BLACK OXEN. (7,831 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. I was supposed to run this over a year ago and there's nothing to be said since it has been reported so many times. However, it is a good picture, and wherever Corinne Griffith is popular it will please her following; it is a very high class production. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

CHICKIE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Pretty good, but rather sad in spots for here. It got by, that's about all. If you play this and are a small town exhibitor, be careful of the rental. Fair weather. Attendance not so good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DARK ANGEL. (7,311 feet). Star, Ronald Colman. One of the year's best. One hundred percent audience appeal. Jos. L. Caudell, Grand Theatre (220 seats), St. Pauls, North Carolina.

HER REPUTATION. (7 reels). Star cast. A good picture. Good story, good acting. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

IDLE TONGUES. (5,447 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Fine acting on Marmont's and Miss Kenyon's part, but the story was a little draggy. However, it was interesting and has a good moral that should have gone home to quite a few in the audience. Tone and appeal, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

KNOCKOUT. Star, Milton Sills. A knockout of a picture. Had more comments from patrons on this than I did "The Sea Hawk." Plenty of action. If you are in a high class town I would advise you not to run the trailer. Tone, okay. Sunday, doubtful. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-20. L. H. Greife, Opera House (500 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

LOST WORLD. (9,700 feet). Star cast. A wonderful production. Caused a lot of speculation as to how the animals were worked, and so on, but as a whole very much enjoyed by all because it was unusual. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. No for Sunday, yes as special. Draw business and farmer class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. X. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

LOST WORLD AND SALLY. Star cast. Two of the year's best. One hundred per cent. audience appeal. Jos. L. Caudell, Grand Theatre (200 seats), St. Pauls, North Carolina.

LOVE'S WILDERNESS. (7,057 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Not bad, but lacks a lot of being really worth while. Why do they use such leading men? Is the male population of Holywood migrating? Can't give this one very much. Tone, not bad. Sunday and special, no. Ordinary appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MADONNA OF THE STREETS. (7,507 feet). Star, Nazimova. Here is a mighty pleasing picture. The better informed will criticize the forced happy ending, but all in all it's a first-class picture where they like intense drama. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Milton Sills. Fine cop story that pleased one hundred per cent. Well acted, directed and photographed. A clean plot and enough action to keep the roughnecks from calling a straight "love picture." Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Almost a special. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Pat O'Malley. A fine picture that will please all who witness it, therefore, just prove how you can exploit it and get some change for yourself. Couldn't call it a special, but a very high grade program offering. Weather fine, attendance, ditto. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MY SON. Star, Alla Nazimova. Went over real well here, and incidentally the first picture in many moons of Nazimova's that pleased, so you'll probably have to step on the loud pedal to get the public interested. This has real value, a good picture, not a special, and at reasonable rental you should cash. Weather fine, attendance good. Dave Seymour, Pontaic Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PAINTED PEOPLE. Star, Colleen Moore. This star does not draw here. Rental too high, no profit. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Well produced but hardly worth the trouble. Few liked it and none enthused over it. Tone and appeal, not much. Sunday and special, no. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THOSE WHO DANCE. Star cast. Good picture. Just above program schedule. Rental too high. No profit. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star, John Bowers. A real picture. Does not follow the book very closely, but will draw very good. Very interesting. Tone, good, Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Ninety per cent. audience appeal. Farmers town of 400. Admission ten cents on program pictures and 10-25 on specials. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

WHITE MONKEY. Star, Barbara LaMarr. If you buy enbloc and have to take this picture, if you show it, get a suit of armor, otherwise lay it on the shelf. A pretty bad picture. Weather fair. Matinee good, night here and there a patron. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star cast. A good program picture, but not much action, although name has drawing power. Also good moral to picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. Star cast. Good picture, no profit. Rental too high. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. A little above program schedule. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Fox

AS NO MAN HAS LOVED. Star cast. A worthy version of a masterpiece that gives prestige to your house and raises the standards of the industry. Fine, thrilling, story and production is excellent, though cast did not seem ideally selected. Step on it hard. They'all like it. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, decidedly. Great appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CONQUEST. Star, William Farnum. A good reissue. Good action in the last two reels, but the first four are dry, even if it is of historical interest. Story of General Sam Houston, liberator of Texas. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star, Reed Howes. Fast moving story, well photographed and directed. Charles Conklin as the negro was a knockout. In fact, he is the best "nigger" on the screen today, and his appearance always is greeted with gales of laughter. People like this kind of action story, and it is a wonder the producers don't make some effort to supply more like 'em. Tone, okay. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Very strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg. Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HEARTS OF OAK. (6 reels). Star cast. Very good. Should hold the interest of everyone from beginning to end; last reel very sad, good views of Arctic ice fields. Acting good. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,954 feet). Star cast. This is an excellent picture, but for some reason I have never in my six years of dealing with Fox been able to put their so-called specials over. They have made so many rotten ones that it is like the little boy and the wolves, when they do make a good one nobody believes it is. This one will please all who see it. Tone, okay. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,854 feet). Star cast. Stars not very well known, and while photography was excellent, and action was good, the direction was very poor and the suspense was not of the kind to make the fans gasp at the climax. Tone, rough in spots. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Fair program. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

KISS BARRIER. Star, Edmund Lowe. Not a bad picture. It will just get by and that is all. Title kills it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Town and country class town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

LUCKY HORSESHOE. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Four days to good business. Patrons kicked on this because of its costume and foreign atmosphere. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

OH YOU TONY. Star, Tom Mix. A very good production, but not his best by any means. Did well at the box office through rain and mud. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, very good. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 on specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

OH YOU TONY. Star, Tom Mix. Fine according to comments. I didn't get to see it, but it pleased my western fans. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

TIMBER WOLF. (4,800 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Not Buck's best, but it drew a satisfactory business for three days. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

DADDY'S GONE A-HUNTING. Star, Alice Joyce. Play this if you must, but be prepared for some hectic exclamations. Did not satisfy at all here. Weather fair. Attendance, not much. Dave Selmour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DENIAL. Star, Claire Windsor. Very, very ordinary as to picture and attendance. This is one that I'd forget, if it's in the contract play it, if you play 'em all, if not show something that will please, which will not be hard to get. Attendance—the opening sentence tells of this. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,965 feet). Star cast. A very good picture of the old time southern chivalry. A very good storm and wild animal scene and an excellent racing scene. Very good entertainment. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville Pennsylvania.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. (6,500 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. An excellent western picture, not the shoot-'em-up kind. Will please any small town audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety p er cent. Farmers town of 400. Admisison ten cents on program pictures and 10-25 on specials. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Very good picture. Something different. Drew good crowd which showed profit at box office. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. All classes town of 1,000. Admisison 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Went over very well, especially with the children and young people. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MONSTER. Star, Lon Chaney. Gave everybody the creeps. The usual Chaney. Have some fans who like him, but the most of them say he is a splendid actor but not an entertainer. Too horrible. Nuf sed. Tone and appeal, no. Sunday and special, no. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PLEASURE MAD. Star cast. Was a good picture and pleased the majority. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

PRAIRIE WIFE. Star cast. Patrons

Between Ourselves

A get together place where we can talk things over

When I started getting the finest assemblage of sincere exhibitors to sending these tips, I HOPED it would find a helpful response.

Now, after the years have marched along, I KNOW it has.

But just the same I like to have some of the boys say things like this:

"I wish to state that I find your 'Gang's' Straight from the Shoulder tips of great benefit in my business and enjoy the Moving Picture World in general."

G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, Cloverdale, California, said that—AND HE HELPS MAKE IT SO!

A pat on the back for the boys who send these tips without expecting any pay at all is only fair. They get no other kick out of it. Give them your appreciation!

And help them help you.

VAN

voted this an insipid affair, and after the matinee proved it by staying away. Weather fair. Attendance pretty good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This is good entertainment. Almost as good as "The Kid." Step on it. Best Jackie has done in years. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SHERLOCK, JR. Star, Buster Keaton. Just a fair production that for some reason or other failed to attract business here. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

SILENT ACCUSER. Star cast. The best dog picture I have ever seen. Acting by Peter the Great wonderful. Everyone thoroughly enjoyed it, and many stopped by to tell me. A good picture for any house and should draw if played up right. It will stand heavy advertising. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A surprisingly fine picture. Due to the fact that it was sent in as a substitute we did not get a chance to exploit it, but it is a fine photoplay worthy of real advertising. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admisison 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

STRANGERS OF THE NIGHT. Star cast. Considered a fair production, but did rather poorly at the box office. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

THY NAME IS WOMAN. (9,087 feet). Star cast. Had several favorable comments on this picture and business was fair. Al. C Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WAY OF A GIRL. Star, Eleanor Boardman. One of those pictures that goes back to the writer every few minutes. Some bird smoking cigarettes and rambling with a pin. Rotten, walked out on it. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, forty per cent. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

WHITE DESERT. (6,464 feet). Star, Pat O'Malley. This is an extra good picture. Will please any audience. Several big thrills and beautiful scenery. If we had known what we know now we would have raised our prices on this one. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

WHITE DESERT. Star cast. A good picture full of action and scenery, strictly a program affair, although from the publicity it looks big in spots. It only "looks big," it isn't. There's snow all over the screen and you want to have your theatre well heated or everyone will shiver. Weather fine. Attendance pretty good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WIFE OF THE CENTAUR. (6,586 feet). Star cast. Very good. Everyone liked this picture. Very deep, not for youngsters as far as thought is concerned, nothing slushy, nothing immoral. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

YOLANDA. (10 reels). Star, Marion Davies. This one took great here. All on account of Davies, as our audiences don't like costume pictures, but they liked this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no, unless they like costume pictures. Appeal, ninety per cent. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ZANDER THE GREAT. (6,844 feet). Star, Marion Davies. The best picture this star has made, somehow we never did as well as expected but it is a good picture. Will stand lots of advertising. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. One hundred per cent. appeal. Rural class and townspeople, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

More Tips from Tom Hays

"The Goose Hangs High" (Paramount), good; "Marriage Cheat" (First National), passable; "Learning to Love" (First National), good; "Prairie Wife" (Metro-Goldwyn), good; "Friendly Enemies" (Producers Dist. Corp), oh, boy! if you like comedies, book it; "Sinners in Silk" (Metro-Goldwyn), is O.K.; "Wine of Youth" (Metro-Goldwyn), this was no good here; "Girl Shy" (Pathe), not so bad but not what it has been cracked up to be; "Charley's Aunt" (Producers Dist. Corp.), it is a riot.

"Seven Chances' (Metro-Goldwyn), O.K.; "Classmates" (First National), good; "Red Lily" (Metro-Goldwyn), not so good for us; "Sally" (First National), good; "Tongues of Flames (Paramount), not so good. Thomas L. Haynes, Old Lyme Amusement Co., Old Lyme, Connecticut.

Paramount

GOLDEN PRINCESS. (8,584 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Any one who likes the Peter Pan girl will certainly love this picture. Gold rush days of '49 with very good action. My patrons all liked it. Print new. Paper very good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes, and no for special. Good appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. (6,186 feet). Extra fine production. By all means play it up big. Fine for holiday program. Draw general class, town about $5,000. Admisison 15-30. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre (600 seats), Kalispell, Montana.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,650 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Good picture that drew well, nothing more need be said. Weather fine. Attendance excellent. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,650 feet). One of the best westerns Paramount has ever made. Pony Express and The Wagon are no better. We cleared enough to get a square meal on this. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Dix. A worthy evolution of the old Wallie Reid Auto stories and much better. A knockout Saturday feature, or good for any red-blooded audience anywhere. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Strong appeal. Draw mixed class, town about 3,000. Admission 10-25-30. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre (800 seats), Redding, California.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This is a story of a manicure girl who craves luxuries and excitement, but, though many temptations, remains true to her poor but honest lover. Bebe Daniels and Edmund Burns make a human story out of it and after many sacrifices save enough to buy a bungalow. A refreshing story with a moral. Draw tourist city of 3,000. Admissions 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). If you are picking out boobs, hand the man who is desponsible for this the medal. We think we see Bebe slipping also. Thank the Lord, tomorrow I have an Independent picture. Maybe we will half way please the congregation. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

MEN AND WOMEN. (6,232 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is a picture where a false friend tries to steal another man's wife. Richard Dix isn't himself in this play. Good suspense all through, but climax not natural, especially for Dix. Our patrons don't like this kind of a picture. We got by, though, with good short subjects. Sunday, no, and no as special. Appeal, none. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, Cloverdale, California.

NEW BROOMS. (5,443 feet). Why should this have been thrust on me? Story was pleasing, but the photos and other advertising drove them out of the lobby as fast as they came near the theatre. It appears to me some one should get the air for picking such a title. And the man who designed the advertising should be shot at sunrise or sooner if possible. Idiots are not all dead. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Much enjoyed by my patrons. Play it, go after it and make some money. Weather fair. Attendance better than the weather. Health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This did not prove a box office attraction. Story is draggy in places—something lacking. Fails to ring the right way for a special. However, it is worth seeing; just a little above program schedule. Good tone, fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A beautiful production that we are glad we played even though we only broke even. Miss Bronson is great. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday and as special. 85 per cent. appeal. Draw town and rural, town about 1,000. Admissions 10-25, specials 15-30 and 25-50. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats) Vermont, Illinois.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,229 feet). Stars, Compson-Cortez. For western exhibitors another "Covered Wagon" or "North of 36," and sold on a white man's basis. A genuine American epic. Will back up any amount of boosting. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Great appeal. Draw mixed class, town about 3,000. Admissions 10-25-30. J. J. Wood, Redding Theatre (800 seats), Redding, California.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,920 feet). Good, but not as good as "The Covered Wagon" as they advertise. Draw general class. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,929 feet). Star cast. Comes about as near equaling the Covered Wagon as anything since the Wagon was made. We play it one more day. Rain cutting attendance. Tone, good. Sunday, no, and special, yes. Very good appeal. Draw town and rural class, town about 1,028. Admission 10-25 and 25-50. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES. On an average, Paramount pictures are the best. If you have a high or middle class audience, use them. There is a certain fine quality in Paramount's that rough necks cannot see. Draw farming and lumber class, town of about 425. Admissions 10-20-25. C. E. Dellinger, Doric Theatre, (250 seats), Wardensville, West Virginia.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Star has lost out here entirely, so of course no one cared for the picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, no, ad no for special. Appeal, none. Draw rural class, town about 1,450. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

SEVEN KEYS to BALDPATE. (6,974 feet). Star, Douglas McLean. First McLean picture ever run in my house and it went over nicely. A mystery comedy drama, taken off the stage play of same name. Print new. Good tone. Sunday, yes, and no for special. Good appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE. (6,048 feet). Star, Douglas McLean. The version wasn't commensurate with the touting it got, and our critical audiences termed it a mere program picture. Suspense is the keynote and it's well done; no exertion on the parts of all involved. Tone, O.K. Sunday, yes, special, no. Eighty-five per cent. appeal. Draw mixed class, town about 1,300. Admission 10-20. Pace & Bonman, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

Pathe

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Excellent comedy. Will please all Lloyd fans and should do a very good business. Tone and appeal okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. General class town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Lloyd always goes good here. This picture tame at the start but makes up for it in the last two reels. Lots of laughs. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers town of 400. Admission ten cents on program pictures and 10-25 on specials. Ross. S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

PERCY. Star, Charles Ray. This a very good picture but it did not get me any money. Star is a back number and does not draw as he did several years ago. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Producers' Dist. Corp

CHARLEY'S AUNT. Star, Syd Chaplin. In my opinion the laugh hit of the season. You're going to be asked some coin of the realm for this, expect it and then sell it hard. You can increase, I did very slightly and not a murmur. Weather fine. Excellent attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. Played a bit late but to record crowds. Pleased one hundred per cent. C. L. Brattin, Princess Theatre, Sidney, Montana.

CRIMSON RUNNER. Star, Priscilla Dean. It's a crying shame this artist can act, but the picture is the veriest rot. You know how "Priscilla" stands in your town, I know now too. If it was me, I wouldn't show this picture on a bet, I consider it positively the worst in which she has ever appeared. Weather fine. Attendance, matinee fair, night I might as well have closed up. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. Star, Mat Moore. A very good comedy drama with plenty of pathos and heart appeal. Tone, and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Semi-special. General class town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. Stars, Weber and Fields. They liked it here, because in my estimation eighty per cent. of the population here is from New York City and the W. and F. popularity counted, not a "Charlie's Aunt" but a very good comedy much of the fun being told in titles, and as a rule that is not satisfactory but the "language butchering" amused 'em here. Weather fine. Attendance good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

CORINNE GRIFFITH
Charm condensed in a corner of a couch —certainly that's Corinne in "Classified" for First National.

LET WOMEN ALONE. Star cast. A fair program picture for small houses that still charge ten cents admission. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

OFF THE HIGHWAY. (7,641 feet). Star, William V. Mong. The acting in this one is great. Photography bum. Old story done in old way, but acting carries the story through, can be used three days to good business. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ROARING RAILS. Star, Harry Carey. A dandy melo-drama, heart interest, thrills, forest fire. The child acting is wonderful. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

STOP FLIRTING. Star, Wanda Hawley. Only fair. Laughs entirely too infrequent. Play it but be sure and have a good program surrounding it and possibly you'll escape censure. I was very particular in the selection of my short stuff and that virtually "made" my program for the day. Weather fair. Pretty good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHAT SHALL I DO. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Picture good. Pleased all who saw it. Title misleading and killed the picture. Wallins Theatre, Wallins Creek, Kentucky.

United Artists

HILL BILLY. Star, Jack Pickford. Very well liked but did only a moderate business. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL. Star, Carol Dempster. A great character study about a lot of potatoes, acted magnificently, not a false move of any of the direction. Candidly I can't see how a small town can play to anything with this because its appeal is so limited. It was requested here, and they got it at a very moderate rental. Would have lost my life if I paid what was originally requested, as it was I sneaked by and they saw the picture. Some liked it, others walked out. Weather fair, attendance considering the offering fair. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. Star cast. A real good show that failed to pull them through rain and mud. A complete flop at the box office. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 on specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. It's class throughout and a fine spectacular affair. The question arises whether you can play it and get by, if there are patrons enough in your town to come across buy it, what they consider it worth, that's something else, buy it reasonable and charge accordingly. Don't run it for "prestige" for if you do try cashing some "prestige" at your local bank. Weather fine. Attendance, great, it had to be. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Universal

BUTTERFLY. Star cast. An excellent offering. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD. Star, Reginald Denny. They liked it here. Plenty of action and plenty of laughs. Weather rain, which affected the attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DANGEROUS INNOCENCE. (6,759 feet). Star cast. This is a nice picture, but the name didn't appeal. I believe the story's name "Ann's An Idiot" would have been better as lots of people have read the story. It is a pleasing show with considerable comedy. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

DARING CHANCES. (6,260 feet). Star cast. Just a good western. Nothing extra good for Saturday crowds in small towns and country. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Town and country class town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

DON DARE DEVIL. Star, Jack Hoxie. Best Hoxie up to date. Rural class town of 1,450. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. Very good entertainment. Will not appeal to everybody but it does give the variety that a theatre should have. Baby Peggy quite clever. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Small town class and farmers town of 350. Admission 10-35. Nelson & Ottem, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. Star cast. Right. No matter how crazy you make a picture you'll always find some that will like it. This case was no exception. Some even thought it very good. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

K—THE UNKNOWN. Star, Percy Marmont. A little gruesome in places but an interesting story and worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Just above program. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

K—THE UNKNOWN. Star cast. A very good picture that should please the better class of patronage. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

LAW FORBIDS. (6,262 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. A very fine picture dealing with the divorce problem. Baby Peggy does her part in fine shape. Good for any day in week. Excellent tone. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

LOVE AND GLORY. Star cast. This is a costume picture but it is very good and well worth a boost. Print good. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MAN IN BLUE. Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A most excellent program picture, full of action and yet plausible, comedy not neglected and all in all one of the best of its type released this year. Please note the classification. A program picture, but excellent and with a good filler program you'll sell a lot of good will with this filmplay. Attendance (Saturday) right up to the average. Weather fine. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

OH DOCTOR. (6,507 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A good fast moving picture in the last few reels but not so good at first. It has the bang at the right place and will please. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, no. General class town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

OH DOCTOR. (6,507 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This is a very pleasing comedy. Not as good as his two later pictures but it is fine and pleased. "I'll Show You the Town" and "California Straight Ahead" are very fine. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

PEACOCK FEATHERS. Star, Jacqueline Logan. My quarrel with this one is the title, while the title fits the picture like a glove, it is a boomerang when it comes to drawing for me out here in the sticks. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Very small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RECKLESS AGE. Star, Reginald Denny. A high society comedy. Very much enjoyed by my patrons. Plenty of action and thrills. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

RIDIN' THUNDER. Star, Jack Hoxie. This is a very good Hoxie subject and to the patronage that like this type of picture it will please. Has some fine riding in it and plenty of action. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

SUNSET TRAIL. Star cast. A very good western picture that my people all liked. William Desmond as the "Happy Hobo" was fine. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Town and country class town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

TEASER. Star, Laura LaPlante. Liked very much and did very much to establish this young lady here. Plenty of comedy, and some good situations. Play it. Not a special but a very fine program picture. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TORNADO. Star, House Peters. Lots of action. Excitement, storm very realistic. Pleased the majority. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SCHOOL FOR WIVES. Star cast. Went over very well and pleased the majority. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

STEELE OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. (5,700 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. Good story of the famous police organization in Canada. Well photographed and some very thrilling scenes where the hero, unskilled in paddling, shot the rapids. Everyone liked this story. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, JR. Star, Wesley Barry. Good. Lots of action in the last two reels. Lots of good clean comedy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HER MARRIAGE VOW. Star cast. Just one of those things. Six thousand feet of film that starts nowhere and gets to about the same place at the finish. Weather fine. Attendance scarcely any at night. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HOW TO EDUCATE A WIFE. Star cast. A very good production that pleased everybody. Business fair. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

KISS ME AGAIN. Star cast. A good picture. Good entertainment. A real good comedy. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

BLACK GOLD. (State Right). Star, Pete Morrison. Nothing much to this one, although I get the money with any kind of a western. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Independents

CRACKERJACK. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. He has done better, but this is full of comedy action and you can sell it as a program picture and satisfy. Don't think it's poor, not so, but he has set a pretty good comedy standard and this falls a little below. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DANGEROUS PLEASURE. (State Right). Star cast. No excuse for releasing such stuff as that. Those that didn't walk out on it had soundly gone to sleep. Can recommend it as an excellent business killer. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

QUICKER 'N LIGHTNING. (State Right). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. This is a pip, and goes over with a whiz, lots of action, comedy, and suspense. Give us some more like this. Tone and appeal, good. Very small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

SLOW DYNAMITE. (William Steiner). Star, Matty Mattison. Just a fair program picture. Title misleading. They must be running short of titles. Print good. Sunday and special, no. Poor appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TRUTH ABOUT WOMEN. (6 reels). Star, Hope Hampton. A good little program picture and should take well with most any audience. Did not do much on this picture for some reason. Ray Johnston on "Laugh Month" Committee; Accessories Await Theatre Owners' Orders

THE campaign for National Laugh Month gathers impetus with the daily dissemination of information on the subject, and with Januray 1, 1926, a few weeks away, the producers and distributors of short features are preparing for the final, intensive program of advertising and publicity that will bring "January—Comedy Month" directly to the attention of the public as well as to the showmen.

The committee in charge of the details National Laugh Month has held daily sittings, acting upon hundreds of suggestions forwarded from as many varying sources, and no important avenue of publicity has been closed to the big idea.

The ranks of the committee have grown in numbers since the first shot of the campaign was fired, the newest acquisition to the committee's activities being Rayart Pictures Corporation. When W. Ray Johnston returned from Hollywood a week ago, he immediately sought the members of the committee and asked to be permitted to contribute, financially and otherwise.

Mr. Johnston's offer was accepted instantly, and his sterling worth as an advisor and counsellor is thrown into the balance in the general effort to place short features permanently before the theatre owner and the patrons of the theatres.

While the advertising, publicity and exploitation departments are working full speed to make National Laugh Month a success, the art departments have not been idle. Special posters and cuts have bben designed and submitted, and these will be added to the general scheme of things in the nation-wide drive. The committee of the National Laugh Month campaign has been extremely active in the past week and has arranged for a complete line of accessories and publicity material for the exhibitors to use.

A broadside has been prepared and is going out announcing the campaign. This will be mailed to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada and will be followed within a week or ten days by a complete press sheet picturing the accessories and giving suggestions for a large or small campaign whichever exhibitors may desire to use.

Arrangements have been made with the Sweeney Lithograph Company of Belleville, New Jersey to supply, on order, to exhibitors, banners, pennants, 1-sheets and 3-sheets. Special designs have been prepared for these and they are being sold at nominal prices. Banners printed in two colors on canvas will have 5 eyelets at the top so that they may be hung up. The cost will be $1.25 each. Pennants will be made up in assorted colors and will be 14"x29" and will sell for $.12 each. 1 and 3-sheets in colors are being prepared with the laugh heads and the 1-sheets will cost $.15 each and the 3-sheets will cost $.27 each. Orders must be sent direct to Sweeney Lithograph Company, Belleville, New Jersey, and all or part of the purchase price should accompany the order.

National Screen Service, with offices in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles, is making up a special animated trailer of the laughing head. Exhibitors who are using Screen Service trailers now will receive this about the middle of December as part of their regular service. Other exhibitors may obtain the special trailer by sending to the nearest service office your check or money order for $1.00. As these are made up only on order they are not prepared to accept requests for shipments C. O. D.

Buttons about 1 inch in diameter with the Laugh Month Slogan are being prepared by Bastian Brothers Company, of Rochester, New York, and the prices will range from $4.50 for 500, $8.00 for 1000 and the per thousand price gets less as the quantity grows until 10,000 buttons may be obtained at $7.00 per thousand.

CLIFF BOWES
Cameo Comedy Cliff—Educational's release, of course.

W. RAY JOHNSTON
President of Rayart Pictures Corporation, who has joined the Steering Committee in charge of National Laugh Month.

Arrangements are being made for special slides, "ad" cuts, mats and window cards. As soon as the details of these are worked out with the manufacturers, announcement will be made as to the prices and where they may be obtained.

All the companies participating on the National Laugh Month Committee are ordering samples of these accessories for their exchanges and within a week or ten days every exchange will be displaying National Laugh Month material.

The press sheet containing the list of the accessories, and the prices, will be mailed to all exhibitors during the first week in December, so that ample time is given to every theatre man to get material which he needs to make Laugh Month a success.

Pathe Gets Behind "Laugh Month," Offering More Than Twenty Splendid Laughmakers

PATHE is getting behind "Laugh Month" with full force and announces a list of twenty three sure fire laughmakers on the January short feature release program, which is headed by a Harry Langdon special comedy, made by Mack Sennett, and includes four two-reel comedies from the Sennett studio, five two-reelers and three single reelers from the Hal Roach lot, and five releases each of "Aesop's Film Fables" and "Topics of the Day."

Popular comedy stars and featured players who will be seen in Pathe comedies during "Laugh Month" include such box-office magnets as Ralph Graves, "Our Gang," Alice Day, Clyde Cook, Harry Langdon, Charlie Chase, Billy Bevan, Glenn Tryon, Andy Clyde, Al. St. John, Lucien Littlefield, "Husky" Hanes, Jimmy Finlayson, Lige Conley, Martha Sleeper, Dot Farley, Kewpie Morgan, Madeline Hurlock, Cissy Fitzgerald, Jack "Rube" Clifford, Thelma Parr, Marvin Lobach, Paul Parrott, Douglas Gerrard, William McCall, Ruth Hiatt, Peggy Montgomery, Vernon Dent, Sue O'Neil, and Vivian Oakland.

Titles of Pathe comedies listed for "Laugh Month" include the following: "Saturday Afternoon," three reel Harry Langdon-Mack Sennett comedy special; "A Punch in the Nose," two-reel Hal Roach comedy; "The Gosh Darn Mortgage," Sennett two-reeler; "Good Cheer," "Our Gang" comedy; "Soft Pedal," one reel Roach comedy with Paul Parrot; "Don't Butt In," a one reel Roach film with Paul Parrott, and "Between Meals," a one reel Roach comedy with Paul Parrott.

"Aesop's Film Fables," to be released during "Laugh Month," include "The Gold Push," "Three Blind Mice," "Lighter Than Air," "The Little Brown Jug" and "A June Bride." All of these subjects are packed full of fun devised by Paul Terry and his staff at the studios of Fables Pictures, Inc.

Five releases of "Topics of the Day," the ever-popular reel of wit and humor clipped from the press of the world by the editorial staff of Timely Films, Inc., will be offered exhibitors.

In presenting the next Harry Langdon comedy special for release in "Laugh Month," Pathe is giving exhibitors one of the funniest films ever enacted by Langdon, who is conceded to be one of the foremost comedy bets in the business today. Only recently Langdon's "Lucky Stars" was featured for a week each at the Rialto and Rivoli on Broadway and is now playing 126 days on the Loew Circuit. In "Saturday Afternoon," the Langdon release for January, the droll star has a vehicle with a real plot embellished with a generous number of positive laughs. His supporting cast includes Vernon Dent, Ruth Hiatt and Peggy Montgomery. Harry Edwards, who has made the majority of the Langdon-Sennett comedy successes, directed "Saturday Afternoon."

"Good Cheer," the "Our Gang" comedy produced by Hal Roach presents the famous Rascals in a holiday story with wide appeal to adults as well as the youngsters. The story concerns the efforts of the Gang to brighten the Christmas season for the less fortunate kiddies. They encounter a whole army of Santa Clauses and uncover a big plot as well as providing a real Merry Christmas for many children. All the "Gang" members including the latest addition, Jay Smith, contribute to the fun. Robert McGowan directed this holiday laughmaker.

"Hot Cakes for Two" is another rollicking, wholesome Alice Day comedy with the Mack Sennett comedienne at her very best. She plays a sweet maiden from the corn fields of Kansas who seeks screen fame and undergoes experiences which every film aspirant will want to see. And the fun of it all will convulse any audience. Her supporting cast includes Gus Runty, George A. Beranger, Joseph Young, and Marvin Lobach. Alf Goulding directed.

"Long Pants" offers Glenn Tryon in two reels of fun directed by Fred L. Guiol for Hal Roach. Tryon appears as a young "flipper" or male flapper who has acquired his first long pants. The said trousers are of the newest, widest and longest style but not unshrinkable. Glenn Tryon is supported by Cissy Fitzgerald, Vivian Oakland, Jack "Rube" Clifford and Sue O'Neil.

"Whispering Whiskers" is a typical Mack Sennett comedy of the brand bearing his name and was directed by Del Lord. Billy Bevan and Andy Clyde head the funsters which include Madeline Hurlock and Kewpie Morgan. The plot involves stolen rubies, clairvoyants and mysterious disguises which aid in making the fun fast and furious.

Those named are typical of the high standard of comedies which Pathe has lined-up for "Laugh Month."

In addition to providing a big array of funfilms, Pathe is also lining-up complete exhibitor-helps to put over the comedy subjects in the many theatres that are sure to cash-in on the wide publicity and fine programs being offered because of "Laugh Month." In the selection of stills and posters special care has been paid to choose the funniest scenes for display in the lobby frames and show the "customers" that a real comedy is being shown inside.

To emphasize the punch scenes in forthcoming comedies, Pathe is issuing special art posters on the short feature comedies. Such artists as Gustav Michelson, George Kerr and Merle Johnson are drawing an unusual line of posters which Pathe exhibitors will find ready-made for advertising their "Laugh Month" attraction. Press books are issued on all Pathe two-reel comedies and these books will include stories and cuts which will aid the exhibitor in supplying the local papers with stories about comedies of the moment.

Music cue sheets are another new-exhibitor aid being issued by Pathe on the short feature comedy product produced by Hal Roach and Mack Sennett. Undoubtedly exhibitors will pay particular attention to the accompaniment given their comedy subjects during "Laugh Month," and the Pathe cue sheets will prove invaluable.

Pathe is particularly well equipped to provide exhibitors with all-comedy programs in great diversity as to stars and length of subjects. Such three-reel comedies as Harry Langdon in "There He Goes" or "Saturday Night," and Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" are just the type of attraction to form an all-comedy bill around. A Mack Sennett and Hal Roach two-reel subject added to the three-reeler and one of the "Aesop's Film Fables" and a release of "Topics of the Day" affords one of the best comedy programs available.

The success of all-comedy programs is well known, and the continued use of this type of bill by Max Graf at the Egyptian and Aztec Theatres in San Francisco with big results at the box-office has proved the money-making possibilities of such programs.

One of the highlights of "Laugh Month" will be the many all-comedy programs offered by wide-awake exhibitors, and the house of Pathe is ready to do its part in giving the exhibitor every cooperative aid in making January, 1926, a month of real joy for audiences with resultant benefits for the exhibitor.

On a "Still" Hunt

Around a motion picture studio, photographs taken with a regular camera are known as "stills," to distinguish them from "movies," as the motion picture negatives are called. Now go on with the story.

The location man for the William Goodrich-Lupino Lane Company, out scouting for suitable locations for Lane's next comedy, was examining the grounds of a railway station near Los Angeles, when he was approached by the station agent.

"What are you looking for," asked the agent, suspiciously.

"I'm trying to take a still," said the location man.

"Gallaping tarantulas!" exclaimed the agent, "How'd you know we had one?"

Confers With Pathe Officials Regarding Next Vehicle—"Stop, Look and Listen," His Latest

Larry Semon, who recently completed "Stop, Look and Listen," his first Pathe feature comedy, and Dorothy Dwan, his wife, who appeared opposite the popular comedian in this picturization of the Broadway musical comedy success, are now in New York where Mr. Semon is conferring with the Pathe officials regarding his next vehicle.

John Adams, business manager for Semon, who came East with the star, has returned to the West Coast to make ready for the second production.

"Stop, Look and Listen" is a typical Larry Semon vehicle affording plenty of scope for thrills as well as laughs. It will be recalled that Charles Dillingham produced this musical comedy on Broadway with Gaby Deslys as the star. Miss Dwan plays this part in the screen-play and Mr. Semon essays the role that brought fame to T. Roy Barnes.

Semon, himself, directed "Stop, Look and Listen" and included in his cast such favorite players as Mary Carr, Lionel Belmore, Babe Hardy, Bull Montana, William Gillespie, Josef Swickard, B. F. Blinn, Frederic Kovert and Curtis McHenry.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

Fox Film Corporation Will Release Strong List of Little Features for "Laugh Month"

FOURTEEN corking two-reel comedies which made reviews laugh as they seldom do at a pre-release showing, will be the contribution of Fox Films to Nation Laugh Month, to be observed in January by motion picture theatres all over the United States.

The purpose of National Laugh Month, as has already been announced, is to impress upon exhibitors the importance of advertising and exploiting short subject films instead of playing the loud pedal on feature attractions and letting the rest of the program take care of itself. Eight of the foremost producers of short comedies have formed an organization to this end and National Laugh Month is the result.

Included in the list of Fox Films comedy releases for November, December and January are three Van Bibbers, "The Wrestler," "A Parisian Knight" and "The Feud"; two of the O. Henry series, "Failure," and "Cupid a la Carte"; seven Imperials, "Strong for Love," "East Side, West Side," "Control Yourself," "Heavy Swells," and "The Flying Fool" and two untitled two-reelers, two of the Helen and Warren Married life series, "The Peacemakers" and "His Own Lawyer."

Seldom, if ever, have two-reel comedies elicited such enthusiastic praise from reviewers as these, particularly the Van Bibbers, which are produced as lavishly as many feature-length films. It is the opinion of many that Fox has set a new standard for short comedies, not only in elaborateness of production, but also in displacing slapstick and hokum with genuinely humorous situations.

"The Wrestler," one of the latest in the Van Bibber series, fairly abounds with screamingly funny situations and afford Earle Foxe greater opportunities to create laughs than perhaps any thus far released. In this picture Foxe, as the bashful Van, is compelled to mix it up with a professional wrestler who has quarreled with his sweetheart, and it is guaranteed to make any audience howl with mirth. "A Parisian Knight" also is crowded with laughs and it would be a gloomy soul indeed who couldn't find a cure in this film. "The Feud" is a hilarious adventure in house-buying that brings a family war along with the purchase.

In the Married Life of Helen and Warren series, "The Peacemakers" finds Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley, the Newlyweds, in a thrilling adventure on board ship, in which mistaken identity gives rise to considerable merriment. "His Own Lawyer" gives Hal some anxious moments.

"Failure," an O. Henry comedy, shows what happened to a divorce lawyer who tried to collect a fee from each of the three principals in a human triangle and lost out all around, while "Cupid a la Carte" is a typical O. Henry yarn made into a great film.

Perhaps the outstanding picture on the list for National Laugh Month, judging by the reception it received from pre-release reviewers is "Control Yourself," an Imperial, in which Sid Smith introduces the celebrated electric horse made famous by President Coolidge. Smith appears as a gilded son who struggles to overcome a violent temper and win the hand of a beautiful heiress and the big scene is the crumbling of an immense dam which a crooked contractor has built for the girl's father. The hero discovers that his prospective father-in-law is about to be swindled out of $100,000 and resolves to prevent it. This picture was declared a knockout by all who saw it at a recent screening.

However, the high praise bestowed on "Control Yourself" does not mean that the others on the list are inferior in quality. Every one on the list brought hearty laughs and spectators agreed that they were much above the usual standard of short laughing subjects.

Felix Adler, who recently signed a contract as chief title-writer of the Fox comedy department, after several years in a similar capacity with Mack Sennett, adds greatly to the entertaining quality of these comedies with titles which are in themselves irresistibly funny.

George Marshall, comedy supervisor, has surrounded himself with a staff of fertile-brained gagmen and, according to announcement from the Fox West Coast Studios, an absolute ban has been placed on all the old time-worn gags which once were regarded as indispensable in the making of comedies. Working under Marshall's direction are Robert P. Kerr, Albert Ray, Lee Neal, Max Gold, Andrew Bennison, Daniel Keefe, Lew Seiler and Benjamin Stoloff, some of the ablest comedy directors in the film industry and a veritable army of gag-inventors.

The Fox comedy program is filled with exploitation possibilities. Linked with the Van Bibber comedies is the name of Richard Harding Davis, the celebrated American author, who wrote the stories on which they are based. O. Henry has become known as the world's greatest short story writer. Mabel Herbert Urner, author of "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," is now writing stories which are syndicated to eighty-one of the most important newspapers in the country. Each of them runs pictures of Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley in scenes from the Helen and Warren comedies.

In order to help exhibitors put over National Laugh Month with a real bang, Fox Films has provided unusually attractive posters, lobby photos, newspaper clip sheets, and, in fact, everything conceivable in the line of accessories to keep the box-office busy.

Two Rayart Pictures

According to a cable received from David J. Mountan, President of Richmount Pictures, Inc., who sailed last week on the Leviathan, two Rayart Pictures, namely, "Thrilling Youth," starring Billy West, and "The Midnight Limited," starring Gaston Glass and Wanda Hawley, were shown to the complete passenger list on board the Leviathan. The cable from Mr. Mountan reads as follows:

"Screened Billy West 'Thrilling Youth' Thursday night aboard Leviathan with tremendous success. Audience in howls of laughter throughout. Screened 'Midnight Limited' Wednesday to very representative audience. Wonderful response. Liked by all. Received great vote of thanks from passengers for showings."

WILLIAM FOX KNOWS MARRIED FOLKS GO TO SHOWS so he gives them something apropos and entertaining —"The Married Life of Helen and Warren"—this time "The Peacemakers" holds the screen, Hallan Cooley and Kathryn Perry being "them."

"U" Serial Experts Outline New Production Policies

A COMPREHENSIVE outline of Universal's serial production plans has just been received by Fred J. McConnell, sales manager for short product for Universal, from William Lord Wright, head of the serial department at Universal City.

"Wright is the best serial man on the Coast," says McConnell, "and his ideas on the modern serial are outstanding. At the head of our West Coast serial production, he is putting the right stuff into our chaptered pictures and is making them of maximum value as educational assets as well as box-office successes. His production policies are based largely on the assumption that serials are not only for children, but for grown-ups as well."

Wright's comment on serials is as follows:

"The serial picture," says Wright, "as regards the more mature movie fans, is much the same as the circus. The children are only a means to the end. Parents, uncles, aunts and older brothers and sisters use the children as an excuse to follow the thrilling episodes of a serial picture. They enjoy it, but won't admit it.

"Many of the big feature pictures are nothing more or less than glorified serials," continued Wright, "costing more, but with no greater attention paid to detail than is given the serial. Serials are slowly but steadily gaining in public favor. There might have been a slump for a time, but this has passed. Universal's belief not only in the growing popularity of the serial picture, but also in its educative value, is shown by the program it has mapped out. We will make six serials the coming year and perhaps eight.

"More money is now being spent on serials than heretofore, not only as regards cost of production, but also as regards price paid for stories and casts. Historical atmosphere is being sought for more and more and some of the best writers of the country have contributed their efforts to Universal's coming program. Another thing, serials are being given more comedy relief, which appeals not only to the children, but also to the grown-ups. The successful serial must be clean above everything else. In considering stories,tha t is Universals first thought. Then it must have novelty and enough of a plot to make it interest susstaining for ten weeks, and that is what we are getting now.

"The serial is, I think, the most difficult feature of motion picture work. Where it treats of historical matters it must follow his tory closely. Writers of serials must know their technique and directors must display more resourcefulness than in any other brand of pictures. Getting back to the serial and grown-ups, the serial is reaching out and replacing the hold that juvenile literature once had on the childrens' elders. Many a tired business and professional man has been known to seek relief from his worries through the medium of books that he once read as a child. Now he is seeking that same relief from the serial picture.

"Take 'Perils of the Wild,' one of Universal's recent releases. It is a screen adaptation of the famous 'Swiss Family Robinson.' It is reported as drawing as many older persons as it does children. This, I think, is the first serial showing boys working in adventure. Four youngsters have prominent parts in it. Children like to see those of their own age going through adventures on the screen, and the grown-ups get much the same feeling out of it, for it takes them back to the days when they had visualized themselves in these roles.

"The present day serial can be made of wonderful educative value and that is what Universal is striving for. We are now finishing such pictures. One is 'Strings of Steel' and the other is 'The Radio Detective.' The former is a thrilling and romantic story of the invention and development of the telephone. Before we began to make that picture we secured the co-operation of the Bell System. We were given access to their museum in New York City, and from the data secured there and from veterans still in the service, we have produced an historical picture that will be instructive and interesting to all ages.

"'The Radio Detective' is based on Arthur B. Reeve's story of the same name. Everything touching on the radio that appears in this picture was first passed on by radio authorities. Boy Scouts play an important part in it, and here, as well as through the radio feature, is something that certainly appeals to others than children. While the serial has been described as a 'children's picture,' it is a safe bet that father and mother, uncle and aunt, and elder brother and sister are glad to be able to see one even though they do hide behind the excuse 'the children like it.'"

Enlarges Gag Department

Gags, the life of all fun film, are to be given more consideration by at least one comedy producing concern in the film capital. Joe Rock recently organized a gag scenario department and he has three of screenland's greatest humorists turning out funny situations for his Standard and Blue Ribbon productions. In "A Peaceful Riot" and "All Tied Up," two of Rock's most recent fun films, picture audiences will see tangible evidence of the success of a gag department.

Pathe Issues Special Thematic Cue Sheets for 2-Reel Comedies

PATHE announces another exhibitor aid in the issuing of thematic cue sheets for its short-subject comedy product starting with the releases of the week of November 29, which are "There He Goes," Harry Langdon's first three-reel special comedy made by Mack Sennett, and "Laughing Ladies," a Hal Roach two-reeler.

The issuance of these music cue sheets is in response to many request from theatres playing the Pathe comedy product, which have not only asked for them verbally from the Pathe branch managers and salesmen but have written in to the home office.

The demand for cue sheets on the Pathe comedies was not doubt started by the musical tie-up effected with Witmark & Sons on the special "Our Gang" edition of "Stay in Your Own Back Yard," which was issued coincidentally with the release of "Your Own Back Yard," one of the best directorial efforts of Robert McGowan, who guides the Hal Roach rascals in the films. This music was played as the musical accompaniment for this comedy at the New York Hippodrome and other B. F. Keith theatres and exhibitors throughout the country are using it in conjunction with tie-ups with local music stores.

A song dedicated to Farina, the little colored player, has been published by the Alvano Mier Music Publishing Company. The title is "Lil' Farina, Everybody Loves You." Thus another popular melody is added to the library of music adapted for playing during the showing of "Our Gang" comedies. Future "Our Gang" comedies will have the special thematic cue sheets in addition.

The Pathe comedies being provided with the cue sheets are produced by the Mack Sennett and Hal Roach studios.

Kunsky Books All Pathe Short Features for Opening

When Kunsky's new $2,000,000 State Theater in Detroit, Michigan, recently opened with an exceptionally well-rounded out program, all of the short features on the bill were Pathe subjects.

Pathe News, the Pathe Review and "Aesop's Film Fables" were the short features of the show and received their fair share of praise in the local press.

Comedy was supplied by the clever antics of the Paul Terry animated cartoon characters, while the Pathe Review served as the "magazine" reel and the Pathe News brought topical events of the minute.

"The Green Archer" New Serial Heads Pathe List for December 6

THE opening chapter of the new mystery Patheserial, "The Green Archer," based upon Edgar Wallace's popular novel of the same name, heads the Pathe short-feature release schedule for the week of December 6th. "Our Gang" offers a new two-reeler, "One Wild Ride," and other subjects on the program are "Hold Everything"—a single reel Roach comedy; "The Bonehead Age" of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series; Pathe Review No. 49; 'Topics of the Day" No. 49; and two issues of Pathe News, which is now celebrating its fifteenth anniversary.

"The Ghost of Bellamy Castle" is the intriguing title of the opening chapter of the new ten-episode Patheserial, "The Green Archer," with the favorite serial stars, Allene Ray and Walter Miller in the leading roles. The cast includes Burr McIntosh, Frank Lackteen, Stephan Grattan, William Randall, Walter P. Lewis, Tom Cameron, Wally Oettel, Dorothy King, and Ray Allen. Frank Leon Smith adapted the Edgar Wallace novel for the screen, and Spencer Bennet directed the serial-play. The first chapter starts the mystery with the earliest scenes introducing the ghostly "Green Archer" and his death-dealing arrows. Abel Bellamy, played by Burr McIntosh, is established as a super-villain upon whom the Archer and many others seek venegeance. This episode ends dramatically with various members of the cast under suspicion of being "The Green Archer."

"One Wild Ride" gives the Hal Roach rascals full scope for their usual funmaking. The "Gang," excepting Farina, build an unusual vehicle out of an old automobile and hitch a horse to the back to push it.

"Hold Everything" is a Hal Roach one-reeler featuring Eddie Borden, Katherine Grant and Martha Sleeper. The plot concerns Eddie's experience with several ladies of the chorus. Fred L. Guiol directed.

Pathe Review No. 49 presents a trio of entertaining subjects: "The Timber Farmers," showing how the Government is replenishing the great western forests; "Makers of Men," showing how West Point builds America's military man-power; and "The Gorges of the Cher," Pathecolor views of a beauty spot in the chateau country, France.

"The Bonehead Age" is the animated cartoon of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series. "Topics of the Day" and two issues of Pathe News complete the schedule for December 6th. During its fifteenth anniversary period each issue of Pathe News wills show selected scenes from the "Flashes of the Past," a compilation-review of historic events of the past fifteen years.

Western Showmen Are Keen For National Laugh Month

HARRY BERNSTEIN, manager of Red Seal's New York Exchange, returned this week from a highly successful tour of the Middle West. Bernstein reported that everywhere he found exhibitors highly enthusiastic about "Laugh Month," when the short subject will come into its own.

"More and more," he said, "exhibitors are willing to discuss the value of the short subject, not only with regard to its helping to round out a pleasing program, but as to its drawing power. They have found that by running a series of short subjects that have definite appeal, they can count on a certain number coming back for that subject regardless of the feature film. As a result, throughout the Mid-West today, exhibitors are advertising their short subjects almost on a parity with their features. In the case of the Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes particularly, to name one of our own releases, exhibitors told me that the community sing-fests brought into their theatres many of the older people who otherwise stayed away unless attracted by some particular star."

During his trip Bernstein signed the Balaban and Katz Midwest Theatres, Inc., to play Red Seal's "Marvels of Motion," "K-Ko Song Car-Tunes," "Gems of the Screen," "Out-of-the-Inkwell," and the two Skiing Specials, "The Silvery Art" and "Flirting with Death" at the Chicago, Tivoli, Uptown, Harding and Senate theatres in Chicago, and their other houses on Rock Island, Bloomington, Elgin, Rockford, Aurora, and Peoria, Ill.; Davenport and Des Moines, Ia.; and Omaha Neb.

Other important exhibitors who contracted for Red Seal releases through Mr. Bernstein include Eddie Weisfeldt, general manager of Saxe's Wisconsin, Milwaukee, who signed for the entire series of "Marvels of Motion," "Gems of the Screen," and "Film Facts," in addition to "The Silvery Art." Through M. Marcus, manager of the Quimby Theatrical Enterprises, Bernstein signed up the Strand, Fort Wayne, the Quimby first run house to a solid year of of Red Seal subjects.

The Strand will play the entire series of 13 "Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes," 13 "Out-of-the-Inkwells," 13 "Marvels of Motion," and 13 "Gems of the Screen" at the rate of one a week. Mr. Marcus also contracted for the five-reel special, "Evolution."

Big First Run Theatres Book "A Dog's Life"

First run theatres in New York and in Kansas City will show "A Dog's Life," one of the Charlie Chaplin comedies which Pathe is bringing back to the screen, during Thanksgiving week.

Warner's Theatre on Broadway, New York, and Liberty Theatre in Kansas City will show this comedy classic starting Sunday, November 22.

To Direct Gump Comedies

Norman Dawn has been signed to direct the Gump comedies, which Samuel Van Ronkel is now making at Universal City. Dawn is considered one of filmdom's most finished experts in trick and color photography. In announcing that he had signed Dawn, Van Ronkel stated that the former's acquisition to the staff was part of the plan he had in mind for producing the Gumps on a bigger scale than heretofore.

Van Ronkel also announced that Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher would continue to impersonate Andy and Min.

Margaret Livingston Signs Contract with Fox Films

As the result of her success in "Havoc," "The Wheel," and other current productions, Fox Films has renewed the contract of Margaret Livingston, according to an announcement by Sol M. Wurtzel, superintendent of the Fox Studios. An optional clause in Miss Livingston's present agreement was taken up by Fox two months before the expiration of the contract.

Miss Livingston is now working in the Fox screen version of John Golden's stage bit, "The First Year," directed by Frank Borzage. Next she will start the feature role in "A Trip to Chinatown," the flirtatious widow of Charles A. Hoyt's creation, said to be the best part ever written for a woman on the stage.

"Red Riding Hood" Released As Special Two-Reeler by Century

A TWO-REEL Century Comedy Special was released as an addition to the regular Century schedule. It is "Red Riding Hood," an amusing and interesting picture adapted from the famous children's story.

Peter the Great, the popular dog star, is featured in this two-reeler in the role of the Wolf, and Baby Peggy in the role of Little Red Riding Hood. The picture is an ideal holiday subject and has been scheduled for release through Universal Exchanges in time to be set for presentation during Universal Joy Week, the holiday period of Short Subject and novelty programs.

The Century Film Corporation, producers of "Red Riding Hood," announce this picture as the only special in view during the current year's output. It has been pre-viewed and highly commended by committees of various organizations interested in films for children and for holiday presentation.

The story of Little Red Riding Hood has been closely adhered to, and a number of fill-in sequences have been built up that add greatly to the picture value of this offering. There is considerable humor in the picture as well as the dramatic action that marks the child's story so vividly.

In support of Baby Peggy and Peter the Great are to be seen Louise Lorraine, as Red Riding Hood's mother, Johnny Fox as one of the little girl's sweethearts, and Arthur Trimble, now nationally famous as the Buster Brown of Century Comedies, as another youthful admirer.

The picture has been artistically made and a portion of it is hand-colored, especially certain scenes in which Baby Peggy appears in her red riding hood.

The Universal sales department reports that man calls have come for this picture from exhibitors who have read the pre-view reports on it. It is expected to be one of the holiday season's best sellers.

Its release date was November 21.

Billy Dooley Working on New Christie Comedy, "A Salty Sap"

THE busy production of laughs at the Christie Comedy studio was increased this week when Billy Dooley went to work on his third comedy in the years series which will feature the former Orpheum comedian as "A Salty Sap." Dooley has a new leading lady in Amber Norman, a striking blonde beauty and the second light-haired siren to join the Christie ranks this year. The other is Marian Andre, the blonde Russian girl who joined the stock company sometime ago.

Another addition to the company is Aileen Lopez, a Spanish beauty who will appear regularly in the new pictures. Fred Peters, the biggest member of the company who was hurt three months ago when appearing in an Educational-Jimmie Adams Comedy, is at last out of the hospital and will return to the studio within a few weeks. Walter Hiers, also, has taken the splints from his injured fingers and will be able to resume the comedy which was stopped two months ago at the time of his accident.

Appearing in the current Educational-Bobby Vernon Comedy which is being filmed now, are Frances Lee, Bill Irving and Lincoln Plumer, all regulars in the stock company. This new comedy is being filmed by Earle Rodney, who was made a director recently after a long apprenticeship as a leading man in Christie Comedies for six years or more. Rodney recently directed the Educational-Walter Hiers comedy, "Hot Doggie," which has attracted unusual attention at its first eastern runs.

Yola D'Avril, who joined the company four months ago and started by playing atmosphere and bits, has been elevated to regular leads and plays one with Neal Burns in the latest two-reeler in which that star is featured.

National Laugh Month, January, 1926, Is Right On Your Necké

"The Green Archer"

Baffling Mystery Is Keynote of Thrilling and Exciting Serial With Allene Ray and Walter Miller

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

MYSTERY, baffling mystery, is the keynote of "The Green Archer," Pathe's newest ten-episode serial featuring Allene Ray and Walter Miller. which is well up to the high standard of entertainment value consistently maintained by this firm's chapter plays, and in many respects even eclipses its predecessors.

From story as well as production standpoint this serial is unusual. From every technical angle the production is on a par with the best grade of feature pictures; especially is this true of the handsome and elaborate sets which depict the interior of the castle in which most of the action occurs.

All of this production excellence has its value, but after all it is the story that counts, and the story of "The Green Archer" is guaranteed to thrill and mystify to an unusual extent. The plot concerns a self-made millionaire who obviously is guarding a dark secret. The heroine believes the key to this is the disappearance of a girl she has been seeking. For other reasons, the captain of the state troopers and a newspaper reporter also seek to solve this puzzle and in doing so are brought at crucial moments face to face with an even greater mystery, the identity and nature of a masked figure dressed in green whose every appearance signifies death or attempted death of someone who seems to be getting at the heart of the mystery.

This opens up a series of particularly puzzling questions: Who is the Green Archer? what is the great mystery? what is his motive? in whose interest is he hurling his death-shafts? All of these questions and many lesser ones keep cropping up from time to time and the audience will find itself more and more baffled in seeking to guess the solution for the story has been so built up that suspicion is made to point conclusively to first one and then another of the characters as being the Green Archer, only to be shown later that your guess was all wrong. His motives defy your solution, too, for at one time he attacks friends and at other times foes of the chief conspirator.

The attempts of hero, heroine and the reporter to find the solution result in a series of exciting and thrilling episodes that just bristle with suspense. Unlike a lot of serials this one goes not go in for stunts; but don't think the end-of-the-chapter punch and carried-over suspense is missing. Far from it, for as indicated by the first three episodes, each time we are again brought face to face with the designs of the green archer. Why, the second episode even has a whale of a kick where it seems he has actually gotten the heroine with one of his arrows.

In addition to the Pathe serial favorites, Allene Ray and Walker Miller, the cast includes such players as the celebrated stage actor, Burr McIntosh, as the sinister millionaire, with Frank Lackteen as his secretary, an unusual character apparently in league with both sides. Wally Oetell, Walter P. Lewis, Tom Cameron and Stephen Grattan give fine performances in minor roles.

The story is skillfully developed so as to arouse the greatest possible suspense and provide an abundance of punches. It should prove thrilling and baffling entertainment even for those who profess not to like serials.

"Eighteen Carat"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

A FARMER'S daughter is given a big diamond to use in paying off a mortgage. A hen swallows it and gets lost in the flock. The girl goes to the city to earn the money and after a series of typical comedy experiences locates the diamond in a chicken that is being served at a home where she delivers some packages. This is the outline of the story of "Eighteen Carat," a Century Comedy starring Edna Marian, who goes through a series of exciting adventures before the final flash. There are several peppy and amusing, but familiar gags. They are sprightly and well handled and good for a number of laughs. Most of the action deals with her attempts to deliver three boxes of dress suits. They are stolen by crooks. Edna stops everyone with similar packages until the whole street seems to be filled with persons carrying boxes. Of course she gets into squabbles over this. At last she locates the clothes being worn by the crooks and her sweetheart gallantly strips them off in the street. She delivers them and finds the diamond. A bumping flivver with odd shaped wheels adds to the merriment. A good comedy that should amuse the slapstick fans. —C. S. Sewell.

"Happy Go Lucky"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

MEMBERS of a bachelor's club try to flirt with a pretty girl but are repulsed. Billy, played by Neely Edwards, bets he can make her acquaintance before night. This forms the groundwork of the comedy which shows Neely doing everything he can think of to win. His efforts follow familiar comedy lines, such as trying to board the same car and getting on the wrong one, finally getting aboard by transferring from a taxi in motion just as the girl gets off. This is a good stunt as he stands with one foot on each vehicle while looking for change. The girl enters a hospital and Neely fakes an accident but jumps off the stretcher when she comes out. Just as he gives up, a motorcycle hits him and throws him into the girl's taxi. Thinking he is hurt the girl strokes his forehead and finally smiles at him. A fast-moving and amusing reel with several good laughs.—C. S. Sewell.

Pathe Review No. 49

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

THE three features of this magazine reel are "The Timber Farmers," illustrating government work in redeeming western forests devastated by unscrupulous lumbermen and fires; "Makers of Men," the building of America's military man-power at West Point, and "The Gorges of the Cher," Pathecolor scenes of the Chateau country in France. It is all very interesting.—Sumner Smith.

"The Bonehead Age"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS Paul Terry's Aesop's Film Fables we didn't like as well as most of them simply because it deals more with human beings—a girl as well as the farmer—than with the funny animals the world laughs at. The art work is good as always, except that the facial expressions aren't quite as ludicrous as usual, but the gags are weak.—Sumner Smith.

"One Wild Ride"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS Hal Roach "Our Gang" subject rather features Farina, since the little colored boy supplies the thrills and laughs that close the action. The gang builds a strange vehicle out of an old automobile, using a horse attached behind for the motive power. Farina toddles along after them no matter where they go, crying for a ride. The owner of the horse claims it while the gang is temporarily absent. This gives Farina his chance. He climbs in, the vehicle begins a wild descent of numerous hills and Farina gets the thrill of his life. On the way down he is joined by a parrot and a monkey, and with these companions he holds an animated and agitated discourse. The subject has much humor in it, is typical of boy life and ought to prove another highly successful issue in the "Our Gang" series.—Sumner Smith.

"Hold Everything"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

EDDIE BORDEN, Katherine Grant and Martha Sleeper are the featured players in this Hal Roach one-reeler. Fred L. Guiol directed. Eddie is a big butter and eggs man who attends a theatrical performance of his protege in a somewhat sleepy state. He manages to make himself a nuisance with everybody in his vicinity and is finally ejected. The gags are the usual ones involving falling over people in the theatre aisles and general hysterical conduct. The subject is of average interest.—Sumner Smith.

"On the Links"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—One Reel)

"THREE fat men, all good candidates for the heavyweight stakes as their combined avoirdupois is close to half a ton, furnish the comedy in this offering made by Joe Rock for Standard Cinema Corporation and released by F. B. O. The biggest one, Frank Alexander, is cast as the father. He kids golf until he sees other "papas" with pretty partners, then he becomes a regular bug and his two fat sons try various slapstick means to cure him.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Fighting Dude"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

LUPINO LANE shows to excellent advantage and adds to his laurels both as a comedian and an acrobat in this the second of his series for Education. He appears as a poor little rich man who is almost too languid and lazy to breathe. He calls on his girl and finds his rival to be a popular athletic he-man. Lane determines to win out and goes to a gymnasium for a course of training. Believing he is fit he chalenges his rival and is licked to a frazzle. He goes in for more training and finally in a private fight knocks his rival out and wins the girl. This is a fine snappy, scrappy comedy chock full of laughs. Lane s acrobatic comedy when he enters the gymnasium and gets in everybody's way is a corker and entirely different from the familiar handling of such scenes. His first tryout with the gloves is a regular scream. He seems to be so ignorant of boxing technique that when he learns the ropes his work comes as a surprise. Lane certainly takes a lot of hard knocks and uses his acrobatic ability to advantage. He is a finished artist in his work and gets the most out of every situation. A corking good comedy that will cause a lot of genuine laughter, and should convulse any audi ence.—C. S. Sewell.

"Marionettes"

(Educational—Color Fantasy—1,200 feet)

PRODUCED entirely in color photography by the Technicolor process and directed by Henri Diamant Berger who is handling her feature productions, this reel featuring Hope Hampton is a little gem. The story is a fantasy about a troupe of marionettes who are changed by a good fairy into human beings and warned that one wish will change them back to puppets. Miss Hampton as Columbine finds happiness in the love of Pierrot until she listens to the promises of the Court Jester to lavish wealth upon her. She is contented for a time, but again meets Pierrot and together they decide that rather than live without love they would prefer to be marionetted again. This film not only is one of marvelous beauty but the little story and the manner in which it is presented is delightful. It should please both young and old and charm the lovers of the beautiful and artistic. A judicious selection of color in the fittings, sets and costumes makes the scenes unusually artistic and effective and Miss Hampton is certainly beautiful to look at. Should go over big in almost any house.—C. S. Sewell.

"Felix the Cat Tries the Trades"

(Educational—Cartoon—(One Reel)

HUNGER causes Felix the Cat to hunt for a job. The first ad he answers is for some one to mind the baby. The little fellow cries so much that Felix throws up the job and tackles a contractor. Through a ruse he causes the workmen to leave and when the boss says he needs nine workmen the cartoonist obliges by materializing each of the cats' lives, making nine Felixes. Finding they are tricked strikers hurl bricks which the cats jockey into position and the building rises like magic. Felix collects his wages and the others disappear. The usual wealth of imagination here and comedy touches that are clever and amusing.—C. S. Sewell.

Carl Laemmle Says:

"We'll make more comedies than ever. I am convinced that every theatre-goer wants to laugh, and we intend to offer our patrons happiness and joy to as large an extent as possible."

—Statement from the President of Universal Pictures Company on his departure from Los Angeles, last week, en route to his New York office to inject his inspiring personality into the campaign for National Laugh Month.

"Santa Claus"

(Kleinschmidt—Fantasy—Two Reels)

A STRIKING novelty for the holiday season is offered by Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt, the Arctic explorer. This two-reeler, in addition to being especially appropriate for Christmas, is absolutely unique from both story and production standpoints. First, here is a Santa Claus story actually filmed in the polar regions where Santa is supposed to have his home. Children will get an exrta thrill out of seeing this genial old gentleman on his home grounds and the striking views of the arctic will be enjoyed by the grown-ups. There are intensely interesting scenes of polar bears, an enormous school of walruses and a tremendous herd of reindeer in their native haunts, and beautiful color shots of glaciers. A big point that will delight the kiddies is the fact that it answers their question as to what Santa does the remainder of the year. There is a charming little story which shows his workshop with his gnomes and elfs making toys, while Santa looks through a telescope and keeps track of the good and bad boys writing it down in a big book. He is also shown visiting his friends, the Eskimos, who hang up their stockings just as we do, and then talking with Jack Frost who beautifies the world with his ice crystals. But the crowning triumph for the little ones comes when Santa is shown with his reindeers starting out on his round of Christmas cheer and actually going down chimneys. Young and old of all classes should enjoy this picture and it ought to be a riot with the kiddies.—C. S. Sewell.

"LIFE'S GREATEST THRILLS," 2,000 feet of International (Universal) News Reel Scenes, has been given national advertising, as the above page from the "Los Angeles Examiner" attests.

Hearst Newspapers Back News Release

This page from the Los Angeles Examiner is interesting in that it shows the powerful aid given the International News Reel special, "Life's Greatest Thrills." This is local to the exhibition at the Loew State theatre, Los Angeles, but it is general in that the release presently will come into the lesser territory served by the Los Angeles newspapers.

Multiply this single example by the number of Hearst newspapers, which are so established that their circulations practically overlap, and the entire country is covered on behalf of "Life's Greatest Thrills."

Were this merely an exhibition film the matter would be important only to a few, but "Life's Greatest Thrills" is something considerably more than a compilation of sensational cuts from the International News Reels.

It is an advertisement for every news reel service. It helps to make the patron realize that the news reel is not a filler, but a feature. It will materially aid in making the news events an important part of every program.

Warner's Books "Dog's Life"

"A Dog's Life," one of the four Charlie Chaplin comedy classics acquired by Pathe under its half million dollar contract with the famous comedian, has been booked to open at Warner's Theatre on Broadway, New York, starting Saturday, November 21.

This Chaplain subject is in three reels. Pathe is backing its Chaplain series with a full line of posters as well as a special campaign book and other exhibitor aids

Pathe announces the appointment of S. R. Rahn, formerly special feature representative, as manager of the Denver branch of the distributing firm, succeeding C. M. Van Horn, who has resigned to accept a sales position in the San Francisco branch. Mr. Van Horn was given his new assignment at his own request.

COWBOY SHEIK. (Pathe—Comedy). Star, Will Rogers. Pathe should cut out these Roger pictures as they certainly are not funny. Roger may be good on the stage but not in the movies. Can them. Not a laugh in the picture. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DON COYOTE. (Universal—Series). Star, Reginald Denny. A two reel picture of the Leather Pushers. Have run three of them now and have been very good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. GREEN ARCHER. (Pathe—Serial). Star, Allene Ray. Pathe screened a few chapters of this serial for me and it looks like another "Into the Net" which means money for the box office. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-20 average. L. H. Greife, Opera House (500 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

HE WHO GETS CROWNED. Star, Jimmy Aubrey. Aubrey is going down the ladder of success with the very silly comedies he is making of late—this one is rotten. Print new. Poor appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

NO WEDDING BELLS. (Vitagraph—Comedy). Star, Larry Semon. An old Vitagraph comedy with lots of action and plenty of fun. It's worth playing. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

PATHE NEWS NO. 82. (Pathe). Lots of athletics in this one. Good prints. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SHEIKS OF BAGDAD. (Pathe—Comedy). A fairly good one reeler. Will get a few laughs. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SMITHY. (Pathe—Comedy). A good comedy of the dumb variety but nevertheless it should get plenty of laughs, but it is not a scream. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SO THIS IS ART. (Fox—Comedy). When the first monkey comedies were put out, they were quite amusing, but patrons, having been fed up on so many, do not enjoy them any more. This one barely brought a giggle, so can't boost it to the skies. Hope this is the last one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Very little appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SPANISH ROMEO. (Fox—Van Bibber Series). No use to comment on this series as they are all good. Prints good. Sunday, yes. Very good appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

UNCLE SAM. (Educational—Comedy). Extra good. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats). Cloverdale, California.

UNIVERSAL TWO REEL COMEDIES. Not very good. Just fair. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

WILD BEASTS OF BORNEO. (Educational). One of the best short subjects on the market today and it is well worth playing by any theatre in the land. Very interesting picture of wild life in Borneo, with some wonderful photography. People who seldom compliment even the biggest of "specials" were loud in their praise of this little gem. Good paper and a good slide. Tone, excellent. Sunday and special, yes as a two reeler. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Says "Life's Greatest Thrills" Is Greatest Short Feature Made

"THE greatest short feature ever made," is the opinion of C. P. Murphy, director of presentation for the Finkelstein & Rubin circuit of Minneapolis, concerning "Life's Greatest Thrills," the two-reel thrill special recently put out by the International Newsreel Corporation as a patron-builder for International Newsreel accounts. Murphy's praise was contained in a letter to Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager of the newsreel corporation.

"We played 'Life's Greatest Thrills' at the State Theatre, Minneapolis and at the Capitol Theatre, St. Paul," wrote Murphy, "and in my opinion it is one of the greatest short features ever made. It certainly is the most sensational newsreel ever shown in these theatres.

"It is a subject that can be featured, as it is bound to enhance the value of any program. Congratulations to International Newsreel for their splendid service and for the great entertainment furnished by this great novelty reel."

Maurice F. Barr, supervising manager of the New Orleans houses of the Saenger Amusement Company, the big Southern circuit, characterized "Life's Greatest Thrills," as "the best thing of its kind we have ever seen."

W. E. Drumbar, city manager of theatres of the Drumbar Circuit of Knoxville, Tenn., congratulated and thanked International Newsreel as follows:

"We are writing you a few words of praise and want to congratulate you for being the possessor of such a wonderful collection of invaluable historical data in film form.

"Our audiences enjoyed it immensely and all were high in their praise regarding it, and many came back to see it a second time."

H. E. Lorence, manager of the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, wrote as follows:

"We have just completed a three-day run of your subject, 'Life's Greatest Thrills.'

"For your information, this subject created more favorable comment than any other unit of our show, and you know that the Bellevue Theatre presents Keith's Vaudeville in conjunction with the finest feature photoplays obtainable."

The International Newsreel symposium of thrills from the newsreels of the past decade met with similar praise and success elsewhere. The following letters and wires bear further witness to the box-office success of this subject and to the appreciation of the International Newsreel accounts who received it for use as a patron-builder.

"I consider 'Life's Greatest Thrills' the most interesting short subject ever offered to the picture-going public. It is very seldom that our patrons comment on the newsreels; however, in this particular case we received hundreds of laudatory comments; also it received good mention from the newspaper critics, who devoted considerably more than the average space for reviews to this number alone.—Harry E. Long, Managing Director, America Theatre, Denver, Colo.

"We received many words of praise from our patrons on the showing of 'Life's Greatest Thrills.' This is without doubt the most spectacular two-reeler ever sent to an exhibitor."—W. W. Footman, Manager, The Burns Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo."

"'Life's Greatest Thrills' is one of the most interesting short subjects we have had the pleasure of running in many a day."—B. S. Aronson, Manager, Grand Theatre, Raleigh, N. C.

"After hearing so many favorable comments from our patrons on 'Life's Greatest Thrills,' we feel that we should offer to you our thanks for this number and congratulate you on your splendid service."—Thos. Schrader, Manager, Olympic Amusement Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.

"We wish to take this opportunity to thank you for 'Life's Greatest Thrills.' It helped the box-office and the entertainment value was GREAT."—Harry Castle, Manager, Palace Theatre, Tulsa, Okla.

" 'Life's Greatest Thrills' was thoroughly enjoyed by our audiences and it certainly answers the many questions by our patrons from time to time, 'Where was the cameraman when this was taken?' "—G. B. Odlum, Majestic Theatre, Hornell, N. Y.

"To say that I and everyone who saw 'Life's Greatest Thrills' was more than pleased would be putting it mildly. I received many compliments from my fans, who thought well enough of it to stop me on their way out and tell me about the thrill that they had in seeing it."—Carl Ray, Carl Ray's Theatres, Cheyenne, Wyo.

"It is with pleasure that I have the opportunity to congratulate you on 'Life's Greatest Thrills.' That it is one of the most interesting pieces of film our Garden Theatre audiences have ever had an opportunity to view was demonstrated by the applause that followed its showing. It is one of the best two-reel subjects, from an audience viewpoint, we have ever shown at this theatre."—H. M. Messiter, Whitehurst's Theatre Interests, Baltimore, Md.

Coax Christmas Shoppers With Tea And Hold Your Matinee Business Up

JUST as soon as the Thanksgiving turkey plays its last date as hash or soup, the Christmas shopping season starts and the matinee business shoots down into the cellar. Most managers seem to feel that nothing they can do will help much, and yet there is a way out, and a very simple way if you have a good lobby or foyer. You can even make it bring you new business that may last past the holidays.

And the answer is very simple—tea and a little advertising. You'll have to pay for the advertising, but may be able to get the tea without cost.

Sounds pretty easy, doesn't it? And it's as simple as it sounds.

And you can work it in a downtown house or in your neighborhood theatre.

How It Is Done

The idea is just that. You serve afternoon tea. If you are downtown you invite your prospects to drop in during the interval of shopping. If you have a neighborhood house tell them to drop in after the long trolley ride home, refresh themselves with a cup of tea, get a good laugh at the comedy, and go home with nerves soothed.

The best way to get this over is to circularize by mail, making your announcement brief and attractive, using a good quality card rather than a cheap throw-away style.

Back this up with screen advertising, and in the newspapers—if you use them. Have a neatly lettered announcement for the lobby, and if you want to go further use the ten-name-card idea.

Perhaps you have forgotten this. It has been some time since we have had a report on it. You simply offer a matinee admission to any child who obtains the signature and address of ten women to a card which is headed:

"This is to certify that (child's name here) has advised me of the fact that the Globe Theatre will serve afternoon tea to patrons in its foyer each afternoon between now and Christmas."

There are ten lines for the names and addresses. You may get a lot of duplications, but probably every woman in your section will know about it.

Tell the Big Idea

Here is boiled down copy for your advertising. You can change to suit your patrons.

"Do you come home tired and a bit discouraged after your weary wanderings through the crowded shops? Of course you do. Christmas-giving is a joy, but Christmas shopping is fatiguing in the extreme. The Lyric theatre has established a Cheer Station in its foyer. On your way home drop in, enjoy a refreshing cup of tea, listen to our fine music, let our excellent programs divert your mind, and you will go home as fit as when you left in the morning. Try it once. Let us cure your shopping ills. You can check your parcels, if you desire. No charge."

Vary that to suit your needs and you will make an appeal to every woman. She'll stop in at your theatre instead of getting a hot chocolate at the candy store, and you may get her permanently into the matinee habit.

Not Costly

If you can get free tea through your grocer in return for an advertisement for himself or from the tea company, your only costs will be the attendant, hot water, cream, sugar and lemon. You can hire the cups and plates from a caterer, a girl will not charge much to preside at the tea table, and even if you have to pay for the tea and the sweet biscuit the cost will be very light.

Try it and you'll make it an annual.

Make the tea corner attractive with soft lighting and comfortable chairs and you'll put over a good will stunt that will last well beyond the holidays.

A Birdie

Want ads calling for parrots was run in the newspapers of Alton, Ill., recently, with the explanation that they were wanted for the showing of The Unholy Three.

Quite a number of parrots were obtained for lobby use, and a large card explained why parrots were used to advertise the picture.

The stunt brought in a lot of business.

Milt Hits Cuba

No, this isn't one of those souse stories that come into mind as soon as Cuba is mentioned. Whether he did or didn't is immaterial. The point is that Milton D. Crandall is just back from Havana, where he went by invitation of the Hotel Men's Association and the Business Men's Association.

They wanted some pointers on how to put Cuba back on the map, and asked Milt to come over and talk to them. He outlined a scheme for a comprehensive campaign and it is the intention of the merged interests to put over the exploitation drive as soon as funds permit. There is talk of a lottery to supply the money, and if the scheme goes over Milt will have a new feather in his cap. He has been press agent to some of the leading stars and more recently was pressman for the Rowland & Clark theatres in Pittsburgh, but Exploitation Man for a nation is something that even Harry Reichenback has not achieved yet.

Meanwhile Milt is looking around for a more prosaic opening and is sticking around New York for a time.

Thanksgiving is over. Now hustle for Christmas.

Makes Float Into Attractive Lobby Display

Makes Don Q Lobby From Float Fixture

. O. T. Taylor is too busy to send in much material these days. In place of one theatre he now has four to look after, and he has delegated the work to "Jolly" Lindgreen, who some of you may recall, did some mighty nice airbrush work in these columns three or four years ago.

But Mr. Taylor takes the time to send in a couple of pictures showing how he worked a float into a lobby display. The float was used back in August for the convention of the D. O. K. K. in Aberdeen, Washington. The D. & R. Theatres contributed this float to tell about greater movie season. You'll note that they were advertising Don Q back then.

The material is not compo board but "chip board" which is lighter in weight, cheaper and tougher. It is covered with plastic material.

When Don Q came to the D. & R. he took the side pieces you note on the right of the float picture, to form supporters for a large electrical Q. The jog into the lobby where Fairbanks stands under the awning you will notice as the side piece of the float. The pillars are serving a third term, for with the arch bearing the words "Greater Movie Season" they formed part of the setting for The Spaniard.

The stuff will all go back to the store and come out again. Everything Mr. Taylor builds is sectional and capable of repeated use.

Prudent

Getting the idea of using animals in the lobby for The Silent Pal, Bert Jordan, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, used a sheep and a police dog. As the animals were in separate cages he was able to run it for the full week. The display drew more than the usual crowds into the lobby.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

CONTINUING to supply the demand for popular music, Eddie Peabody, the banjo king, and his band were engaged for the program which had Corinne Griffith in "Classified" as the feature picture. Besides the presentation worked up with Peabody's band as the center, there were two other elaborate musical presentations and the Topical Review. The complete show ran 1 hour and 56 minutes, of which time "Classified" required 73 minutes. The musical numbers took up 35 minutes, leaving 8 minutes for the Topical Review.

Opening each deluxe performance, of which there are four each day, the orchestra of versatile soloists was presented under its new conductor, Harold Stern. First was the "Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody" (Liszt), featuring Lilly Kovacs, sensational girl piano soloist of the orchestra. Second number by the orchestra was "On The Mall" (Goldman) and the third was a medley of popular numbers including "Bam Bam Bamy Shore," "What Could Be Sweeter Than You" and "Let's Wander Away," featuring Harry Breuer, xylophone virtuoso of the orchestra. Lights: purple spangled draw-curtains closed over small production stage and lighted by four arch spots, two of which were yellow and two medium green; straw spot on the girl pianist from the dome while she was doing her number; orange flood on the orchestra from the dome; large stage in red; the straw spot on pianist changed to a flood on the musicians for the second number; amber spot from the booth on xylophonist for the third number with other lights remaining. This cycle took up 13 minutes.

"The Old Music Master" was the second stage presentation, featuring a bass-baritone in the make-up of an old musician seated at the console of a huge organ. He sang "The Lost Chord" (Sullivan), after which lights came up behind the transparent drop-curtain on which the organ was painted and the Mark Strand Ballet Corps danced Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" on a raised platform, representing the dream of the old master. At the conclusion of the dance the lights came up again on the scrim and the bass-baritone sang the second chorus of "The Lost Chord." For this number the stage was lighted in amber with two steel blue spots on the singer. The lighting of the ballet was light pink and light blue. On the orchestra stage blue borders and foots were used with deep blue floods on the orchestra from the projection room. This number required 6 minutes.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came Eddie Peabody and his band. The setting was a terrace against a blue sky with transparency for stars. Four steps led from the terrace down to the stage. Selections used were "Kamenoi Ostrow" for opening. Then "Ukelele Lady," by Eddie Peabody and two of his musicians, a ukelele specialty; "I Miss My Swiss," danced by Leonard Workman; "Poet and Peasant Overture," as a banjo solo by Eddie Peabody"; "Sentimental Me," by four members of the ballet and Leonard Workman, costumed minstrel style; "Show Me the Way to Go Home," and "Charlesburg." Sixteen minutes for this presentation.

O. T. TAYLOR MADE A FLOAT INTO A SMASHING LOBBY DISPLAY FOR DON Q

The sides of the float are used for jogs and the front pillars now support the huge electrical Q. Other parts of the float have been used in other pictures, for Mr. Taylor always plans his stuff for reuse, but this display on the Fairbanks picture is the most elaborate of the lot, and brought a big business to the D. & R. Theatre, Aberdeen, Washington.

Larmour Sells Lobby Display for a Big Write-up

A First National Release

A LAVISH DISPLAY OF STILLS ON THE WHITE MONKEY

This is the front of the Capitol Theatre, Seattle, using about 50 stills and a novel stage effect just below the box office. The shelf of the latter carried cutouts of Miss La Marr and the monkey.

Lobby Building Gets Write-up

M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, sends in a quarter column write up on a lobby display for Sally. It seems that he built a shadow box about 14 feet by 5 and 14 inches deep, showing Sally dancing on a soap bubble.

The editor of the newspaper happened by and stopped to look at the dancing figure. Finally he asked Mr. Larmour if the releasing company sent the motor as well as the display figure. He was surprised to learn that the displays were made by the house, and he went over to the office and wrote up the story, adding that Mr. Larmour would be grateful for suggestions.

Then he went back and helped Mr. Larmour build a display for The Lucky Devil, a miniature race track with moving cars.

Mr. Larmour says that he is going to take his crew into the lobby and build his display there, so the people can become interested. Probably he has forgotten that others have done that stunt, as we have reported, but it's always good, and if you want to beat the toy train for display, try using the lobby for a workshop some morning.

But what is really new is the suggestion that Mr. Larmour will appreciate tips. First thing he knows he'll have the entire town helping, and that's very practical publicity.

Graham may not be a metropolis, but Mr. Larmour measures up to big city standards.

Clergy Endorse Fox's Thank You

That heading suggests press agent stuff, but the big idea is that you can do it, too, especially if you can tell your local clergy what was done in Chicago for the opening of Thank You at the Madison Theatre.

A preview was given at the house and Rev. John Charles Knox was so impressed that he asked permission to show the picture in his church to such of the clergy as had been unable to attend.

Naturally he was given every assistance, and this second showing brought out more ministers than did the first. Rev. H. W. Morton ran an appreciation in his contribution to the Sunday Tribune and Mr. Knox broadcast a chat over the American's wireless.

If it hits the Chicago ministers, you should be able to do something with it in your home town.

The title was worked into a paster with "Now showing" above and "Monroe Theatre" below the title, the paster being circular. More than one thousand taxis carried the pasters, and many stores lined up. For the stores there was also a larger sign reading "Every week is thank you week here. Our employees always say Thank You." Several hundred stores, including two chains, permitted these 13 x 13 cards to be affixed to their windows.

This was all a part of a "Thank You Week" drives, though weeks are a bit threadbare these days.

Still Packs 'Em

Apparently arguing that The Trouble With Wives was clothes, Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, incited his publicity star, Raymond B. Jones to stage a fashion show in connection with that Paramount.

They put on a show that made standing room the scarcest thing there was and spent very little extra money to get the capacity business, the hooked in store doing the production and most of the advertising.

The show was in four parts and consisted of street costumes, silks, evening gowns and wraps, each in an appropriate setting.

Several shoe and hosiery stores were tied to the hook-up cards arranged by the home office, and for these Jones contributed additional window displays.

Are you making your plans for a Christmas Kiddie Treat?

A Pointer

Guy Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, got a cutout of Tom Meighan into a drug store window because the lithograph shows him with a pointing finger. The figure was used to direct attention to a sign and to a general display of cosmetics, but the pointing hand can be used for any merchandise and will get you a window with a minimum of sales argument.

Wholesaled

Generally the rotogravure sheet on a picture is used as a newspaper supplement only in the small towns, but J. V. Carney, of the Rialto Theatre, Washington, landed a run of 60,000 on the Sunday Herald. This is pretty close to a record order.

Another paper, the Times, was hooked to a ghost story contest, apropos of phantoms in general. A big general campaign brought a satisfying box office report.

Hooking a Hardware Store to a Fashion Show

Radio N. Y. Show for The Phantom

Although intended primarily to help get interest in the Philadelphia opening of The Phantom of the Opera at the Aldine, the broadcasting of the score as being played at the New York showing of the picture was an aid throughout the North and Middle Atlantic States.

The picture has been nicely scored with plenty of thrill music and ballet stuff, and the music, by itself, suggests a good show. More than that it emphasized the New York run of the picture.

Backing this up, ten days before the opening a Philadelphia station put on a Phantom of the Opera who sang excerpts from Faust, the opera which largely figures in the story. He made several aerial appearances, always with a preliminary announcement. The announcer also mentioned the play. Another station also broadcast a seven minute resume of the New York press notices.

A music hook-up was secured with about seventy Victor dealers on the Faust records, which is a stunt that even the small towns should be able to work, and fifteen big book stores extra stocked the Leroux novel.

In addition to the usual posting, the local and suburban stations of the Reading were posted. As about half of the downtown employees use the railroads instead of the street cars, this was a stunt of real value.

And along Chestnut and Market streets the Phantom Red was played up in cosmetics and various articles of women's wear.

Al Feinman, of the New York Universal office, collaborated with the Stanley staff in working the stunts.

Lobby Wires

Instead of house-to-house distribution of the fake telegram, the Strand theatre, Seattle, gave them out to their departing patrons the week previous to the showing of Lightnin'.

These were on Postal Telegraph blanks, purporting to come from Jay Hunt to Albert Finkelstein, expressing his pleasure at the engagement of Lightnin'. The Postal paid the cost of the stunt and also made a display of the Lightnin' hook up cards in the windows of all their local offices.

THE LATEST FAD IN DRY GOOD STORE DUMMIES

Recently a New York store had most of its windows filled with wax models of picture stars. Here is a Pittsburgh window with a model of Patsy Ruth Miller in The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Note the effectiveness of the display—and copy.

Wild Susan

All of the lithographs and stills on Wild Wild Susan at the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., were upside down. The work was done on Saturday night and stood in the lobby of the closed house all day Sunday. Everyone was commenting upon the topside posting and wondering if the lobby man had found a bottle somewhere.

Monday morning all of the local papers carried an explanation to the effect that the lobby was supposed to represent the chaotic condition of Bebe Daniels' mind.

It was the only special stunt, but it carried the picture over.

Hooked Hardware to Fashion Show

Ever try hooking a hardware store to a fashion show? No one else ever did, that we recall, until Richard Brown [illegible] Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, [illegible]ked in with Universalist Lon B. Ramsdell on a fashion show to put over Carl Laemmle's Peacock Feathers.

The Cameraphone is not a large theatre. They had to use two grand pianos instead of an orchestra, and there were but six models, but local merchants loaned the best they had in stock and the show was really well worth the money. There even was a runway down the centre of the house, so everyone could get a good look at the dresses.

Of course the merchants all tied their windows to their display in the show, and gave a lot of publicity to the picture.

But the final touch came in the shape of a window display of labor savers for the kitchen and electric cookers for the dining table, with the inquiry: "What's the use of dressing up if you can't have these to cook with?" That was a pat as the Irishman who always figures in the funny stories.

Just goes to show that there is always one more thing you can do if you think hard enough.

Jazz Prologue

Getting away from the standard stunts on I'll Show You the Town, Milt Korach, of the New Broadway Theatre, Cleveland, centered his appeal on the cabaret locale. He dressed his stage to correspond to the pictured scene, put in three suitable vaudeville acts and announced a Jazz Carnival that brought in the crowd.

Favor hats were given all the women and there were 5,000 balloons and an equal number of candy samples, the latter supplied by a local concern. The front dressing matched the stage set in its carnival air.

How a Parisian Theatre Put Over Dr. Jack

Freshman Stunts From Many Cities

Most of the advertising for Harold Lloyd's latest comedy has been tied into the football season, for it was not without reason that the picture was held for release until the football season was about to open.

One of the favorite stunts has been to advertise with football schedules carrying announcement of The Freshman on the reverse. Rowland & Clark put out 25,000 of these in Pittsburgh for three of their houses, the Liberty, State and Blackstone.

They also used a "driverless" Ford, gaudily striped in camouflage style. The car carried a number of horns attached to the exhaust, and these were blown in an apparently mysterious fashion. The car also shot water and confetti from the radiator.

In Los Angeles thousands of toy balloons were released from the roof of the Daily News building by Joybana Howland, Lloyd's leading woman. Some had passes tied to the strings, but most were just balloons. Heavily advertised by the newspaper, this was a knockout stunt.

In Worcester, Mass., the famous Holy Cross football team attended a performance at the Olympia Theatre, and in Memphis the local advertisers collaborated in a full page in the roto section of the Commercial-Appeal. The picture played Loew's Palace.

In Chicago the American was tied to an essay contest with 100 prizes for the best stories on the greatest thrill enjoyed by the writer in a football contest or at a game.

Leslie Whelan, of the Lloyd staff, engineered a number of these stunts. He is a Saunders graduate.

For a Co-op

Using a double truck on The Iron Horse, the Palace Theatre, Racine, Wis., supplied each advertisement with the picture of a former president of the United States with the query: "Can you name the presidents since The Iron Horse?" Thirty passes were awarded the ones who came closest to the correct list.

Mechanical Figure Made Into a Lloyd

John N. Carroll of the Victory Theatre, Tampa., Fla., put over The Freshman with a number of windows, including one in a hardware store, which offered a display of sporting goods and football wear. The store had one of those mechanical figures which raise cards out of a box, the figure being that of a clown. Wire spectacles, a freshman cap, a sweater made the figure over into a very passable copy of Harold Lloyd.

Double Posting

George E. Brown posted like a circus for Don Q at the Palace Theatre, Memphis. He not only used twice as much paper, but he kept it up two weeks instead of one. He also increased his advertising in the newspapers in consideration of much more reading matter, and he put the Don over to all the house could stand.

Girl Represented Spirit of New Paramount House

Miss Paramount Was New Theatre Opener

Here's some good dope for those who were about to open or reopen a theatre. This was worked in Reading, Pa., for the new Paramount State Theatre, but it can be adapted to any town.

The house was scheduled to open October 12, but this later was changed to the tenth. On September 28 a clever woman arrived in town and was met at the train by the staff of the State Theatre and newspaper men, touring the business section on the way to her hotel. She naturally was attractive and quick witted, and was known only as Miss Paramount.

The following day she visited the hospitals, carrying flowers to the bedridden. She also was guest at a dance for disabled war veterans and made appearances at two of the local theatres. At each place she made a little talk about the opening of the State. She was guest at a restaurant for lunch and also took a beauty treatment at a local parlor, both of the events being written up in the newspapers.

Gave Roses and Cards

Wednesday she visited the stores, accompanied by reporters, and gave out 2,000 roses and 5,000 announcement cards. In the evening she sang from a local radio station, told all about the State and offered passes to those who would apply. Within ten minutes there were ninety telephone requests for tickets over the four trunk lines leading to the station, and 350 mail applications were made. She also talked at the Rajah Mosque and the Capitol Theatre.

On Friday she repeated the shopping tours and spoke at the theatres, while she was back on Saturday to announce the shift in the opening date.

Monday the program was much the same, but on Tuesday she visited the industrial plants and talked Paramount in each. She also was a guest of the Sisterhood of Temple Sholem, where she gave several songs in addition to her talk.

Wednesday, in addition to the usual routine she was a guest at the state convention of Kiwanis clubs and attended the luncheon and the ball.

The broadcasting was repeated on Thursday, and both Thursday and Friday she shopped and visited the theatres.

All of this was reported by the newspapers, to give the fullest publicity.

Saturday she motored to the theatre with a police escort and acted as hostess. Local merchants loaned her $20,000 worth of diamonds, and furs to the value of $2,500, while her afternoon gown, costing $175 and a $250 evening dress also were loaned.

The result was that the line started to form in front of the State at seven in the morning, and the 1,200 seat house played to standees up to eleven in the evening, competing with the dedication of a monument and three scoreboards giving the World Series results.

The big idea was to give a personality to the campaign. She was the theatre to all intents, and more interesting than the brick and stone she represented.

It gave the personal touch to an impersonal event.

Mr. Lindgren is under O. T. Taylor, in Aberdeen, Wash., now and he and Jim Emery are doing their stuff under Taylor's direction. This banner is six by twelve feet, mostly yellows, reds and greens. It possessed high visibility.

Spotlighted

One of the advantages of being someone in your home town was demonstrated the other day when Frank J. Miller was designated as the announcer for "Augusta Night" at the Atlanta Journal's radio studios.

Mr. Miller arranged to have the program repeated in the theatre, and the local paper ran a story, with a picture, for two days, announcing that the manager of the Modjeska Theatre would represent the town when it went on the air. It even threw in a mention of The Midshipman, the current attraction. It made for a packed house, for every one without a radio came to listen in.

Old Bills

Old railroad schedules and advertisements were part of the historical display in the lobby of the Colonial Theatre, Indianapolis, during the run of The Iron Horse. One was a poster of "The old reliable Bellefontaine route'" and another a time table of the Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad, announced as the "Winter arrangement" of trains for 1884. These are contrasted with a model of one of the New York Central's most modern locos.

Indians were added to make for interest, but Indians and locomotive ballyhoos fail to give us a thrill any more. They're still good, but there are so many of them.

TYPE WOULD BE BETTER

value of mortises. He has a house artist who is rather good at figures, so he lets him draw the entire display, and the man is a better artist than he is advertiser. Take this display for "He's a Prince" as an example. The picture is carried in the circle. There is a really good semi-cartoon of Griffith, and you get the name clearly. But the arm with the hat extends into the space and the title is badly cramped. Moreover there is a cross on the "P" which results in the letter being half white and half black. You don't get that the first glance and read "He's a rince." Then you go back and get the big idea. Probably the artist does not realize that to letter that title in one quarter the size, but legibly and straight lined will give him a better display than with the larger letters filling the space. It doesn't sound reasonable, but it is a fact. The smaller letter will not only be more legible, and therefore more distinct, but it will permit a little white space that will still further aid the display. Probably it would not pay to mortise under the right arm to let in type, but the lettering should be more distinct. This looks as though the lettering had been put in with a brush instead of a pen. This makes for a thick, unreadable letter. But the other spaces, the vaudeville sections, could have been mortised to let in type with no trouble and at very little cost, and all type would have made a much better display. This is a four nines, with the top trimmed off slightly because the copy was pasted to the letter. In that space mortising is a simple proposition and setting in the type is an easy matter. The mortise in the circle would be awkward. Here hand lettering can pass, but in the larger panels with square sides, the setting of a mortise is as simple as setting into the form. The work here is all brush. If we get a result like this from a staff artist we think we would tie him in a chair for a couple of hours and make him look at his botch while we lectured him on his sins. The other example is smaller, a three five and a halfs. Here there is more pen lettering and less brush work. The names are better carried, but the playing days are almost wholly lost through being buried in the line background. We do not know just how they will come through in the cut, but on the original you may entirely overlook them unless you scrutinize the space carefully. Of course the regular patrons know about the split week bookings, but it won't hurt to name the days plainly. Here The Halfway Girl, the film feature, is slighted for the vaudeville acts. It gets prominence because it has a space all to itself, but evidently the press work is trusted to put the story over. The advertisements are merely announcements and not sellers. This is the point where improvement should be made. A little less art work and a little more argument would help not a little. Mr.

A LITTLE BETTER

Long has a lot of bad examples to cite in his defense, for there is no section of the country so hopelessly devoted to "art" work ads as New England. The Boston newspapers are a stench in the advertising nostrils, and the small towns follow the example of the one big city. Mr. Long is doing about what all other New England exhibitors are doing, but we think that if he studied out the working ideas of type ads he would find that it would help the attendance. A single cut and border work would be better than these elaborate art layouts. At the same time they woul be cheaper. If he makes a switch, we shall be glad to see the new examples.

Good Attractor From the Stills

This eleven and a half inches across four looks like a pretty sizable ad, but really it is only a part of an advertisement for the Wuerth Theatre, Ypsilanti, Mich., which explains why no signature shows. It makes an attractive space, and the cut carries out the idea of the title with the various characters from the play carrying a day apiece. It appears to be the theatre's own idea. The faces are not very strong likenesses, but the general idea gets over, and the players are listed in the panel on the left, so that they are properly sold, though the main credit goes to Al Christie, as is proper, since you'll remember that it was Christie who made Charley's Aunt, and you could not ask for a better recommendation than that. It's a nice type display and carries good argument, though it would seem that one of the real selling points should be a hint as to the nature of the story. One point to be noted is the way the title stands out. It is benday lettering. In a solid black it would not be as prominent as in the lighter tone. This does not sound logical, but it is, if you will realize that a straight black letter would be in stronger competition with the black cards the players carry. It gets more contrast as it stands, and contrast, not size or blackness is what always counts. We do not believe that there is any exception to that rule.

A Producers' Distributing Release

MADE FROM THE STILLS

Freshman Ad Is Given Long Drop

J. W. Sayre sends in a display on The Freshman that is so good we are tipping it over on its side to get it into the space. This is the usual space for the Liberty Theatre, Seattle; a cross-column fours less the space taken by the heading, or a drop of a little more than twenty inches across the four. And most of this 170 square inches is white space, and the white space is what sells The Freshman. The picture is entering its third, and final, week at the house. It has been pretty thoroughly sold in the preceding weeks, and now the main point is merely to give emphasis to its retention. That 20 line "Come" will sell more tickets than any elaborate argument, and the "Why dilate on the obvious?" is a touch that convinces. This is a style of display in which Mr. Sayre is at his best. He was using white space to sell when most managers gauged the value of their space by the number of words they were able to cram into it. Even the house signature is held back because in that area a one column slug is just as prominent as would be a four column enlargement and the smaller cut permits the better display. Up in Oregon and Washington they do even their advertising in a big way and use spaces that would bankrupt some theatres. It's pretty work, where you can afford it, and effective.

Sells Many Seats With Five Inches

Here are two good examples of the way Cliff Lewis puts over his pictures at the Strand theatre, Syracuse, without much cost. Both are 35 by 2, which is just about a two two and a halfs. These are not standard style, for one dates back to last Summer. Cliff waits until he gets fifty or seventy-five samples before he shoots them in. The panel on Dix in The Lucky Devil shows what display may be had in a small space with comparatively straight makeup. The star name seems to have been cut from a gets the same relative display. There are four lines about the picture, the news reel and the comedy, and a special panel for a local feature tying to a celebration. And his space bill was for only five inches. Twenty inches probably would not have sold a single additional ticket, so what's the use of paying for the additional fifteen inches just to be a good fellow in the eyes of the advertising solicitor. Cliff can't see it. He's working for his boss and not for the newspaper. For Sills, in The Knockout, he cants the panel to get a little more display. Here he gives almost equal value to star and play, though setting Sills' name in all caps gives this a little more display, though the title is more legible. He gives two lines of sales talk and three lines to the other features and still has time to tell that the house is "Cool as the mountain top. The ice plant does it." In the reduction the six point lines look very small, but it is a clear letter and as easy to read as the average ten point bold. We are using many of these Lewis ads because we think they are admirable examples of good display in a reasonable space. Sometimes it may pay to take a half page splash, but as a rule it is more profitable to hold the space bills small if you can get the display. Of course you cannot get the same effect with five inches where two or three other houses use twenty to forty inches, but unless you have to fight along those lines, it will pay to hold the space down and get the display through white space and the intelligent use of small lines.

on a number of titles and always with success. Apparently the M-G exploiters use this whenever they get a chance, knowing that in these days of paint and powder the stunt will interest almost every woman—and all men. Generally the stunt is purely a store window proposition, but in Lima, Ohio, the Sigma Theatre got the advantage of a store two threes announcing the event. The store evidently figured it would be worth while to use the newspapers for its display and get a still larger crowd. The idea is good, but the copy is a little too formal. It is just an announcement. A boldface, "The Art of Make-up" would catch the eye better than the name of the demonstrator, which means nothing at all. The name could have gone down to a ten point, with an eighteen point line for the stunt with profit to both the theatre and the store. The idea is not to put over Miss Macateer, but the display, and this should have been made the high light. But don't wait for an M-G man to come around and work for you. Sell it to your own druggist with a clever local girl in the window if you cannot arrange for aid from the makers of the cosmetics. There are many titles other than The Slave of Fashion for which this stunt will work, though that title seems to have been selected with an eye to its hook-up possibilities. It has been worth a lot of extra money to exhibitors quite apart from the drag of the title with the women customers.

Flied Freshman

Pat Argust used a novel advertising curtain for Harold Lloyd in The Freshman at the Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs. A drop was lowered with a huge pair of glasses outlined in scrim. When the house lights went up, the glasses faded, giving place to a large football on which was lettered the announcement of the attraction.

A Banner Idea

For Griffith in A Regular Fellow D. Roscoe Faunce made a lobby display of two court flunkies carrying an enormous silk hat, brim up, on which was a picture of the comedian and the necessary announcement. It made a striking display and did not require much building.

Three thousand doorknobs were put out on the same title.

Long Runs Common in San Francisco

LONG runs are becoming common in San Francisco houses, with both downtown and suburban theatres making fewer changes than formerly. "The Pony Express" and "The Iron Horse" started the Imperial and St. Francis Theatres off in good shape this fall and the records for long runs set by these have already been surpassed by "The Freshman" and "The Merry Widow." The latter has been shown for four weeks and is starting on its fifth week, after which it will be succeeded by "The Phantom of the Opera." "Little Annie Rooney," with Mary Pickford, has been shown three weeks at the Imperial and the end is not in sight. This picture will be followed by an indefinite run of "That Royle Girl." Many neighborhood houses which ordinarily make two or three changes of program a week, have shown features for a full week. In the legitimate field the President Theatre has broken all former local records by showing "The Best People" for more than six months.

E. I. Parker, treasurer of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, T. H., left recently for his Island home, following a conference with San Francisco officials and stockholders of the firm. Joel C. Cohen and Louis R. Greenfield of this concern will attend the annual meeting of stockholders to be held at Honolulu early in the year.

The Famous Players-Lasky interests, which purchased the ground lease on the Granada Theatre several months ago from the Herbert L. Rothschild Entertainment, Inc., has now acquired the realty holdings in fee simple for a sum of more than $2,000,000.

Harry David, for some time house manager of the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, has joined the Herbert L. Rothschild organization and has been made managing director of the Coliseum and Alexandria Theatres, recently taken over by these interests.

Frank Whitbeck, director of publicity for West Coast Theatres, Inc., with headquarters at San Francisco, is making a tour of the theatres in the southern part of the state and while away will assist in the opening of two new houses.

Ground has been broken at Telegraph avenue and Fortieth street, Oakland, Cal., for a large neighborhood house for East Bay Theatres, Inc., a subsidiary organization of West Coast Theatres, Inc. The theatre will seat 2,500.

Frank Newman, for some time manager of the State Theatre at Stockton, Cal., has been transferred to Long Beach and has been succeeded by Ben F. Giroux.

Herman Kersken, recently appointed manager of the White Theatre, Fresno, Cal., was a recent visitor at the San Francisco headquarters of West Coast Theatres, Inc.

Work will be commenced early in January on a picture house on San Pablo avenue, near Delaware street, Berkeley, Cal. The theatre will seat 1,500 and be conducted by the Golden State Theatre & Realty Company of San Francisco. It will be ready for occupancy in June.

The Bear State Theatres, Inc., which recently acquired the incompleted McNamara-Winkelman Theatre at Martinez, Cal., has arranged to have work resumed on this house and plan to open it early in the spring.

The Capitol Theatre, San Francisco, which has been dark much of the time of late, has been reopened for a week's run of Ufa's "Siegfried."

Denver Exhibitor and Editor in Debate

B. P. McCORMICK of the Liberty Theatre, Florence, Col., represented the screen in a debate before the Women's Club of Florence, Col., November 23. The subject was "The Power of the Screen vs. the Press." His opponent was the editor of the local Florence Daily Citizen. The affair was awaited with unusual interest by the film people of Denver.

Rick Ricketson was surprised at his home last Monday evening by the present manager and employes of the Paramount Rialto and Victory Theatres of Denver. The occasion was a farewell demonstration to Mr. Ricketson, who has retired as managing director of the above theatres. A. H. Vincent, his successor, was toastmaster, assisted by Wiles Hallock, who presented Rick with a beautiful scarf pin as a token in behalf of the theatre employes.

M. C. Gerhart is rapidly recovering from his recent operation. A number of film men who called upon him last week state that he is sitting up and looking fine, and that he expects to be out within the next two or three weeks. Mr. Gerhart recently submitted to an operation which required him to be on the operating table for almost three hours. He is the owner and manager of the Empress Theatre, Fort Collins, Col., and one of the veteran exhibitors of the territory.

"The Big Parade"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

One of the Greatest Pictures of All Time, Vital, Vivid, Human, Humorous, Tremendous

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

TREMENDOUS yet human, powerful but tender, forceful at the same time sympathetic, dramatic as well as humorous, spectacular and romantic; such is "The Big Parade," which leaves you stumped to find adjectives inclusive enough to even adequately suggest the breadth and depth of the appeal of this magnificent and remarkable Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture which plays upon the whole gamut of human emotions.

From every standpoint, "The Big Parade" easily takes its place among the greatest productions that the screen has brought forth, for it has everything. Yes, it is a war picture but unlike any war picture you have ever seen. The appeal is entirely different for the World War has been approached from a new angle. War made remarkably vital, dramatic, realistic, and presented against a background that is intensely human, fairly bristling with wonderful natural comedy, woven around a romance that is beautiful, powerful and simple, and interspersed with touches that are really life itself.

So far as the bare outlines of the story go, there is scant difference between this and many others, but here the similarity ends for very angle of the development and handling, acting and direction strikes out along new lines and sets new records for others to shoot at. The wave of patriotism which sweeps the country with America's entry into the war finds a wealthy idler, an iron-worker and a bartender among the first to enlist. "Over there" they become buddies, the regenerated idler falls in love with a French girl. Then comes the call to the front lines resulting in the death of the other two while the wealthy chap loses a leg. Returning home he finds his fiancee has transferred her affections to his stay-at-home brother, so he goes back to his little French sweetheart on the other side.

It is not in the plot itself that the tremendous appeal of "The Big Parade" lies but in the individuality, the power and above all the reality of its treatment. Here is a picture that makes you feel that you are seeing war as it is, not as the propagandists paint it. Not that it has been stripped of its glory and heroism, it is all there, so is the tragedy and some of the horror and the inexorable driving tremendousness of the thing that makes men puppets and cogs in the big machine. It fairly sweeps you off your feet.

Take for example the deep significance of the title itself. What is "The Big Parade"? It is the never ending line of men and guns and more men and more guns going ceaselessly to the front, and there is another "parade," the ruined wounded men being brought back to the base hospitals.

The first half of this picture is one of the most tremendously human and realistic things we have ever seen. With broad swift touches King Vidor introduces the three buddies, contrasting types thrown together by the war, shows their transition to soldiers and places them in a French town behind the lines, where the remaining footage deals with their experiences before the call to action comes. This is a remarkable human document, vivid, real, amusing, sympathetic. We see these boys as they are, stripped of their glamour, just real fellows, nothing idealistic. Just imagine the sequence when they reach their headquarters, utterly fatigued, are billeted in a hay loft above a stable surrounded by a muddy yard and before they can rest are called out to shovel away a manure pile. This gives you an idea of the unvarnished realism. These three chaps get you, so does the little French girl. You just live with them, their experiences, sympathize with their troubles and laugh heartily at the many funny things that happen. You will enjoy the hero's courting of the French girl when neither can understand the other's language, his teaching her to chew gum, the hard time the boys have to rig up a shower bath, the amusing army songs, the troubles with the M. P.'s, etc.

All this builds up wonderful and warm-hearted sympathy so that when the call to the front comes there is tremendous drama and one of the biggest punches we have ever seen where the hero is being rushed away with the others and the girl is trying frantically to find him. There is a whale of a tug at the heart when he tears himself from her embrace and hanging on to the wagon she is dragged along the road. Here King Vidor has by a new and daring treatment achieved one of the most powerful emotional effects we have ever seen, for against this appeal to the heart he is simultaneously putting over the tremendousness and power of the war machine. He shows the hero dragged away with the bunch in a lorry and the poor forlorn little girl standing in the road while soldiers, wagons, guns, etc., by the hundreds go past alternately blotting her from view. Boy, what a "kick" this scene gets over.

The second half of the picture is WAR, grim, relentless, real. With the big parade to the front, the introduction to the realities of war comes when an enemy plane swoops down and deals death to the marching column. The going into battle of the tired soldiers, the advance, steady, continual, of the soldiers though swept continually by cannon and machine gun fire, the dropping of man after man, the ever advancing soldiers stepping over the bodies of their fallen comrades and keeping on and on. The refuge of the three buddies in a shell-hole, their jests in the face of death, their heroism which results in two being killed while the third loses a leg. The human touch where the hero instead of bayoneting a wounded German, gives him his last cigarette and then takes it from his dead lips and smokes it himself. All this presents a never-to-be forgotten picture.

John Gilbert gives a truly fine portrayal of the hero. Tom O'Brien is excellent as the bartender, but it is Karl Kane as the rough, gawky, tobacco-chewing ironworker who gives the best performance. He is absolutely the real article and contributes most of the comedy. There is a whale of a laugh where he blows out the candle by spitting tobacco juice at it and a laugh and a tear when he uses his "spitting" ability in the shell-hole to determine who shall crawl out to almost certain death in silencing a machine gun nest. Renee Adoree as the French girl could not be improved upon, and all of the rest of the players are ideally cast.

Laurence Stallings in the first instance provided a story that approached the great war from a new angle, but after all it is King Vidor's direction amounting to a stroke of genius that really makes "The Big Parade." Mr. Vidor has succeeded in producing a big vital picture that suggests better than has ever been done before the tremendous power and force of war, at the same time preserving the human note of the individuals and making the whole thing from the most significant detail of the setting and action of any of the characters to the hand-

"The Unguarded Hour"—First National

Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon in Emotional And Gripping Story That Should Please Fans

STRIKING views of society life both in America and, supposedly, in Italy, form the backgrounds of a drama of intense interest in "The Unguarded Hour," a First National picture presenting Milton Sills with Doris Kenyon and an excellent cast. The story is one of temptation to yield to the glamor of moonlight, but the suggestion of sex is not unduly stressed and should not offend audiences. The plot is tense, emotional and gripping at all times, though the climax is not wholly in doubt, and the picture as a whole, embellished as it is with beautiful backgrounds, should prove a fine box office asset.

Lambert Hillyer's direction is generally effective. Milton Sills and Miss Kenyon perform exceptionally well, especially the latter in a sort of flapper role. Each one of the other players earns special mention. The opening is strong, with a scene where a father experiments with a revolver to learn if his daughter really loves a youth, on the theory that she will protect what she loves, and the plot is smoothly and dramatically developed. A striking scene is that of an aeroplane crash into a radio aerial tower. Excellent comedy affords relief for the tense drama, one particularly amusing instance being where the heroine fakes drowning to be saved by the hero and then saves his sister from drowning.

Bryce Gilbert, business man, shows his daughter Virginia the folly of an intended elopement with a youth. She goes to Italy and meets Duke Andrea d'Arona, a young and handsome man, who is puzzled by her jazzy American ways and doubts her character. Virginia is found with a certain male flirt in her room and misunderstood until it develops that the duke's sister has been misled by the male flirt and is listening in another room. The sister kills herself and the tragedy brings the duke and the American girl to an understanding of their love.

"Wages for Wives"—William Fox

Amusing Comedy and Pleasing Human Interest In Film Version of John Golden Stage Play

WILLIAM FOX in "Wages for Wives" is offering an adaptation of the play, "Chicken Feed," another of the series of John Golden stage successes. Frank Borzage directed the picture with Jacqueline Logan and Creighton Hale in the leading roles.

"Wages for Wives" is a comedy drama based on the idea of a new bride persuading her mother and a friend to join with her in leaving their husbands until they agree to a fifty-fifty split on their wages. The husbands rebel and decide to keep house for themselves, while the wives go to a big boarding house. Eventually, after the women have almost eaten their hearts out with longing, and a vamp has succeeded in complicating matters, reconciliations occur after the recalcitrant husbands have thoroughly sickened of their attempts to show their independence.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

The story is presented as a comedy, Director Borzage having steered along a middle course. There has been no attempt at preachment or propaganda and on the other hand while the humor is along broad comedy lines it is not really farce comedy, although some of the situations border on farce. Mr. Borzage, who has proven very successful as a human-interest director, has effectively played up this angle and also capitalized on the humorous possibilities of the situations. "Wages for Wives" reaches the screen as an easy-moving and amusing picture that should prove pleasing to the majority of patrons.

Jacqueline Logan is pretty as usual and charming both as the shrinking sweetheart and rebellious wife, and Creighton Hale is adequate opposite. David Butler furnishes a number of laughs as a wise-cracking chap who kids his married friends. Dan Mason is good in the character role of the village cupid, while Earle Foxe and ZaSu Pitts as one couple and Claude Gillingwater and Margaret Seddon as the others are excellent.

"The Wyoming Wildcat"—Film Booking Offices

Familiar Appeal of a Western With Added Human Interest in Second Tom Tyler Film

AS the second of the series of Westerns in which he is being starred by F. B. O., Tom Tyler is presented in "The Wyoming Wildcat," which, while containing the familiar punch situations of this type of entertainment has considerably more than the usual amount of heart appeal. This is introduced in the person of a little orphan adopted and cruelly treated by the miserly villain who with his scapegrace son seeks by fair and foul means to gain control of a ranch belonging to a girl. Tom appears as the hero who is always on hand to thwart the villainy and wins the girl's love.

Tom's performance confirms the favorable impression produced during his first picture. He has a likeable personality and genial smile and is an expert horseman. He subdues a "man-killing" broncho and does plenty of fine riding and hard fighting. There is a real punch in the scene where he jumps with his horse from a cliff into the water to rescue the heroine. Virginia Southern is attractive and capable in this role, and little Frankie Darro gives a fine performance as the kid. The remaining roles are all satisfactorily handled.

"The Wyoming Wildcat" should prove a satisfactory attraction where "westerns" are liked for it contains a good proportion of all of the elements which have proven their popularity in pictures of this kind, plus the appeal of the "kiddie" angle, which will make it especially alluring to the children.

"Morals for Men"—Tiffany Productions

Conway Tearle and Agnes Ayres in Interesting Story Dealing With Double Standard of Morals

USING as the basis for the plot the fact that the world judges the moral conduct of men and women by totally different standards, Tiffany Productions in "Morals for Men" is offering a picture that should prove thoroughly entertaining to the great mass of theatregoers.

Joe and Bessie living in defiance of the moral code have sank to the depths. Bessie believing Joe has taken their meagre savings leaves him and becomes a manicure, finally marrying a wealthy chap who turns out to be stingy and grouchy. Joe saves Marion, a rich girl, from drowning and eventually makes good as a civil engineer and marries her. Eventually Joe and Bessie meet and Joe in helping her to keep her secret incurs Marion's jealousy. Bessie is blackmailed by a former acquaintance and in desperation decides to tell her husband, but to aid Joe she accuses Wallace with whom Marion is preparing to go away. Finally Joe and Marion are reconciled, but Bessie learns that the world never forgives a woman who sins even though she has reformed, and she decides to end it all.

With the assistance of a fine cast featuring Conway Tearle and Agnes Ayres and containing several other popular players, all of whom give sincere and forceful performances, Director Bernie Hyman has made from the Gouverneur Morris story a picture that is smoothly developed, filled with good drama and interest holding from beginning to end. The leading players have never done better work and the entire support ends wholeheartedly into the spirit of the story. As a result, coincidences and rather implausible situations are overbalanced and the majority of spectators will follow the fortunes of the characters with unabated interest and find this a pleasing and satisfactory photoplay.

"Hogan's Alley"—Warner Brothers

Monte Blue and Patsy Ruth Miller in Film That Has Wide Variety of Audience Appeal

WITH Monte Blue and Patsy Ruth Miller in the featured roles, Warner Brothers is offering "Hogan's Alley," a heart-interest action thrill melodrama with an abundance of comedy relief.

Patsy is the scrappy little daughter of an ignorant lazy Irishman who lives in Hogan's Alley. Her sweetheart Lefty a prize-fighter does not suit her father who wants her to marry a rich man. Lefty is arrested when his opponent in the fight fails to regain consciousness. Patsy is hurt and Lefty calls a swell doctor who takes a shine to Patsy and invites her and her father to his lodge. He proves to be a villain. Lefty follows the train and his car is wrecked by the locomotive. The train runs away, Lefty hires an aeroplane transfers to the train, knocks out the villain and stops the engine just before it runs into a landslide.

Built with the box-office in view it would seem that the director has attempted to bring into the plot nearly every angle of audience appeal. The result is a conglomeration of audience hokum that will probably prove entertaining to a large portion of the average audience but will seem artificial, forced and improbable to the discriminating patrons.

There is an Irish romance, heart interest, a street fight, the hiding of the hero and his escape over roofs, his return to aid the girl and his capture, a snappy prize fight, more comedy when the ignorant father tries to step out in society, and the thrill melodram at the climax. All of this material is of a familiar type and has proved its value. There are a number of amusing moments, the heart interest is effective and the thrill stuff contains a number of effective punches for the melodrama fans.

"The Scrappin' Kid"—Universal

Typical Western Touches with More Than Usual Heart-Interest in Picture Starring Art Acord

ART ACORD'S newest starring vehicle in his series for Universal is a Western in which more than the usual stress has been placed on the building up of the human interest angles. As usual, however, there is a goodly proportion of familiar western atmosphere and action with a climax involving fine horseback riding over the hills and plenty of hand-to-hand fighting.

Art appears as a chap who lives along on a little ranch. During a forest fire he saves a young girl and her small brother and sister. Mail bandits who have robbed a train hide in the hills and finally venture forth and make Art a prisoner. He escapes and sends his dog to the sheriff. The bandits capture the girl and take her to their lair.

Art pursues and fights them, and the sheriff appears and takes them into custody. Art wins the girl and a reward to pay off the mortgage on his ranch.

Art's role is a congenial one and Velma Connor is very appealing as the girl. There are number of good heart-interest scenes and effective comedy and Art's horse does some clever stunts. The manner in which Art takes care of not only the orphans but a little sick pig and a wounded calf provides good touches. There is good suspense in the scenes with the bandits and quite a lot of pleasing comedy centering around Art's mistaking the girl's age and treating her like a little child. Jimmy Bowden is very good as the little brother.

Altogether, "The Scrappin' Kid" gets somewhat away from the usual formulas and should prove pleasing average entertainment for theatregoers.

"Irish Luck"—Paramount

Tom Meighan's Made-In-Ireland Melodrama Has More Than Usual Allowance of Action

YOU may not be superstitious, but you'll admit that there is luck in the shamrock, if it is personally gathered in Ireland. Certainly it was good luck for Tom Meighan, for he gets in "Irish Luck" a better vehicle that he has had for a year or two.

Just why this should be so is not clearly apparent. The plot is trite meldorama. It has been offered scores of times, and often with much more vivid action. It is not the authentic backgrounds, for twice the story is halted with a travelogue first in Dublin and then in Killarney. Both are interesting and the latter really beautiful. It is not the star himself, for he is still the same Meighan with the pleasing personality he always affects. It is not the acting of the cast, for while uniformly good, it is not startlingly so.

In a word, you don't know just why you like it, but you do. There is a certain smoothness to the advancement of the action (when it does advance), a certain conviction to the scenes in Killarney, a pleasant interpolation of a bunch of juvenile rooters for their favorite cop that gets over well, but none seem to be strong enough to prove a saving grace, yet, somehow, the picture is much, very much better than Mr. Meighan's recent average.

Scenario by Thomas J. Geraghty.
Directed by Victor Heerman.
Length—7,008 feet.

Tom Donahue, a Fifth Avenue traffic policeman, wins a trip to Ireland in a newspaper contest. He looks like Lord Fitzhugh, nephew of a nobleman, who has cut him out of his will in favor of his cousin. On his deathbed the Earl longs to make up with Fitzhugh. Fitzhugh's sister, Gwendolyn, meets Tom and takes him back to Killarney with her and when Fitzhugh fails to appear persuades Tom to impersonate him and gains the fortune. Eventually Tom frees Fitzhugh who has been lured to Killarney and wins the girl.

Lois Wilson has seldom been more delightful than as Gwen. Cecil Humphreys is far remote from the typical villain, and yet excellently bad, and Ernest Lawford has a few powerful scenes as the dying Earl.

There are some finely done double exposures and dozens of scenes of rare photographic beauty, but sincere direction, which carries conviction, seems to be the chief merit of the story.

"The Only Thing"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel in Colorful And Pleasing Elinor Glyn Story of Ardent Love

IN her newest production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "The Only Thing," Elinor Glyn is offering a romantic story laid in a mythical kingdom, based on a story written by her and directed by Jack Conway under her supervision. Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagle are cast in the leading roles.

Like the majority of her stories, "The Only Thing" is a story of extremely ardent love that makes light of seemingly insurmountable difficulties to win its ends. There is no stressing of the sex angles the whole story centering on the romantic lines. A handsome and titled Englishman visits a Balkan kingdom and falls madly in love with a young princess who has come to marry the elderly, grouchy and ugly king. He determines to save her even against her will and so daring and ardent is his lovemaking that she is about to consent when she determines that duty to the state comes first. A revolution occurs and the hero when he finds that death has been decreed for all aristocrats, who are tied in pairs and send out to drown in leaky barges, contrives to be paired with her. A warship sent by her country saves them and they find happiness together.

A feature of this production is the remarkable quality of the photography and the striking pictorial effects produced in a number of scenes by the simplicity and scarcity of the furnishings in the castle scenes and the striking contrasts in black and white. The use of black back drops and even black flooring causes the figure to stand out in cameo-like relief. Naturally in a story of this kind there are some large exterior sets and the revolutionary sequences present opportunities for the use of mobs of several hundred persons.

The romantic angle of the story is pleasing and will especially delight the romantically inclined. There are a number of humorous touches growing legitimately out of the story. The revolutionary sequences with the rise of the peasants, the setting up of a ragamuffin tribunal and the treatment of the aristocrats strongly suggests the French revolution but the hero's steam yacht and the arrival of a modern battleship brings the action up-to-date.

We have never seen Eleanor Boardman look more beautiful than she does as the Princess and certainly Conrad Nagel was never so handsome as in his court uniform and wearing a tiny mustache. He is certainly a sight to make the feminine hearts flutter. Both give exceptionally fine performances and the other roles in the large cast are well handled. Arthur Edmund Carewe appears as the revolutionary leader, Edward Connelly as the king and Ned Sparks as the hero's valet.

The story is highly improbable and manifestly intended solely to entertain. With its ardent dashing, sweeping romance, colorful settings, melodramatic mob stuff and touches of humor, and the fine acting of the cast it should accomplish its purpose, and especially delight the romantically inclined.

ling of the most spectacular scene with hundreds of men, guns, wagons, etc., produce the impression that it is all real, that it is war as it is, with its horror, tragedy and grim relentlessness, with its beauty, heroism and romance.

Truly a remarkable picture, one to fill the box-office to overflowing, for all, even the most nervous female will be caught and transported along in its majestic sweep.

About That Buck We're Shelling Out

WE'RE getting a good kick out of handing over a dollar for any major error that one of you folks writes us to point out. The letters are coming along often enough to show that you're taking real interest in helping us make this the most accurate Chart being published.

But, remember this, please!—Major errors, such as wrong feature footage, a parenthesis left off after a star name—or a release eliminated as we do cut them out at top of list when we add new releases—those aren't major errors. They don't work any hardship on exhibitors.

Last week we got three different letters from exhibitors—glad to get 'em. They brought out the point that Paramount's "Golden Princess" footage was away out. One said correct footage was "less than 7,000"—another gave it from an exchange measurement as 6,400, and the third had it 6,502.

So you see, prints differ SOME in different places—BUT—these boys will get the buck because we were away up around 8,000, as we got it with the information published with the review of that film. But it shows you that minor differences are bound to occur—just wise us up when they're REAL ERRORS.

Oh, yes—the New York Paramount office gives that footage on "Golden Princess" as 6,546.

What Is Your Idea of Balance?

PROGRAM Balance is a study. Program Balance depends upon a producer's or manager's ability as a showman. Program Balance is the keynote by which one may secure an established clientele of satisfied patrons. One of the greatest obstacles we encounter in program analysis is Monotony. Monotony is due to one of two things—Repetition or Similarity. By Repetition we mean the same type of acts week in and week out. By Similarity we mean the lack of diversity in an individual program. The program that fits Broadway may not fit Chicago, and it may not be up to the standards in Los Angeles, and the Los Angeles program may not click on Broadway.

These are the high spots, but the man in the smaller city—the managers and producers of the houses outside of these centers, who form the backbone of this presentation business—depend ofttimes too much on what Broadway, Chicago or Los Angeles are doing. Program Balance depends entirely on the manager's or producer's ability to catch the spirit of the community with which he is identified. It is more difficult to secure a program balance in the smaller towns than in the larger cities. This is due to the audience complex. One is 50 per cent. transient and the other is 95 per cent. regular.

We would like to secure from various producers and managers an idea of what they consider an ideal program. This necessitates a generalization, but it will prove helpful to the man in the areas from which these ideas come. For instance, Eric Clarke, managing director of the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, sent us an idea which we published a few weeks ago, relative to his program makeup. We have received many favorable kick-backs, and we wish to enlarge the scope of activity. You who are in the South, in the Southwest, in the West, the Middle West, North, New England, what do you consider the ideal program balance for your territory? Back of all of this is the thought towards a standardization. We are on the threshold of something new and something big in this business. Your program balance and your ideas may be the very straws which will indicate which way the wind blows.

Short Subject Month Opportunities

DURING the past week we have been able to learn many of the details of the campaign to be conducted by the Short Features Association. The campaign will be one of nationwide exploitation and all short subject producers will be represented. Particular attention should be given this month by all producers as it is a golden opportunity and one in which the producer may find his "place in the sun." It was a happy thought when this suggestion was propounded, and is an evidence of progression on the part of the short subject producers that the idea was immediately set to work. There is no reason for a producer to complain that he cannot secure suitable subject matter; that he has the inability to secure novelties, as there are dozens of ideas pounding on his door and begging to be let in. One producer is going to use a series of miniature sets as backgrounds making his stage accompaniment a classic comparable with his film subject. Other producers are preparing to run the gamut of everything from standard sets to trick combinations. We cannot be too emphatic when we say that to be in step with the others and to be one step ahead is to devise a short subject presentation, prologue or epilogue and then tell the world about it.

Seal Plush, a New Fabric

A NEW fabric is offered on the market which may be readily adapted in costume, drapery and decorative work. It is known by the trade name of Seal Plush because it has the sheen effect of a wet seal. The material is very inexpensive and comes in all colors. It has a cotton back and is very soft and pliable. It also carries with it a guarantee of durability. Most of the plush on the market has an erect pile but the pile of the seal plush is flat, and it has a very brilliant and glistening sheen.

Plastic Auditions and Wireless Movies

SCIENCE again shows its hand. Two interesting reports have come to us from overseas which are of interest to production men in general. The first one comes from Berlin where a scientist and musician by the name of Heinrich J. Kuchenmeister has discovered that sound may be "felt" and reproduced in three dimensions. He has also utilized the new acoustic principles he has discovered, in devising and constructing a number of instruments which will bring about drastic changes in reproducing instruments. His principal proofs that sound coming from a single source finds a double receptivity in the human ear; and from out of Russia comes the information that a professor in the Saratov University, Leningrad, by the name of Dr. V. Popov has invented a device which will transmit photographs of moving objects with a wireless transmission. Both scientific assertions are being given serious consideration and value by experts.

Personalities

ART KAHN and his boys are the rage at the Senate Theatre, Chicago. Every other week this dynamic conductor and his band of 25 present a big specialty on the stage with attendant novelties. Their programs are jazz personified. IRVIN TALBOT, musical director of Fabian's Mosque Theatre, Newark, is at work on a series of original themes for various standard film arrangements. Recently he introduced an impressionistic theme which was one of the outstanding features of his picture score for "The Phantom of the Opera." CAPITOL THEATRE BALLET SCHOOL present six of its pupils in an elaborate "Ballet Espagnol" and the girls are one of the surprises of the bill. CLARK ROBINSON has designed the setting for the presentation prologue to be produced by Rothafel in the showing of the film version of Stella Dallas.

"The Spirit of Yuletide"

These Christmas Suggestions, Intended to Make Holiday Business More Interesting to Patrons, Are Offered Herewith for the Consideration of Showmen Who Stage Prologues

Moving Picture World Presentations—Devised By Colby Harriman

THERE are a number of suggestions which are applicable to Christmas. These run the gamunt from scenes of toyland to a modern Christmas tree celebration. Usually the Christmas novelties entail a great amount of scenic investure and this expense proves the barrier to certain production activities. To meet the requirements of the theatres desiring to exemplify the Christmas spirit we are offering three silhouette treatments which are varied in their application, and yet all symbolize certain motifs of the Christmas spirit. There is scarcely a theatre but that can present either of the suggestions, as the settings are small and may be worked in comparatively limited areas. A silhouette may be worked either from front or back of the drop. The following describes these suggestions:

1. Holy Night—A cut arch drop should be hung at the curtain line. Two ground rows placed back of it. A platform or box placed at right, upon which the singer stands dressed in the biblical costume. A bright star is hung over the deep blue sky drop. This may also be cut out and placed back of the drop, the lights toning the drop placed back of same. No light should be in the foreground, so that the singer is silhouetted against the back drop as he stands on the hillside.

2. Yuletide—A drop hung at the curtain line in which is a circular opening. The edge of a pine tree cut out and placed back of the opening is in dark green. About six feet back of this opening a sky drop should be hung toned a green blue. A set piece which can be made of compo-board cut out to represent forms of distant pine trees against the drop. A singer may be used appearing between the two drops. By masking down a spot the singer may be highlighted and in contrast to the silhouetted scene. Suggest using orange amber from right and a green from left on the singer.

3. Christmas Eve—This is a silhouette novelty which may be used to inject some comedy and form an ideal setting for a dance team. A cut arch drop hung at the curtain line, back of it a plain drop, preferably an orange silhouette drop, which should be highlighted blue at the top. A set piece placed back of the drop cut out to represent a section of a roof of a house with a chimney. At right another set piece cut out to represent tree tops. Back of this set piece a platform raked and set on angles to permite dancers to work on it, giving the effect that they are dancing on the housetops. The dancers may be dressed as Santa Claus and one of the comedy cartoon characters such as a cat, dog, or a brownie, or whatever character is desired by the producer. The action should be to give the effect of dancing up and down the housetop and finally disappearing down the chimney.

The producer will find that these suggestions may be easily adapted and prove popular, as they are very colorful in their treatment and are usually sure-fire numbers.

Week of November 15th
Featured Picture: "Bright Lights"
(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Overture: "Rienzi" .....Wagner
Rendered by the Capitol Grand Orchestra, David Mendoza, Conductor.

Louise Loring, Dramatic Soprano, "Dich-Teure Halle" (Hail, Hall of Song) from "Tannhauser" (Wagner).

Hanging piece in 2nd forms a triple arch effect across stage, tapestry drapes in arch R & L of center, through C. arch set rows of landscape studded with low trees, lend distance to backing of sky set piece. Border hangings of willow tree branches hang back of 2nd and droop through C. arch.

Green flood from front covers entire stage and blends with blue and rose toned sky. Miss Loring, spotted with white from side.

Celia Turrill, Prima Donna from Covent Garden, London.

Yasha Bunchuk, Solo Cellist, "Ave Maria" (Bach-Gounod).

Hanging across stage in two, a transparency, painted to represent the interior (one end) of cathedral, with high stained glass windows. Seated R of C is an old monk, playing a solo. The dimmers are gradually taken off amber top and side lights back of transparency revealing a choir singer. The close is a dim off with falling close in curtains.

Purple floods entire orchestra and drapes. This changes as the same effect in green is projected, then a dim off of light for opening of close in drapes. Setting lighted amber on dimmers, with magenta spot, on dimmers, from L 1st, on cellist. Dim off setting ambers and bringing up back of transparency lights of amber, with white spot from overhead, on singer, and magenta spot up on cellist, gave a most effective light arrangement to this number.

Chester Hale, Ballet Master and Albertina Vitak (First appearance).

Silver, backed with rose, metallic drape across 2nd.

Rose on dimmers flood drapes and close in curtains, across which is projected a green flood light boxed to fit opening across and one third high. This lighting carries to silver metallic as close in drapes open. The high lighting blue on metallic drop is slit flooded from both sides of stage. The dancers work in individual white spots, from front.

Marjorie Harcum & William Robyn, "Remember," latest song hit of Irving Berlin's.

Stretched black velvet with square cut out in centre, giving a shadow box effect, across 1st.

Through the opening, two characters in Colonial dress and white wigs, sing to each other, seated on settee, against neutral back hanging. This set is raised on platform, to opening. This entire picture is shot with vari-colored lights, magenta, green, purple and canary. These lights covered figures and backing.

Doris Niles and Capitol Ballet Corps, "Ballet Espagnole."

Black bordered, rose colored, softly hung drape across 3rd. This hanging is split center and draped back revealing a high Spanish scrolled and spiked iron gate, with rosebuds climbing here and there. Through the gate, in the distance, is a glimpse of a Spanish villa.

Magenta on dimmers, flood drapes and close in curtains which carries to setting after curtains part.

From sides, purple and magenta flood dancers, with white spot on Miss Niles.

For finale, purple and magenta flood, from top, covers drapes and orchestra.

Red plush is used to cover the platforms which extend across the back. Two flaming gold draw curtains are hung in two and down in one blue gold returns are used. The general lighting treatment is in greens, orange ambers and rose. The action opens with Miss Walters in a specialty dance number followed by a colorful Tambourine Dance by the "Steppers" and and Adagio with Miss Walters and Mr. Lewis blends with an English Dance finale.

PROLOGUE

An impressionistic prologue faeturing Mme. Ella Daganova is presented as an introduction to the feature. Gold gauze curtains hung at the closein line are used as a basis from which flame effects are operated from the front. A dark colored drop is hung in two. The dancer dressed in a barbaric costume with strands of chiffon hanging from her arms and body does a wild weird dance back of the gold gauze. She is highlighted with red and orange amber from the sides. The lights dim down as the first titles of the picture are flashed on the gauze. The screen is brought in, flame effects highlighting the screen, this being gradually dimmed off as the gold gauze opens to the picture.

Heaven Will Protect The Woikin' Print

HEAVEN WILL protect the workin' goil, goes the old warble. Well, Heaven don't protect ME—what am I goin' to do? I'm a poor, hard-workin' print—and my lot in life is curses and abuse!

Oh, good, kind Mr. Exhibitor—oh, kind, good Mr. Exchange Man—why do you scowl at me and curse me? Why do you blame me for that which is not my fault? Why do you rough-house me and then say:

"Dx!??*x that rotten print!"

Lord knows I try to do my best for you. But who can stand up under the cruelty that is my portion in life? Who gets ripped up the back and torn down the sides and cracked up and slashed apart more than I do?

And when I get out in front of an audience and try to give them the best that is in me, and then, weakened from abuse and want of a little gentle handlin' I break down and go all to pieces—all I hear is, "D!!x that rotten print!"

And then, when I go back to the exchange, all tore up and heart sick and yearnin' for a little kind patchin' up and maybe some strengthenin' tonic to make me hold togther and get strong again, all I hear is, "Dx*!?? that rotten print!"

I try to live up to the best that's in me.

Mr. Eastman and the other gentlemen who had the fixin' of my career in their hands—they spent thousands upon thousands of good, hard dollars to give me a strong constitution.

Mr. DeMille, or whichever of the splendid directors it was that took charge of my bringin' up, got the finest of fine casts and the expertest of bright camera lads to make me letter-perfect in the part I was to play before many a audience of payin' people.

Then Mr. Rothacker—or it could of been any other real laboratory owner—took every kind of pains to bring out the very best that was to be got out of my developed talent for amusin', or thrillin', or makin' people cry and think a little.

Then, good, kind gentlemen, I come to you, all hopped up with the part I was goin' to play in helpin' you to make money.

Heaven protect me! what did I get?

Oh, yes—I know what you're sayin' right this minute.

You, Mr. Exchange Manager, you're sayin', "Well, if them blamed exhibitors would quit sendin' back my prints all chewed up I could keep on sendin' out good prints."

And Mr. Exhibitor—I can hear you sayin' "That exchange hands me such rotten splicin' and patchin' it's no wonder I can't give my people any decent shows."

And all the time you're both handin' me a dirty dig every once in a while—lettin' a projector chew half my perforations off, or makin' a patch with cement that ain't goin' to hold no longer than a snowball lasts in the place you both are condemnin' me to go to.

And yet I'm the link between hundreds of thousands of hard dollars of producin' cost and the people's quarter paid at the box office.

Have a little pity on me, good, kind gentlemen.

"Protect the print and help the industry!"

If I could only get you to see that.

Of course there is a plenty of you that does.

Many an exchange has got the best of cement to help patch up my damages which come along with natural wear and tear; yes, and high grade help that takes me and looks me over and knows what a splicin' machine and a rewinder and cement is for—and goes to the home office and gets film when parts of my skeleton is so broke down that I need new ribs, as you might say.

There's plenty of exhibitors that I've worked for which has sure enough projectionists which sees that the boss understands the reason why they have GOT TO HAVE that new intermittent assembly, and that sends me back to my original startin' place in good health.

But ALL don't!

Can it be that them are the exhibitors who says they can't get the crowds?—and who also says they can't afford to fix up the old projector?

Can it be them sort of exchanges that argues that they give the exhibitor all he's payin' for?—and that says it's the exhibitor that's to blame and so the next guy can suffer?

This ain't a plea for mercy on my own account, gentlemen—it's a cry for protection FOR YOUR OWN SAKE.

If I'm sent back to an exchange all busted to pieces and chewed up like a bulldog had been my travelin' comrade, can the exchange man be blamed for not carin' so particular?

If I land in a projection room in such bad shape that they ain't nobody in the audience goin' to know what act I'm tryin' to put over—can the exhibitor be blamed for feelin' that it's no use to do the right thing by me?

But theatres are closin' because people are, it's claimed, losin' interest and not comin' like they did!

And exchanges has to alibi why they don't fill what's called their quota on the next crop of my brothers and sisters they've got to put over.

A lot of it because I'm treated like a step-child in some places.

So, good, kind folks, I pleads: Make your equipment—"Protect the print and help the industry!"

Penn-State Has Small-town Movie Laboratory; Booster and An Institutional Business Builder

Ken Woodward Shoots In a Real Story for You—Read Both Instalments

ONE of the niftiest things that has come to light for the live-wire exhibitor is this stunt that Penn-State Amusement Company has put across. It's so good that I wouldn't chop out a single line or drop a single photo. It's red meat for the exhibitor who wants to make his people know and like his entertainment, whether he runs a chain or a single theatre. It's coming to you in two instalments because of space limits on my pages. You'll enjoy this first part; you'll wait impatiently for the second half. It's "the goods."—EDITOR.

By Kenneth V. Woodward
Publicity-with-a-kick man for Penn State Amusement Company

EXHIBITORS in the territory surrounding Uniontown, Pa., have shown such interest in the workings of the small movie laboratory maintained by the Penn-State Amusement Co., that it occurred to me that possibly it wouldn't be a bad idea to pass along a description of the methods used and the advantages of such a department to the theatre in the average town of medium size.

How fully I realize that the "home-talent movie" and "see yourself as others see you" ideas have been worked almost to death in nearly all parts of the country and that many showmen may commence reading this article with that "same old stuff" thought creeping through the mind. Nevertheless that there is a new angle present in the use of the amateur motion picture plant as a business builder is firmly planted in my mind and I hope readers of MOVING PICTURE WORLD will bear with me long enough so that I may at least explain several favorable aspects of the locally produced NEWS motion picture. You will notice that the word "news" is emphasized. I believe that on this one word hinges the thing that has caused many theatre-men to pass up the movie camera as an admission catcher.

When I became connected with the Penn-State theatres several years ago as publicity hound one of the first things I put up to C. M. McCloskey, my boss and the managing director of the theatres, was the installation of a small motion picture laboratory. Naturally, my suggestion at first did not find exceptional enthusiasm on his part for in times past he had worked the "local movie" angle with itinerant cameramen who happened to be "traveling through" the city.

The results had usually not been up to expectations both from photographic and box-office standpoints. A "shot" of the fire department, police force, school children, several clubs or organizations and the thing was done. The negative was shipped to some distant laboratory, a few incomplete titles worked out and then all he had to do was to sit back in his chair, wait several weeks and then announce that the grand and glorious evening had arrived on which his patrons could view themselves on the screen.

Of course, while "local movies" were a novelty, patronage was increased on the evenings the pictures were shown. But, after a while the taking of a local movie came to be accepted as a commonplace matter and Mr. McCloskey, like hundreds of others, was of the opinion that the local movie idea had served its purpose. So, you see what I was up against when I tried to induce him to part with a thousand or so dollars for the installation of a movie laboratory of even the smallest type.

But finally, after begging, promising and picturing the thing in the most glowing terms I could call to mind, he gave his consent—we would buy the equipment! Now it was up to me to show him that the "local movie," properly handled, was not a thing of the past but a something that could be made to work and earn for the theatre every week in the year. So, we set out to purchase the equipment.

At this point I would like to impress on any exhibitor having in mind the installation of a small laboratory the importance of purchasing a good camera.

On that one thing alone will probably hinge the success or failure of the installation as a real business getter. Illustration number 1 shows the present camera equipment of our theatres. We first purchased a Universal camera, later added another and finally obtained two more light cameras for knock-about usage.

Any reputable camera dealer will be only too glad to send literature describing the various models he handles.

The buyer should be absolutely certain that the movement is rock-steady. Nothing is more unsightly on the screen than a jumpy picture and we have found that to obtain real steadiness the proper amount must be spent on an accurately-made instrument. That is why I advise the purchase of a good camera as the first move in the establishment of a small laboratory.

After the camera is obtained attention should then be turned to equipment of the laboratory. For the development of the film on a small scale there is nothing to compare with the Stineman system of reel development. The maintaining of the rack system requires the using of such an amount of chemicals as to make the cost almost prohibitive to the small plant, while the chemical expense with the Stineman system is practically nil. Other advantages, such as ease in handling and manipulation I will list later on in the article. Whatever you do, be sure to purchase the 200-ft. Stineman system in preference to the ones of shorter capacity. This is usually the smallest length in which a raw-stock company desires to sell negative or positive film, the magazines of your camera will probably carry 200 ft. and, all in all, the 200-ft. system is the convenient one for the small laboratory. As with the camera, any reliable dealer in motion picture apparatus will forward a complete descriptive pamphlet describing the Stineman reel development system.

As for the printer, used in "printing" the image from the negative film to the positive, this will in many cases prove a bugbear in the installation of a small laboratory. Professional printers such as the Duplex, Bell and Howell, when new, command rather high prices for a small theatre with a limited amount to spend, although at various times opportunities are present to secure a used printer of one of the above makes at price within reach of the small-laboratory operator. In our case, I had the good fortune of being able to obtain a second-hand "Shaustek" step printer, in good condition and at a fair price.

As with a camera, the important thing about a step printer is its steadiness and that this Shaustek has and then some. We have been using it continually for almost three years and it is still going strong.

If any professional laboratory worker or expert reads this I don't want him to glean from the above that I am lining up the Shaustek along with the wonderful instruments now being manufactured, but for the small laboratory with a limited amount to spend it will fill the bill in a most excellent manner. Of course, other small printers of the Shaustek type are available at reasonable prices and any conscientious dealer in apparatus will be glad to make suggestions.

Figures 5 and 6

The drying pan, for a small laboratory, can usually be made in the planing mill and should be large enough to carry at least 1,000 ft. of film at one time. The size of the drum is usually governed by the space available in the room to be used as a laboratory. Illustration number 2 shows a view of our drum and the darkroom worker winding a short length of film onto it for drying.

Titling or placing the reading and descriptive matter in the film is the next thing about which one installing a small laboratory must worry. Of course, these titles may be lettered by hand by the local sign writer, but we found that by investing approximately $75 in a small 5x8 printing press and several fonts of type the appearance of the finished film could be greatly improved. Illustrations 3 and 4 show the lay-out of our title printing table and a sample of several of our titles.

The border, the words "State News" and the circles containing the letter "S" are printed in the local job printing office with the center space left blank. Then when an event occurs, all we have to do is set the name of the city up in a 42 pt Gothic type and the body in 36 pt. Cheltenham. This confines the types to only two sizes. The illustration containing the four different title cards will give a general idea of the lay-out of our titles and sub-titles. It will be noticed that the two title cards are almost similar, one reading "Uniontown triumphs over Washington" and the other "Washington triumphs over Uniontown." These titles were made up in advance so that no matter which side won the game the title would be okay. This arrangement aids in putting the picture on the screen with greater speed inasmuch as it relieves the bother of title-making when the negative and positive film of the actual scene is being put through the tanks.

Illustration 5 shows the operator photographing one of the sub-titles. It may be in order to explain here that the titles are printed with black ink on white cardboard. Then, positive film is placed in the camera and when this is developed it will give white letters on a black background, the style usually used. By using this style of card film is saved inasmuch as if white letters on a black card were used it would give a negative and this in turn would have to be run through the printer against another piece of unexposed film to obtain the white letters on the black background. These direct positive titles will serve the purpose very well and with a little care very good contrast can be obtained.

For the lighting of these titles we use fifteen 100-watt daylight blue nitrogen bulbs distributed around on the inside of the title box as the picture shows. The box must be high and wide enough to allow the placing of an additional frame wide enough to shield the lens of the camera from the direct rays of the bulb. A small, steady platform with grooves to fit the bottom of the camera was made, leveled and tested so that the camera could instantly be placed in correct position for the photographing of the titles.

When using positive film for the direct titles care must be taken to place the smooth or glossy side of the film next to the lens.

Illustration 6 shows the printer with the title frame in the background, while illustration 7 shows the operator about to place some film in the fixing bath after it has been developed and given a short rinsing. At this point in the description of our laboratory it might be well to state that a sink is most imperative and should be constructed so that it is wide enough for the Steinman trays and long enough for three of the trays placed end to end. The sink should be about 18 inches deep and should be constructed of at least one inch material.

Better Projection Pays

As to Tension on The Picture

SAMUEL F. Cooley, Projectionist, Lyric Theatre, Manchester, New Hampshire, and one of the Bluebook School students, hands us the following:

Dear Friend and Brother: I have to ask for a bit of information, and as I am more than satisfied with the way the Department and Bluebook School are being carried on, therefore have no complaints or suggestions to make, I will get right down to business.

On all motion picture projectors the film is held against the aperture plate tracks by tension shoes, the pressure upon which is supplied by springs. The Bluebook, pages 603 and 609, tells us how these springs should be adjusted to the minimum the projection speed permits. It is a well known fact that too much tension is harmful to the film sprocket hole edges, the intermittent sprocket teeth and to the entire projector intermittent mechanism, while too little tension also is bad, because it permits unsteadiness of the screen image.

Presuming we set our projector tension in accordance with Bluebook instructions, there is no way by which we may know whether the tension pressure is equalized. By this I mean that a certain, and presumably equal amount of pressure should be exerted by each shoe—on either side of the film—and it seems to me there should be some method of making certain that the tension is thus exactly equalized.

Assuming the projection speed to be 85 feet of film per minute, in order to get the best results—steady picture with a minimum of wear on the sprocket hole sides—sides of intermittent sprocket teeth, etc.—what should be the pressure, in ounces, on each side of the film at the aperture? In this I presume the pressure to be measured separately on each side—each tension shoe.

It seems to me if tension were regulated along these lines, the wear upon film, sprockets nad everyhting else would be reduced, and that the condition would, in general, be improved.

That is very true, Brother Cooley, but unfortunately we have not yet arrived at the stage where such a thing is practicable. The Powers and the Simplex have an arrangement which automatically equalizes the pressure of the tension spring, so that each shoe receives the same amount of pressure. I am quite sure the Motiograph Deluxe has the same arrangement, though I cannot say positively from memory. Instruction No. 3, page 712 of the Bluebook, convinces me that I am not in error. These three projectors are the only ones in general use in the United States of America and Canadian America.

What you say about applying a certain definite amount of pressure is correct, but it is not practical for the projectionist to apply in practice. How would be manage to measure such pressure accurately? And it would have to be measured with a great degree of accuracy to be satisfactory in practical application. Even granting that a relatively few expert projectionists might be able to make such measurements accurately, for every one who could there are others who could not, and that is no slam at any one, either.

Question No. 422—Before connecting a wire to terminal binding of a switch or other thing, what should be done?

Question No. 423—What attention should terminal binding posts of switches, rheostats, etc., have, and why is this attention of importance?

Question No. 424—Will power wasted in poor connections, burned wires, etc., be registered on the meter and have to be paid for? Name the possible source of waste of this sort.

Question No. 425—What do Underwriter's rules require as to the making of wire splices?

Question No. 426—Describe the proper method of making a wire splice, beginning with stripping the insulation.

In a paper read before the S. M. P. E. some while ago, some one proposed that the tension be such as would require a certain number of ounces of pull to start the film against the breaking friction of the aperture tension. I did not take much interest in that, because I felt that while such a thing might be theroetically all right, it was one which the average man either could not or would not put into use.

In the Bluebook I have given you what I then believed to be and do still believe to be a method which is more nearly practicable in application than anything I have yet seen advanced. If carefully done it will deliver the goods very well, too.

As a matter of fact there will always be tension abuses, at least until we get to the point, if we ever do—(doubtful)—when projection speed is really fixed at one unchangeable value.

I talked with Mr. E. S. Porter many times when he was the head of the Precision Machine Company, in an endeavor to get him to incorporate a tension adjustment on the Simplex. Mr. Porter finally went to the length of having one made up—and an excellent one it was, too. But he finally balked on its actual incorporation in the projector, for this reason: "Richardson, said he, "while I grant you that there are a great many projectionists who would handle such an adjustment competently, and in whose hands it would really be an improvement, still there are very many who would not handle it intelligently, and in their hands it would be far from an improvement. They would jam the tension down as tight as they could get it, and let it go at that."

And I am bound to admit that Porter was right in his contention, though I then held, and do still hold, that it is a mistake not to adopt all those things which are in themselves good, merely because in the hands of the careless or incompetent they will be abused. I freely grant, however, that there are two viewpoints on such a matter as this, but anyhow that is the situation.

It is that the manufacturer who does not incorporate a tension device must perforce set the tension of every projector to take care of the highest possible condition as to projection speed, whereas the projector with a tension adjustment may be set right, though it may also be set to "take care" of something much worse than the worst possible condition in the matter of projection speed. It may be used, for instance, to hold the slack out of a worn intermovement or a movement which needs adjustment.

Personally, however, I hold the tension adjustment to be the better condition of the two, always provided it be so made that it is a really practicable device.

How to Tell Positive Wire From Negative

HARRY L. STEINBERGER, who writes from the "Roof of the World" from Leadville, Colorado, where "pebbles" weighing fifty tons are common, asks:

Is there any method of ascertaining which is the positive and which the negative wire of a direct current circuit or of a battery?

There is. You have only to surround and capture an ordinary Irish potato, cut it in half and stick both wires into it, about three-quarters of an inch apart if the current be 110. If it be a single cell battery the wires should be inserted into the potato less than half an inch apart. If the current be 220, then better get a big potato and stickum in at least an inch apart, or maybe more.

With commercial current—110 or 220—bubbles will form around the negative almost immediately, and in a couple of minutes with a battery; also the potato will be stained green around the positive.

The test is positive and simple in application.

Wants Data on Rotating Shutter

GEORGE W. PETTINGILL, Jr., St. Petersburg, Florida, says:

It is quite a while since I wrote our department. Will break the silence now by asking a question or two and making a remarkable remark.

Have been spending the winter in the Land of 'gators, sunshine and real estate booms for the past few years, projecting motion pictures most of them. Just now, I am at my summer home in Maine (Gosh! Projectionists with bubbles 'n golf bags have ceased to even excite comment, but when they have summer homes and winter homes 'n everything I guess they're at least beginning to arrive.—Ed.), projecting at a small theatre which uses A. C. at the arc. Worse yet, the A. C. is forty cycle. The rotating shutters are 2-blade, and they get into synchronism with the current alternations.

At 78 turns of the crank per minute (That "turns of the crank" stuff takes me back over the years to the days when it was something else than merely an expression—Ed.) I can keep away from the flicker, but if the speed be a little slower or faster, then it is very bad. I find that about 86 turns of the crank per minute produces the worst effect. Have tried to figure out whether or not a 3-blade rotating shutter could or would not help me. Am I right in thinking it would?

Am enclosing sample of change-over clipped from a Universal production received yesterday. In addition to the paper stars, at least ten feet of the film was punched full of holes. What do you think of such procedure? I also attach a sticker attached to the leader of each reel of a production received from the First National Exchange, of Boston. It appears to be identical with the one sent in by Brother Thoreau, of Vancouver. In your remarks you said it was placed on the print by the official exchange, and not by order of the producer. However, since they are found on prints sent out by exchanges separated by the width of the country, I think the prdoucer must have something to do with it. I agree that it is an outrage.

I have a Powers projector of my own. It is stamped with the number 1100 on its mechanism frame. Would like to know what date it left the factory. I have kept it in good repair, and today it puts on as good a picture as many projectors in first class theatres. It has a 6B lamphouse, a 6A lamphouse and a special motor drive. Some combination, huh?

Will the Powers Company kindly send the desired information to the good brother at 405 Pine street, Rumford, Maine? Unless I am in error it was projector mechanism No. 1100 that I photographed in the hands of "Nick" Powers himself. I was inspector at the Powers factory in those days. It may have been 1000, but as I remember it it was 1100. I don't know what year that was, but think it must have been about 1914.

As to the sticker, it is of paper, six and one-quarter inches long, printed in red, and reads: "OPERATOR please take note. This is a new print. Please loosen tension spring or adjust your machine to prevent damaging film."

You will observe that it says "OPERATOR." That much of it is good, and is in the nature of a compliment to the projectionist. Whoever is responsible for it evidently realizes and recognizes the fact that projectionists need no such warning; that only machine operators require such a notice. The man who knows his business as a motion picture projectionist of course would, in the very nature of things, if he IS a projectionist, do everything possible to prevent injury to the films. That is one difference between a projectionist and the machine operator, or attendant. The machine operator as the one responsible for the label evidently knows, is a machine operator ONLY, and needs such a warning.

However, the "adjust your tension" is a bit funny, at least as applied to one make of projector much in use. Does the sponsor for this masterpiece expect the "operator" to remove the tension spring of his projectors and bend and experiment with them when he receives a production to which one of these stickers is attached? It is quite some considerable process changing the tension on one make of projectors. I would not care to undertake the job myself, unless I had at least half an hour at my disposal. An hour would probably be nearer the required time.

And anyhow, how do they think a machine operator will know what the correct tension ought to be, or how to know when it IS right? I am glad that they do the projectionist the honor of assuming him to need no warning; and of knowing that only the machine operator will have things wrong, but I think they are too enthusiastic when they assume that the machine operator who does not know enough or care enough to adjust his tension correctly will play the slightest attention to their sticker.

As to the change-over signal, it consists of paper stars, each three-quarters of an inch across, plastered on every third frame. My opinion of film butchers who commit these outrages has been expressed so often that its repetition would hardly have value. They are utterly impossible. The theatre management which employs them should be made to pay the bill for all film thus destroyed, and the bill should be enough to cover not only the actual footage of film ruined, but also a "cover charge" to reimburse the exchange for the trouble it is put to. I would say the absolutely minimum charge for such an outrage should be from three to five dollars.

As to the shutter: I am not quite certain what you really have. You speak of a "flicker" at certain speeds of projection. The blades of the shutter getting into synchronism with the alternations does NOT produce "'flicker," but a sort of wave effect of the light. It dies down as the blade gets into synchronism, which usually occurs more or less slowly, and brightens up again as it gets out of synchronism.

It is possible that the forty cycle current may produce a real flicker, due directly to the fact that the alternations are themselves visible to the eye. This is true with 25 cycle current, provided the screen illumination be rather brilliant. I doubt that forty-cycle alternations would be visible, even though the screen illumination be of maximum brilliancy. How about it, you chaps who have used it at the arc?

I could not advise you intelligently until I know just what the nature of the effect is. Even if the effect be due to synchronism, I doubt if anything other than an actual trial would be of much service to you. I say this because it is only possible to figure out exactly what the effect will be if one knows PRECISELY the rate of alternation, AND if the rate of alternation be exactly constant. The mere statement that it is "forty cycle current" does not necessarily mean that it is exactly that. It may vary several alternations either way; also it is highly improbable that the generator is driven at absolutely constant speed.

That, plus the fact that projection speed is never absolutely steady, plus the fact that a very slight variation in either alternation or projection speeds, or both, would alter the results materially, makes it difficult to advise you with certainty.

My advice would be that the little theatre get a motor generator, or if that be too expensive, then a mercury arc rectifier, and thus have D. C. at the arc. The results would, I am sure, more than justify the investment from the box office point of view.

Seeks Aid on Screen Light

From a small city which is somewhat of a summer resort comes this letter, which raises a serious question:

Our Only Friend Richardson:— Am in a tight place, so naturally I come to the one who knows. The boss and myself (Letter is from the projectionist.—Ed.) are up against it, and don't know what to do about projection light. The motor generator has gone bluey and friend Boss is wondering if he should install Mazda, or go to the expense of a new motor generator. Was using 55 amperes at the arc. D. C. of course. The projection distance is about sixty feet and the picture about 12 x 16 feet. Screen is Gold Fibre. Equipment consists of one three-weeks-old Simplex and two old projectors, one of which will soon be renewed.

Please advise us what it is best to do. The Boss does not want to in any way impair projection.

A Hard One

Brother, you hand me a hard one, for the simple reason that it is next to impossible for any living human to say what your boss, or any other boss, would or might consider an improvement in screen illumination, or vice versa. I have heard men rave over the soft, pleasing light from Mazda. I have heard others of equal intelligence literally rave over the brilliant, but harsh high intensity, and between the two are the ordinary arc, with its devotees and the reflector type arc, and those who swear by it, with its pure white and rather brilliant light.

I also have friends in the camps of all of them—both users, makers and sellers. So what am I to tell you? It is not so easy as it may seem, for every one of them have their points of excellence.

My view of the matter is this. If the house be such that the maximum viewing distance (screen to rear rows of seats) is long, then there must be a fairly good size picture and BRILLIANT illumination. In this case the high intensity is preeminently the best. Anything less that the brilliancy it can supply will underilluminate the screen insofar as concerns the rear rows of seats, and the view from them will be highly unsatisfactory, with an accompaniment of heavy eye strain.

By "long," however, I mean anything above one hundred and twenty-five feet, though for many persons to see without heavy eye strain at a viewing distance of one hundred feet is impossible unless the screen brilliancy be very high.

The Other Extreme

Taking the other extreme, where the house is relative small—meaning by "small" the distance screen to rear row of seats, or rear portion of the seating space rather—there is very much to be said for the soft tones produced by incandescent. It is true that incandescent probably can never bring out all the finer shades of photography in the dense prints, but to offset that it is also a certainty that the brilliant high intensity overilluminates the film sufficiently to "wash out" some of the finer shadings of the lighter or average print, placing only the heavier or denser prints on the screen with all the shadings contained therein.

The soft, yellowish-tone light of incandescent also is very restful and pleasing to the eye, and where the light source and rotating shutter are handled intelligently (including the optical system of the projector, of course) there is plenty of light for a GOOD sixteen foot screen surface. By "good" I mean a good reflection surface.

So far so good. But now comes the in-betweens, which include every conceivable condition from the minimum to the maximum viewing distance. It is utterly impossible to offer advice which will give universal satisfaction, for the simple reason that ideas and tastes vary so widely. Generally speaking I would say that in my opinion, there remains but little real field for the ordinary arc in motion picture projection.

My reasons for that statement, is that the reflector arc apparatus has now reached a stage in development where very satisfactory apparatus may be had, and properly handled the reflector arc is conceded to fully equal the performance of a 75 ampere ordinary arc handled by an expert projectionist. It will do much better than the 75 ampere arc in the hands of an ordinary machine operator or attendant. Moreover the reflector arc gives a light of more pure, white tone. It is not the high intensity blue-white, but a pure white which is pleasing to the eye.

Meagre Details

You have sent but meagre details as to the theatre, but I think I am safe in saying this: If Friend Boss will be satisfied with a not very brilliant, but soft and fairly brilliant—fairly brilliant by comparison, I mean—screen illumination, then the incandescent ("Mazda") will give him excellent service at low cost as compared to the arc he has had. If he wants a white, rather brilliant light, but something less brilliant and not so harsh as the high intensity, then let him instal the reflector arc equipment—but only after careful examination into the relative merits of the various kinds. That will be a somewhat expensive installation—expensive in first cost, since it will involve the installation of a new motor generator, but afterward the operating cost is very low by comparison. The carbons are smaller and less costly, while the current expense would be as the 55 amperes you were using compares to about twenty amperes.

Question No. 392—How should exit lights be fused?

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, New Hampshire; Annal R. Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; Rodney C. Clark, Lincoln, Lincoln, Maine; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, all came through on this one, but for the most part only after a fashion. There was quite a bit of toe-stubbing, though most of the boys apparently had the right idea, but were shy on important details. Guimond says:

If exit lights, as individual lights be meant, then each lamp should be separately fused, to the end that trouble in one of them will not affect the other lamps, but merely blow its own fuse. These individual lamp fuses should preferably be located at the beginning of the individual circuit which carries that one individual lamp, so that all other exit lamp circuits will be protected from trouble, not only in the individual lamp, but also in the circuit of each individual lamp. The fuse should be not to exceed one ampere in capacity.

If exit lights in general are meant, then that point was covered in question No. 391, answers to which have already been sent in.

An excellent and very complete answer, Brother Guimond, and one which the rest will do well to observe closely, because this is a very important matter indeed. If trouble in one individual lamp, or lamp circuit, could cause the blowing of the main emergency circuit fuses, or the fuses of a circuit carrying a number of emergency lights, and that thing occurred just as the audience in a darkened theatre was on the verge of panic—not at all an impossible thing if individual light circuits be not separately and closely fused—you can see what a terrible situation might be set up. Bennewitz suggests a small automobile fuse block as excellent for single lamp fusing—makes a neat job.

Question No. 393—Describe an acceptable method of double fusing projector arc circuits, and tell us why it should be done.

Just who is your btge*, Brother Moore, huh? Take my advice and get another! Your answer to this one starts off: All exit lights should be fused—etc and so forth and so on unto the end. We'll all give y' the horse laugh and—forgive you this time, but—change him! His stuff seems to be "not so good."

Budge, Clark, Hanover, Guimond, Cooley, Bennewitz and Gengenbeck did very well on this one.

Bennewitz says:

The accepted method for double fusing a projector arc circuit is to use a double pose, double throw switch which carries fuse contacts of approved type at either end. When the fuse at one end "lets go" it then is only necessary to throw the switch blades over into the other position, in order to bring a fresh set of fuses into use.

Of course if there is serious trouble, such as a short in the lamp, the other fuses will also be blown immediately, but since this proves that the trouble is serious, and the show must be stopped, whereas it is always possible that the fuse "blew" because of overloading through amperage boost because of a dark scene, or because of some minor trouble such as poor mechanical fuse contact, it is well worth the wasted fuse to be certain, since stopping the show is a very serious matter.

In this arrangement the wires from the source of current supply are of course connected to the central switch contacts, and the outer contacts on one side of the switch are both connected to the positive lamp lead and the others to the negative lamp lead.

The reason for double fusing has been indicated in my reply. When a projection circuit fuse blows, it is not necessarily proof that there is trouble which would justify shutting down the projector on which possibly a large portion of a feature or other reel was still unprojected. The cause may be any one of several things, at least one of which may be inherent in that set of fuses themselves. The projector should only be shut down and the other started if the new fuses blow at once. That of course being proof positive that serious trouble amounting to a short exits somewhere in the circuit?

Question No. 394—What circuits may we fuse twenty-five per cent over and above the capacity of the apparatus attached thereto?

Hanover, Gengenbeck, Budge and Clark all agree that motor circuits may be fused 25 per cent above capacity of apparatus attached thereto, which is correct as far as it goes.

Bennewitz, Cooley, Doe and Guimond agree that motor and projection arc circuits may be fused twenty-five per cent above the capacity of the apparatus attached thereto, which is entirely correct.

Question No. 395—On which side of the projection room main switch should the projection room main fuses be placed, and why?

Brother Bennewitz lands on us all spraddled out, as follows:

It makes no great difference on which side of the projection room switch the projection room main fuses are placed, but the projector arc circuit feeders should be connected ahead of the main switch, and should have its own switch and fuse block. The argument as set forth on page 342 of the Blue Book is that it is more convenient to install fuses if the fuse block is "dead" than if it be "alive."

Suppose, though, that we blow a fuse with the switchboard hook-up as shown on page 340 of the Blue Book. Are we to kill all the other circuits supplied by the main switch, just to have it convenient to install a new fuse? Not so you could notice it, so what difference does it make which side of the fuse is on the switch.

Well, Brother Bennewitz, your argument is good so far as it goes, since certainly we would NOT kill the circuits on the other side in order to install a fuse on the dead side. The advice given in the Blue Book should have been to the effect that the reasons given only apply where a 2-wire circuit feeds the projection room. G'wan to the top of the class, darn y', but anyhow I'll crawl out through a knot hole by saying that the fuses are just as well on the "dead" side, and then when you wish to examine their contacts, as you should once a week anyhow, it is as well to have it so you can open the switch and by so doing have electrically dead fuses to handle, instead of live ones. Huh! Thought y' had me cornered, didn't ya? Well, y' got fooled.

But even so, now that I've sat down on and properly squelched South Dakota (maybe), I'll say there is considerable merit in his separately-fused projection and incandescent feeders. It is very seldom indeed that the main fuses would be blown by any thing in the shape of a projection room incandescent circuit, and there is no use plunging the entire room into darkness because a projection circuit does it.

Question 396—It is very necessary that all fuses be in good condition. How would you construct a simple, reliable fuse tester?

This is, in effect, a duplication of question 390. Apologies. The answers are very short this week, true, but it will give us a bit of a chance to catch up on other matter.

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Morals of the Movies

IT was not so long ago that the moving picture was the Peck's Bad Boy of the arts. Uplifters on the right, reformers on the left, censors in front and VIEWERS-WITH-ALARM in back, roll-eyed and thundered at the screen. It was "half a reel, half a reel, half a reel onward," into the Valley of Abuse.

It looks today as if a lot of reformers will be out of copy AND jobs, and will have to pick on HAIR HENNA or GUMDROPS instead of the movies.

We invite all those who squawked so vehemently about the bad influence of the movies to look over the pictures playing right now on Broadway and compare them with the legitimate plays current there.

And after they have finished that job, we should like to see them look over the present-day output of books and compare that product with the product of the picture studios.

Dope, depravity, degeneracy are coming across the FOOTLIGHTS in our "modern" plays and from the pages of our "modern" LITERATURE.

The "modern" movie is offering none of these choice dramatic morsels. CUSTARD PIE is still a better bet for picture appetites than these foods.

Where are the movie SCREECH-OWLS of yesterday? Are they giving three cheers for the pictures? NARY a cheer! Just a few GRUMBLES from volcanoes yearning for a chance to erupt.

Any business has its "gyps," particularly when that business is young. Radio had them. The gasolene business is fighting "gyp" product right now.

The picture business reached its present plane, not from WITHOUT, but from WITHIN the industry.

The picture business has righted itself at the source—production.

The picture producer has no quarrel with the THEATRICAL producer who puts on a depraved play or with the PUBLISHER who puts out a depraved book.

He merely says that SUCH material is not for the SCREEN, visible there at a unit patron cost ten or twenty times LOWER than it is in play form or book form.

The kid who earns a DIME for cleaning out the furnace can buy SCREEN entertainment therewith. He must earn SEVERAL dimes and quarters to buy his BOOK or PLAY entertainment.

Producers realize this. Will Hays realizes it. The morals of the movies are the morals of the masses. Mr. Hays and the producers can go over to Broadway and down Publishing Row, where winds blow foul and winds blow fair, and see—today—how refreshing in their influence are the movies.

OF the Screen, BY the Screen, And FOR the Screen

By
William J. Reilly

AN intense pride in the motion picture and a great jealousy for its success have always been a part of our make-up since we first became identified with it. Not even the task of reporting—in one day—for a city newspaper eight different picture showings—winding up with a Lyman Howe program at night dulled our appetite for pictures or their success.

It is with pleasure, therefore, that we begin here to present to the industry the plan which Hrolf Wisby has perfected for the SUPER production of BETTER pictures.

The production of BETTER pictures is by no means a LOST ART. Within a week "Stella Dallas" and "The Big Parade" fired a broadside under which New York and points west will reel for a long time to come.

Mr. Wisby is not posing as the Liberator of the Screen. Nor do we rate ourselves as his "discovered." A couple of years from now we may stick out thumbs in our galluses, wag our head, and join the chorus, "Always knew that Wisby boy would make good if he had a chance." But that's as far as we will go.

Wisby is not a "nut" who thought up an idea LAST week and who is rushing around THIS week to tell the world it is the ONLY thing in picture production. He has spent seven years of his own time and $50,000 of his own money in creating and in perfecting an ideal of production which makes for ORIGINAL creative work OF the screen, BY the screen and FOR the screen EXCLUSIVELY.

To work out anything on your own time and your own resources is vastly different from running an experiment station on somebody else's bankroll. And with Wisby, his plan has not been a hobby. It has been, and remains, his life work.

"OF the screen, BY the screen, and FOR the screen" may sound like the first lesson in the kindergarten production school. As a matter of fact, it is the FIRST and LAST lesson in ANY picture production school. In any business, we are likely to get away from FUNDAMENTALS. The stage gets away from fundamentals when it attempts to do something which belongs to the realm of the novel. The picture swallows a camel when it tries to do something which belongs to the stage and to the stage alone. So with ALL of the arts.

Just how does the Wisby Plan differ from anything in usage today? Mr. Wisby calls his Plan "The Hrolf Wisby Cinema-Regie," a heavy weight for such a good idea to carry around. Out where we came from they had an eight-sided school house which some people called the Octagon School House. But we plain folks just called it the Eight Sided School House. So we'll just call "The Hrolf Wisby Cinema-Regie" the "Wisby Plan." It is built around the idea of the Regisseur. There, again, is one of them trick furrin names, for which we will later substitute our own better known, if not technically correct parallel, Supervising Director.

The Regisseur is the director plus. On the continental stage the Regisseur initiates everything which goes into a dramatic production, from the performance of the actors to the mounting of the play, the lighting, and stage effects. He is more than a dramatic coach. He is schooled in every department of the theatre. He has around him a staff of men skilled in their work, connoisseurs who plan WITH and FOR the Regisseur along original lines. Perhaps the most famous of all Regisseurs was Max Reinhardt, producer of "The Miracle," whose school has left an indelible imprint on the stage. And Reinhardt's staff, in the beginning, was made up of UNKNOWNS.

As Wisby says, "No art becomes respectable until its principles are acknowledged, methodized, and housed in a system."

Mr. Wisby, as said elsewhere, was Regisseur for Mme. Oda and for Mlle. l'Aerolia. He knows what the job means.

"In picture production," says Mr. Wisby, "Regisseur supervision means not only thorough-going advance preparation affecting every detail of the production before the crank starts, but intimate co-operation with every member of the technical staff in the performance of his work. It makes the performance fool-proof, technically speaking, and it weeds out the inconsistencies, the absurdities, and the stock routine."

Under the Wisby Plan, not ONE or TWO but EVERY unit entering into the production contributes something ORIGINAL and in CAMERA harmony to the picture. Every member of the cast is given a complete script of the part and the fullest opportunity to study that part and bring to it an original interpretation that will blend into the picture as a whole.

So with the continuity itself, the scenic effects, the camera work.

Five scripts, under the Wisby Plan, feed into a sixth—The Master Scenario. These five script sources of individual interpretation of the subject involved are: 1—The Scenario Script; 2—The Supervising Director Script; 3—The Continuity Script (completed); 4—The Scenario of Scenic Effects; 5—The Scenario of Special Cinematography.

The Scenario Script, according to Mr Wisby, "is the usual thing in the way of scenario," which is handed to the Supervising Director.

DO YOU RECOGNIZE THIS SCENE?—Here is the "Pardon Came Too Late" scene, one of a series of panels in which Hrolf Wisby takes well-known picture scenes and treats them along lines of creative interpretation. The rider, above, is racing with the message which came too late. Out of the dust from the horse's hoofs a wraith horseman appears, galloping beside the living rider. The race see-saws. Then the wraith horse creeps ahead. As he passes by the unseeing human rider, the wraith turns, his mask drops, revealing the head of Death. The human rider charges on, dramatically, unaware that he has lost the race with Death.

"U" Controls 85 Per Cent. of U. S. Distribution in Germany

By Sumner Smith

THE Universal Pictures Corporation will control 85 per cent. of American distribution in Germany by virtue not only of the Ufa deal announced last week but by deals with the Landlicht Exchange, a distributing subsidiary of Ufa, and the Bruckman Exchange, the second largest system in Germany. That nation requires about 200 feature pictures a year. Ufa will supply about forty, about thirty will be Universal Jewels and the remainder will be American pictures selected by Universal.

These additional details were made known this week by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. Mr. Laemmle leaves this Saturday for Berlin and expects to arrive in the German capital on December 14, to affix his signature to the Ufa contract. He chatted this week with the trade paper men and again showed himself to be one of the most agreeable of the bigger personalities in the industry.

The Universal-Ufa deal is so great in scope that it is impossible for even Mr. Laemmle to now predict all its ramifications. He and the other Universal officials were obviously elated over their success in signing Ufa and hinted briefly at the competition with other American companies that they had to overcome. But Germany knows Carl Laemmle so well, and sees in him the personification of all that is not only progressive but fair and square as well, that he began in the bidding with an undisputed "edge" on his competitors. Nevertheless—so he said himself—they made it keenly competitive for a while.

Undoubtedly this Universal-Ufa deal is one of the very biggest of the year. Its principal value to Universal, as stated last week, is the opportunity it affords for distribution in Germany of Universal Jewels. The Kontingent plan now won't bother Laemmle very much. Also, Universal will book all Ufa pictures in all English-speaking countries, and, in addition, Universal will book Ufa pictures in all other countries where Ufa isn't profitably represented.

Concerning Universal distribution in Germany, Ufa owns 143 theatres outright and books 600. Most of these are in Germany, some in Holland, Switzerland and Belgium.

Stars will be "swapped." Emil Jannings probably will come to this country to make one or more pictures. Ufa is begging for the services fo Mary Philbin, but Universal can't loan her at this moment.

Universal does not have majority representation on the Ufa Board. Universal's representation will be two directors out of the five. Universal does not want control, said Mr. Laemmle, and it is that knowledge which led Ufa to align itself with Universal.

"It is a friendly arrangement," Mr. Laemmle said, "a friendly arrangement of mutual value. That is one of the chief reasons why Universal was favored. Ufa had no fear of our attempting to dominate."

It is impossible, Mr. Laemmle asserted, to estimate how many German pictures Universal will release in the United States. That will depend upon the future—and the pictures. He has great hopes, however, of creating a good market for them here.

Closing the interview Mr. Laemmle again talked acquisition of theatres.

"Universal," he emphasized, "will not tread on the toes of any exhibitor. We will buy where we can legitimately or where forced to by our opposition. We will not molest the business of any of our customers, not even the smallest and most occasional ones."

Mae Murray also sails for Germany on Saturday.

Censors Doomed?

ABSOLUTELY no place has been made for the New York State Motion Picture Commission in the reorganization plan in New York State, which will become effective during the months to come through the adoption of the constitutional amendment at the last general election day. This means that there is a strong possibility that censorship may be removed at last from the statute books of New York State, a thing long desired and advocated by Governor Alfred E. Smith and others of his party.

It is expected that some such statement may come from Governor Smith when he addresses the New York State Legislature at the opening of the session the first week in January. Governor Smith has frequently advocated the abolishment of the commission in both his messages to the Legislature and on other occasions.

Bioscope Explains How Quota System May Be Worked

THE Bioscope, British film publication, prints an interesting explanation of the possible operation of the quota system which may go into effect as a measure of protection against foreign productions. It follows:

"If a quota system was decided on to help British film production, and that quota was fixed at 12½ per cent., exclusive of topicals, it would mean that an exhibitor showing 10,000 feet of film in each program would have, in course of four weeks, to show 12½ per cent. of 80,000 feet. This amounts to 10,000 feet, and the exhibitor could either choose to show two five-reel British features per month, or one five-reel British feature per month and 1,000 feet of British scenic or interest film per week. The whole 10,000 feet of British film could be shown per month, or a total footage of British film amounting to 120,000 feet could be spread over the entire twelve months and divided between features and shorter films, as best suits the exhibitor."

Overseated?

NOW the talk among Chicago builders and theatre owners concerns overseating the city, especially in the Loop. While several large theatres have been opened this year in the outlying districts and have taken a cretain amount of the business from the Loop, the houses are jammed with patrons over the week ends and the big Sunday business no doubt helps to keep the net up for the week and pay the overhead.

According to a well known manager, more than a dozen large houses have been opened this year and more are to come, so it will be the survival of the fittest, after all is said and done.

I. M. P. A. Executives To Attend Ohio Convention

PRESIDENT I. E. CHADWICK and General Manager Frederick H. Elliott of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America will attend the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio at Columbus, December 8 and 9.

Vice-President J. J. Harwood of the Ohio theatre owners telegraphed Mr. Elliott an invitation to President Chadwick to address the convention on Tuesday afternoon, and it is not unlikely that the I.M.P.A. president will remain over for the banquet on Tuesday evening, when he has been invited to be one of the principal speakers.

General Manager Elliott will go to Columbus in advance of President Chadwick for a conference with the Ohio officials, along with President Frank J. Rembusch of the M.P.T.O. of Indiana, who advised that he will meet him in Columbus on Monday.

It is not improbable that the I.M.P.A. executives while in the Middle West will have conferences with the M.P.T.O. officials and independent theatre owners from adjoining states who are to attend the Columbus convention.

Incorporations

There appears to be no let-up in the number of motion picture companies incorporating in New York State, the past week bringing the usual grist to the Secretary of State's office at Albany. There was an average of one company a day, each with a fairly good capitalization. The following gives the names of the companies, the capitalization and the directors chosen for the first year: Bob Custer Productions, $5,000, Julius Chapsky, Joseph Joel, Mildres Spiro, all of New York City; Blum Theatrical Corporation, $20,000, Gustav Blum, Frederic Clayton, H. B. Forbes, New York City; Saland Film Laboratories, $10,000, Abraham Weinstein, Joseph E. Margolin, Nathanial Seaman, New York City; Cinechrome Film Corporation, $20,000, Arthur Gross, Morris Einhorn, Stella Berthoff, New York City; MacFadden True Story Pictures, $100,000, G. L. Harrington, William Thompson, S. N. Wood, New York City; Futter Productions, Inc., $12,000, Walter A. Futter, M. L. Greenberg, Isaac Schmal, New York City; Bershap Theatre Corporation, no capitalization given, Henrietta Amdur, N. E. Cohen, Bernard Shapiro, New York City.

M-G-M-United Artists Merger Off; Protests of Exhibitors Responsible

Honest? Yes Sir!

MOVIE AGE claims to have discovered the world's most honest man. His name is Ebinger and he is manager of the Orpheum Theatre at Fort Madison, Iowa. He warned his patrons against attending the theatre a certain night, in the following newspaper advertisement:

"Don't go to the Orpheum tonight unless you want to spend your money for something not worth it. The picture we have on tonight is not much to get puffed up about. Tomorrow we have a new show and this will be worth the coin."

Theatre Robberies in Kansas City Hit Box Offices

HAND in hand with an increased attendance in theatres came a wave of theatre robberies in Kansas City this week. From the safe of the Linwood Theatre, large suburban house, robbers obtained $1,173 the night of November 22. The safe, which weighed 1,000 pounds, was dragged 35 feet from the office on the ground floor in the front of the building and the combination hammered off. The loss was covered by insurance. Only a few days ago W. O. Lenhart, manager, was robbed of a diamond ring in front of his home at 2710 East Fortieth street. The robbers entered the theatre through a rear window after midnight.

Another Victim

The next victim was the Pantages Theatre, first-run downtown house. A bandit rushed in front of the box office, in full view of a downtown throng, pointed a revolver at Miss Blanche Shaw and escaped with $25 in bills, the afternoon of November 23. At the Newman Theatre that same night a robbery narrowly was avoided. William Jacobs of the manager's office, Charles Raymond, assistant manager, and E. C. Kristie, special policeman, were in the office arranging to deposit the receipts in a safe when a knock came upon the door. Kristie opened the door. A hand hastily reached through, but, in slamming the door with a view to trapping the bandit, Kristie allowed him to escape.

EXHIBITORS HAVE JUBILEE

The M. P. T. O. of Connecticut was holding a Jubilee Celebration at the Taft Hotel in New Haven Thursday evening, December 3, consisting of a banquet, entertainment features and dancing.

Schenck Makes Definite Announcement in Los Angeles—Would Have Saved $5,000,000 Annually—Production Increased

By Sumner Smith

THE proposed United Artists-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer distribution merger is definitely off. A country wide protest by exhibitors who visualized in the plan for amalgamation a move toward trustification is responsible. This news is contained in telegraphic dispatches to Moving Picture World from Los Angeles. Joseph M. Schenck, the brains of the intended distribution merger, is author of the announcement that the plan has been abandoned. The arrival of Marcus Loew in Los Angeles, scheduled for Wednesday, December 2, will not affect the decision, Mr. Schenck is quoted as saying.

Mr. Schenck's announcement came just before Mr. Loew's arrival. He said that the United Artists program would be increased to fifteen productions a year He regretted that the amalgamation would not take place because it would have saved $5,000,000 annually on distribution costs. He said that the Goldwyn gross revenue for the year was $20,000,000, with the United Artists $16,000,000. There was no dissension among the producers over the amalgamation, he declared, but it was killed by the great outcry of exhibitors throughout the country. He added that the increase of production on the United Artists program would necessitate speeding up all units.

Mr. Schenck's statement follows:

"The United Artists and the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation have definitely decided, by mutual consent, to permanently abandon their proposed affiliation. It is with considerable regret that we make this announcement. United Artists had felt for some time that an affiliation with some other company having an international distributing organization would be beneficial, financially, and would effect a considerable saving. We settled on M-G-M as a suitable distribution partner because we considered the quality of their product to be of a continuously high standard. We were engaged in working out the physical details when a storm of protest arose from exhibitors all over the world. These protests were based on the mistaken premise that there was to be something in the nature of a trustification of the motion picture industry. Nothing could have been further from the facts, but realizing our inability to dispel this impression, we have decided that our independence and integrity before the exhibitor is paramount to any economy we might effect in the face of adverse, if mistaken, criticism. Both companies are in complete accord in this decision.

"Mutual Co-operation"

"Speaking for the United Artists, I cannot make it too plain or too emphatic that our aim from the very formation of the organization has been mutual co-peration and complete independence. We shall not now or in the future abandon that aim. United Artists now, and always, will make its own pictures and sell its own pictures to the best theatre available and at the best price obtainable."

Thousands of telegrams from exhibitors have been sent Mr. Schenck and other principals in the proposed merger within the past few weeks. Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford have been besieged with telegraphic requests—some of them entreaties—not to allow the amalgamation."

The T. O. C. C. of New York City has been prominent in the telegraphic battle. Charles L. O'Reilly and Sydney S. Cohen wired each one of the principals. Chaplin replied on November 20 that the merger "has by no means materialized. . . . If such co-operation along these economic lines is of a constructive nature, it should be to advantage of all parties and will harm no one." He added that if after a thorough investigation he found the plan of monopolistic construction, he surely would be the first to oppose it.

Douglas Fairbanks had wired the T. O. C. C. that the proposed merger "in no way presupposes the statement contained in your telegram."

TAX REVENUE UNCHANGED

The revenue to the Province of Ontario for 1925 from the Provincial Government's Amusement Tax will be practically the same as for the previous fiscal year, according to the preliminary report of the Hon. W. H. Price, K. C., Toronto, provincial treasurer. The fiscal year ended October 30 and, with the returns not yet quite complete, the revenue from the Amusement Tax, collected at all theatres in the Province, amounted to practically $1,470,000, it is stated. In addition to the tax on amusement tickets, which averages about 10 per cent. of the face value of the tickets, there is also the revenue from theatre licenses and theatre inspection which, in the previous twelve months' period, reached the total of $209,379.

Joseph M. Schenck Honored By Producers of California

HONORED by the Association of Motion Picture Producers of California, Joseph M. Schenck, a dominant figure in the cinema industry, recently was presented with a large silver plaque by leaders of the organization. The producers' action was a complete surprise to Mr. Schenck, who in reply lauded the group's outstanding part in the campaign for better pictures.

Charles H. Christie, present chief of the body, made the presentation speech, pointing out that Mr. Schenck, three times president of the association, has played a prominent part in establishing California's supremacy in an industry that now ranks as one of the leaders in America, exceeded in magnitude perhaps only by agriculture, steel and automotive.

Upon the plaque was engraved:

"To Joseph M. Schenck, three times distinguished by election to the office of president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers of California, Inc., from his associates, as a token of high regard, sincere affection and keen appreciation of the association."

Those who attended the presentation ceremonies were Fred Kley, Robert Fairbanks, Victor H. Clarke, B. P. Fineman, John McCormick, Abraham Lehr, William R. Fraser, Warren Stone, Raymond L. Schrock, Henry Hennigson, E. H. Allen, Lou Goodstadt, M. C. Leeve, Walter K. Tuller and Fred W. Beeson.

Mr. Schenck is the producer of the pictures starring Norma and Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton, chairman of the United Artists directorate, president of the Security Trust and Savings Bank of Hollywood, a large owner of Los Angeles and Holywood real estate and a prominent figure in the business life of Southern California.

GUARD AGAINST THEATRE FIRES

With the coming of colder weather the danger from fire in theatres has become greater and the Chicago Fire Department officials are enforcing more strictly the rules for the operation of buildings used for public gatherings. Last week firemen extinguished a blaze on the stairway leading to the balcony of the Great Northern Theatre on Quincy street, and fire destroyed the Deluxe Theatre at Hammond last Friday night. This house seats 900 and belongs to the Kleighe circuit, of which J. L. MacCurdy is managing director. It is not known at present whether the house will be rebuilt or not.

BRITISH REJECT PLAN

In a referendum British exhibitors have rejected the productinn plan which requires an initial 10 per cent. of English pictures in all shows, effective January, 1927, and an increase to 25 per cent. by 1929. The vote was 679 to 609. About half of the members voted. Now it appears that the government plan will take precedence.

20,189 PICTURE THEATRES

There are 20,189 picture theatres in the United States, according to a count completed by Will H. Hays. Annual paid admissions total over $700,000,000. The weekly attendance throughout the country is estimated at 55,000,000, while New York City's average weekly figure is 4,500,000.

SCHENCK, THREE TIMES PRESIDENT OF THE ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS OF CALIFORNIA, INC., and one of the dominant figures in the industry, is shown here receiving a silver plaque presented to him by the organization at a recent meeting in Hollywood. Charles M. Christie, now head of this group, made the presentation speech, and lauded Mr. Schenck's services in behalf of the whole industry. A reproduction of the silver plaque is shown at the right.

Theatre Acquisition Everywhere Seems On the Increase; Chicago an Example

Universal Acts

UNIVERSAL also is to have a separate theatre organization. A story released to the press by Dillon, Read & Co., Wall street bankers, asserted that Universal theatres will ultimately number 1,000.

Universal Chain Theatres Corporation, just formed, will embrace the ninety-three houses now owned by Universal, including ownership in the Hostettler, Schine and Sparks circuits. An issue of $4,000,000 of 8 per cent. preferred stock, each share selling at $100, will be floated by Shields & Company. Universal pledges itself to take $1,000,000 of the second preferred for its interest in the ninety-three houses. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, agrees to pay cash for $1,000,000 of the second preferred. This stock is 8 per cent. convertible. The capitalization provides for $2,000,000 of this stock. Each share of the preferred will carry with it one share of the common. Dividends will be paid quarterly. The company intends to provide a sinking fund, beginning in 1927, sufficient to retire $200,000 preferred each year.

"Exhibitors have proved," he said, "that it is possible to unify theatre chains and operate them much more economically than could be done if they were operating as individual units.

"As indicating its confidence in the success of the new company, Universal is willing to sell to it all or nearly all of the theatres which it has rerecently acquired. The very best theatre brains in the world will be engaged to run this chain. No effort will be spared to put it on the most efficient and money-making basis. The only thing in the minds of my associates and those who have invested money in this proposition is to make money out of it."

ARBITRATION DOFFS ITS MASK

Arbitration proceedings in New York are hereafter to be made public. Members of the trade press were invited this week to a sitting of the Joint Board of Arbitration at the T. O. O. C. offices. Sol. Raives was chairman, Messrs. Meyer, Seigel, Unger and Thomas represented distributors and Raives, Moses and McNamara represented exhibitors.

About 100 cases were disposed of. Fox won in the action of the Blenheim, Webster and Benneson theatres for $1,000 damages because the Boston Road Theatre played "The Iron Horse" first. The ruling was that there was no protection clause in the Fox contract.

Ascher Brothers' Schedule in Windy City One a Month—Seven Deals Reported from Pittsburgh Within a Few Days

By Sumner Smith

THE acquisition of theatres by all branches of the industry goes merrily on until it must be concluded that the various important elements of the industry are consolidating their battle fronts for the biggest action to date in the struggle for existence. Many companies also are building new houses throughout the countries, for instance the Ascher Brothers in Chicago, with the opening of one a month through to the Spring. Lynch Theatres, Inc., step into the limelight this week with the opening of the Lido at Maywood, Ill., and progress on the erection of the Vogue at Chicago avenue and Monticello, Chicago.

Glancing at other territories we find that in and about Pittsburgh no less than seven theatre deals have been consummated within the past few days, that the Butterfield Enterprises have acquired the Fred Wuerth string in Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor, that Warner Brothers are apparently negotiating for two Albany theatres and one in Glens Falls, N. Y., that the New England Theatres Operating Company of Boston is growing fast, that William Goldman has another second-run house in St. Louis, that William Fox is supposed to be planning a big St. Louis first-run house and also establish a chain of second-run houses or become interested in some such chain now established. But read on.

"ONE A MONTH" is the Ascher Brothers schedule for theatre building in Chicago. November 19 was the opening date of the Midwest, fourteenth in the Ascher string. Then for good measure they bought the Parthenon, numbered it fifteen and flung their banner forth from its flagstaff on November 23. December will mark the opening of the huge new Terminal Theatre on the northwest side. Each month a new theatre will be added, thus making Ascher Brothers at the end of the year one of the largest circuits in Chicgao. In January the Colony at 59th and Kedzie will open. February will find the Drake at Montrose and Drake added. In March the Highland at 79th and Ashland will open. April will be the opening month for the magnificent new Sheridan at Irving Park Boulevard and Sheridan Road. The new Ascher School for Managers, under the direction of Lewis P. Newhafer, general manager, will open on January 11 at the main offices of the circuit on Wabash avenue.

Lynch Theatres, Inc., are building a new theatre at Chicago avenue and Monticello that will seat 2,000 and be known as the Vogue. William J. Mueller and Arthur Sass are handling the construction of the new house. When completed this will be the seventeenth, making it one of the largest circuits in the Chicago territory. The main offices of the Lynch chain is now in the new Tiffin Theatre Building on West North avenue, under the personal direction of Vincent Lynch.

Another fine neighborhood theatre was opened last week by Lynch Theatres, Inc., at Maywood, Ill. The new house is called the Lido and is located at Washington Boulevard and Fifth avenue. Mike Siegal, formerly of the Home Theatre, is house manager and Jack Miller is managing director. Willard Parsons is musical director and had a fine program for the opening feature "Shore Leave." The new theatre will seat 2,000 and has a beautiful Italian garden effect in the auditorium. The house is the sixteenth of the Lynch Circuit, under the general direction of Vincent Lynch. The boys along film row are extending congratulations to John C. Miller, owner of the Princess Theatre at Woodstock, Ill., on his election as president of the Chamber of Commerce of that live little city. Miller is one of the veteran showmen of that part of the state and is a real booster for the Woodstock territory.

The Midwest Circuit has denied the report that it will invade the Quincy, Ill., territory and take over several theatres.

The Great States Theatre circuit, affiliated with Balaban & Katz, is building two fine movie theatres, one at Joliet, Ill., to seat 4,000 and be known as the Rialto Square. It is expected to be ready for opening about February 15. Morris Rubens will have general supervision of this house, which will have a combination policy. The new Lincoln Square at Springfield, Ill., is under way at Fifth and Jefferson, but it will be several months before it is ready for opening. This will be a combination house with a large seating capacity.

James I. Biba, Irving A. Biba and Philip Golde have organized the Ritz Theatre Corporation with a capital of 500 shares of non par value to operate the new Ritz Theatre at 6334 West Roosevelt Road in Oak Park. The house was opened last week to capacity business.

G. E. Minor, Lyle Webster and H. Webster have organized the Minor Amusement Company at Rice Lake to operate theatres in that district.

The Kidland Amusement Company, operating several houses, has purchased the theatre at 4619 and 4621 South Ashland avenue for $75,000, subject to a mortgage of $40,000. Cerf and Erenhalt handled the transaction.

Marks Brothers report that they expect to open the new Embassy, going up at Fullerton and Crawford avenue and seating 2,500, about January 15, and the new Ritz at Harding and Lawrence avenue by the end of January. The huge new theatre they are building at Devon and Sheridan Road is under cover and the tentative opening date of this huse is set for late in February. This house will seat more than 4,000. A contest will be held to secure a name. Other projects of the firm will be ready for early announcement, according to word from their offices.

A new theatre is projected by S. J. Gregory for Cicero, Ill. He recently sold a couple of theatres to the Ascher circuit and retired from the Gregory chain at Hammond, Ind. The house will be known as the Mirador and will seat 2,500. Plans and supervision are by E. P. Rupert and R. Levine and Co. The architecture will be French renaissance with a terra cotta front. It will be operted by Gregory and Ben Bernasek, with a policy of pictures and vaudeville. The site selected is the northeast corner of West 25th and South 53rd avenue.

H. G. Forde, M. J. Weiler and B. M. Leisse have organized the Bloomington Theatres, Inc., of Bloomington, Ill., to purchase and operate picture theatres in that territory. The company has a capital stock of 100 shares of no par value and they will make their Chicago headquarters at 162 North State street.

Recent Boston Openings

THE New England Theatres Operating Company of Boston is opening new theatres in suburban Boston so rapidly that openings are becoming merely a matter of routine for the enterprising officials of this fast growing circuit.

The Rialto Theatre at Roslindale Square and then Jamaica Theatre at Jamaica Plain were opened on November 21. The same program was presented at both theatres, consisting of "Souls for Sables" and "The Calgary Stampede." The new Shawmut Theatre was opened on November 15.

The company recently had work started on the erection of the Rivoli on Dudley street, Roxbury. It will be of the bleacher type of construction and there will be 2,000 seats on one floor. The interior color scheme and decorations are of Pompeiian style. Beautiful lounge rooms, foyer and mezzanine floor are other features. Shapiro and Sons of New York, builders of the new Keith-Albee Boston Theatre, are erecting the Rivoli. It is expected that the theatre will be ready for opening next March.

Work is under way on the new Morton Theatre in Dorchester. There will be 2,000 seats.

Fox Expanding

"REGARDLESS of rumored motion picture combinations or any other factor affecting the industry in the United States today, Fox Film Corporation will ultimately have one or more first-run theatres in every important key city in the country," said James R. Grainger, general sales manager, in Los Angeles this week.

"Expansion plans with this object in view have been under way for some time. Building sites have already been secured in Boston, Detroit, Chicago, Washington, Buffalo, San Francisco and Los Angeles. In New York City a 4,500-seat theatre is being built to replace the old Academy of Music, scene of Mr. Fox's real beginning as an exhibitor. The recent reorganizaiton of Fox Theatres Corporation, when $12,000,000 of a stock issue was placed upon the market, was but one move toward the consummation of the expansion plans. It is expected a more detailed announcement of the program Mr. Fox has under consideration will be issued from our New York office within a short time."

Albany Sales Expected

WARNER BROTHERS, who lately acquired theatres in Chicago and Pittsburgh, are negotiating with C. H. Buckley of Albany for the Leland and Clinton Square Theatres in that city as well as the Empire in Glens Falls, according to a well founded rumor. Representatives of Warner Brothers were in Albany during the past week conferring with Mr. Buckley, who is a real estate dealer as well as an exhibitor. It is said that Mr. Buckley was offered the sum of $50,000 a year in a lease covering the three houses, all first-run, and that the offer was refused. Warner Brothers maintain an exchange in Albany and of late there has been more than the usual activity around the exchange, with efforts to place the pictures in cities, villages and even the smaller hamlets, where houses run but one night a week.

The Leland in Albany is over 100 years old and one of the largest and most popular first-run theatres in the city, with a 25-cent admission prevailing. This house is owned by Mr. Buckley outright and is located in the center of the city, but within a short block of the $250,000 theatre being erected by the Strand interests and which open sometime next spring. The Clinton Square is also a downtown house, leased by Mr. Buckley from Fred Elliott, while the Glens Falls house is also leased and is a competitor with the house operated by the Peerless Booking Agency in that city.

Seven Pittsburgh Deals

NO less than seven theatre deals were consummated in the Pittsburgh territory within a few days recently, which resulted in eight theatres changing hands the first of December.

Bart Dattola, owner of the Alhambra, New Kensington, took over his brother Paul's Grand Theatre at Springdale, one of the most up-to-date small theatres to be found anywhere. Paul has gone to Florida to engage in the real estate business.

C. M. McCloskey of the Penn-State Amusement Company, Uniontown, has formed a new company at Morgantown, W. Va., of which he will be managing director. The name of the new company is the Morgantown Theatre Company and it has taken over the Strand and Metropolitan Theatres in that town. The Metropolitan is one of the finest houses in the local territory and was formerly owned by Communtzis Brothers. Fielding K. O'Kelly, managing director of the house, has resigned. George Sallows, manager of the Strand for a decade, will look after both houses for the new company.

J. B. Walker, who has conducted the Academy on Beaver avenue, Northside, for twelve years, announces his retirement from business life. He has sold his theatre building to a newcomer, R. E. Slavkin.

The Hymes Circuit of Buckhannon, W. Va., has taken over its only opposition house, the White, formerly conducted by O. M. White.

Ben Burke, owner of the pretentious Capitol Theatre at New Castle, has taken over over James Caplanis' Star in the same town. This is a house of 300 capacity. Ben expects to change the house policy and will use bigger pictures.

David Pratt, who has conducted the Lincoln Square Theatre on Lincoln avenue in East Liberty for eighteen months, has sold out so that he can devote his time to other business interests. The new owners of the Lincoln Square are known as the L. R. W. Company, also owners of the New Lincoln Theatre on Wylie avenue. The three men

Hostettler Company Purchases Blaine Cook Theatre Circuit

THE Hostettler Amusement Company, of Omaha, has purchased the Blaine Cook circuit of theatres. This included the Rialto and the Gilbert at Beatrice, Neb., the Dean and the Sun at York, Neb., the Elite and Royal at LeMars, Ia., and one theatre, the Platte, at North Platte, Neb. The Sun and the Keith theatres at North Platte, not a part of the Cook circuit, have also been acquired by the Hostettler Amusement Company.

Banditry Worse

THE payroll bandit situation in Louisville has gradually become worse and the Armored Car Company, formed a year or two ago, has now made plans whereby it is picking up each night the daily receipts of the picture theatres, oil stations, confectioneries and other concerns running after banking hours, the money being placed in locked satchels and carried by the armored car concern to the Louisville National Bank, where it is dropped through a locking cylinder into the bank vaults at any hour of the night, without unlocking bank doors. Demand for this service has increased until the car companies has increased its capital to $25,000, in order to put on more cars.

On November 224 a payroll clerk of the Brown Theatre and Brown Hotel Company was slugged at the mouth of an alley, just north of the Brown properties, and relieved of $2,500, the men jumping into a car and getting away. Later one of them was reported captured in a second attempt in the same day.

DOWNING MINORITY LEADER

Now that the Democratic leaders of New York State have finally settled upon Senator Bernard Downing of New York City as the minority leader in the State Senate at Albany this winter, the film industry can breath a bit easier. Senator Downing, through long experience in the Legislature, knows all the tricks of the trade fully as well perhaps as Mayor-elect James Walker, who so ably represented the film interests at Albany year after year. His selection means that exhibitors will have a representative with the time and the inclination to listen to them.

LISTS NEW YORK OFFICE

A statement designating New York City as its office in this state was filed in Albany last week by the Picture City Corporation of Miami, Fla., Charles L. Apfel as president. The company stated that it would begin business on a capitalization of $20,000 and that its New York office would be at 522 Fifth avenue. The company is permitted to have 10,000 shares of stock outstanding, of a par value of $100 each.

ROB ST. LOUIS SAFE

Patrick Collins, manager, and two ushers of the King Bee Theatre, 1710 North Jefferson avenue, St. Louis, were stuck up by two bandits on Thanksgiving night. The robbers forced Collins to open the safe and secured $557. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the King Bee.

Three Prominent Manufacturers Join Forces, Providing for Still Finer Mechanisms, To Be Quartered at 90 Gold Street

OFFICIAL announcement can now be made of the formation of the International Projector Corporation, Inc., under the laws of the State of Delaware, which has acquired the entire business and assets of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., and the Precision Machine Company, Inc., both located in the City of New York, and the Acme Motion Picture Projector Company located in the city of Chicago, all leading manufacturers and distributors of motion picture projectors and accessories and other apparatus pertaining to the motion picture industry. These corporations have been active in the industry since 1907, 1913, and 1916 respectively.

The Power, Simplex and Acme motion picture projectors, which are manufactured in the respective plants of the corporation, are widely known in the industry. They will continue to be manufactured and the individual identity of each machine will be fully retained. The business formerly carried on by the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., and the Precision Machine Company, Inc., will hereafter be conducted in a ten-story fireproof building situated at 90 Gold Street, New York City. This building and the land on which it is located are owned by the Cinema Building Corporation, all of whose stock is owned by the International Projector Corporation.

The retailing of the manufactured product will be continued through the present channels of distribution.

The personnel which has been responsible for the marked improvement in the manufacture and distribution of the respective projectors during the past two years is to be continued with the new company.

New methods of manufacture have been instituted with resultant benefit to both the seller and the user, and the present sales policy will be continued since it has proved to be of distinct benefit to all identified with the industry.

Experience for a long period of years has proved the economic necessity of this move and it is anticipated that time will further prove the wisdom of it from the standpoint of both the user and the manufacturer of motion picture projectors.

The International Projector Corporation bespeaks the continuance of the good will and support for so many years accorded the Power, Simplex and Acme projectors; the good will which the manufacturers of those projectors have so earnestly striven to build up and maintain. This has been done through the furnishing of a satisfactory product fully supported by a highly efficient service.

Apollo-Wellmont Case Settled; Exhibitor Heads Disappointed

FOR the present there will be no test of the arbitration system and the uniform contract in the New York courts. The case of Apollo Exchange against the Wellmont Company, hailed as a test case for arbitration, was settled out of court this week just before it was to come to trial before Justice Proskauer in the Supreme Court.

The plaintiff, it is said, under the terms of the settlement will accept seventeen pictures and pay $5,000 for them.

The outcome of this case, which attracted national interest, is extremely disappointing to the national exhibitor officials, who saw in it an opportunity to prove in court their repeated contentions that the present contract and arbitraion mehods are unfair and illegal. The defense planned to force distributing companies under oath to say whether they will sell any exhibitor who refuses to sign the existing contract.

Norman Samuelson, attorney for the New Jersey M.P.T.O., is one of those who is dissatisfied with the adjustment. He stated that he had no part in bringing it about and that he was resigning as counsel of the organization.

Cadwallader, Wickersham & Taft, counsel for the plaintiff, had filed affidavits by officials of several distributing companies asserting that any exhibitor could obtain product without signing the contract. These affidavits were to combat the charge of duress. Samuelson was eager to make them a definite issue.

The settlement of the case leaves several issues in the air.

BALTIMORE BURGLARS FAIL

Four burglars were foiled in an attempt to rob Warners' Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, on the morning of November 27. After they had bound and gagged the watchman, they left him lying in the aisle of the theatre with one man on guard over him, while the rest attempted to open a huge safe but failed. The safe contained $300, which belonged to Bernard Depkin, manager of the theatre. Twenty-two hundred dollars was taken out of the safe early in the evening.

Loew's Most Successful Year; Net Profits Were $4,708,631

LOEW'S, INC., has closed its most successful year. This was the fiscal year ending August 31, 1925. The net profits after all charges and dividends on preferred stock of subsidiaries was $4,708,631, which is equal to $4.43 a share on the 1,060,780 shares of no par value, against $2,949,052, equal to $2.78 a share, earned in 1924.

According to comment by the Wall Street Journal, "purchase of Goldwyn about a year ago was a shrewd piece of business on the part of Marcus Loew. Goldwyn was bought for $5,000,000. Metro-Goldwyn 7 per cent. preferred stock of which $4,430,666 is outstanding. Annual dividends on this are about $300,000. The income from Goldwyn's half interest in the Capitol Theatre, New York, more than pays the dividends on the preferred. The Goldwyn property also included a valuable studio lot in Hollywood which Loew's will be able to sell at a handsome profit when it seems advisable. Since Metro also has a studio lot in Hollywood it is probable that sooner or later one of the tracts will be sold.

"Feature of the balance sheet is the wiping out of an item of $10,977,083 for leaseholds. contracts and good will by writing up the property account. Loew's has extensive real estate holdings consisting of theatre and business buildings in choice sections of important cities all over the country. Many of these properties were acquired five years ago and have since appreciated greatly in value. In two properties Loew's is understood to have a profit of over $1,000,000 each.

"Property and plants are now carried at $25,846,040, against $18,841,967 in 1924 and $14,677,689 in 1922. Investments, including real estate of subsidiaries are carried at $10,590,392, against $6,296,682 last year and $3,315,418 in 1922.

"The company has an interest in a total of 105 theatres, and owns outright 33 theatres, four office buildings and two studio lots. A new $1,000,000 theatre is being built in Atlanta, and large houses are being built or leased in New Rochelle, Coney Island, Birmingham and Norfolk.

"Working capital position has been much improved this year. The increase is mainly due to larger inventories of films which stand at $11,864,862, against $6,548,209. Loew's has been steadily expanding its producing business until it is now second only to Famous Players in film making. This inventory consists almost entirely of 1925 film output, according to the policy of depreciation employed by all important film producers, and is not incommensurate with the increased volume of business. Gross income in the last fiscal year was $56,294,745, against $42,937,268 in 1924 and $19,634,355 in 1923, an increase of nearly 150% in two years.

"Earnings of Loew's last year were larger than the average net income of Famous Players in recent years and only about $700,000 less than Famous Players net last year, which was the largest in its history. In other words Loew's has built up in four years a structure that is a close second to the greatest moving picture producer in the world. Another year as good as the one just closed may bring even more important development to this rapidly growing company.

"At present the weak point in Loew's structure is the comparatively small amount of cash, $1,547,585 in relation to inventories."

PROTEST NEW BUFFALO THEATRE

The nearness of a new gasoline station is said to be the reason for a fire department protest against the proposed new picture theatre to be erected by the Askey-Hager Company at 3174 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., permission to build which has been granted by the council subject to "O. K." from nearby churches. It is reported that a church on the opposite corner is about to protest. The house, if it goes through, will seat 1,800. The lobby and entrance will be on Main street. The house will be 120 feet long, 80 feet wide and 30 feet high.

CHICAGO PROPERTY SOLD

Fitzpatrick & McElroy are selling some of their property in the Chicago territory. Last week the sale of the two-story building and lot on the southeast corner of 59th and Kedzie was reported to Frank R. McGarr for a reported amount of $350,000. McGarr took title for an undisclosed client. The theatre that is going up at 79th and Ashland under the supervision of the circuit has been leased to the Ascher circuit, which will rename it the Hiland Theatre.

MISS MORRIS WITH FOX

Virginia Morris, director of advertising and publicity for the B. P. Schulberg productions, Inc., has accepted a position under Vivian Moses in the Fox publicity department.

Moe Mark Plans New Theatre Chain for Entire Country

PLANS for the erection of a new chain of high-class picture theatres throughout the United States were announced by Moe Mark, head of the Mark-Strand circuit of theatres, at the banquet in the Mark-Strand, Lynn, Mass., Sunday night, November 29, marking the tenth anniversary of that theatre. A formal announcement of the theatre building project will be made in a few weeks, Mr. Mark declared.

Gathered at the banquet tables were Mr. Mark's associates, members of the Mark-Strand board of directors and various prominent leaders in their respective endeavors, including Joseph M. Levenson of Boston, treasurer of the Lynn-Mark-Strand Theatre Company.

William C. Scanlon, stage manager of the Strand, who has been employed by Mr. Mark for seventeen years, presented a beautiful silver loving cup to Mr. Mark as a token of the high esteem the employes of the Lynn Strand hold for their "chief." The board of directors presented Mr. Mark with a large grandfather's clock, a costly and wonderful work of art.

Allen B. Newhall, managing director of the Mark-Strand and Mark-Comique, also in Lynn, was toastmaster.

comprising the company, and from whose initials the name is derived, are: D. Lekovicz, Harry Rackov and W. Worthington.

Another old-timer has sold out. Dominick Delphos, who owned the Star at Bridgeville for twelve years, has disposed of his house to August Vallani.

Butterfield Enlarging

THE Butterfield Theatrical Enterprises is continuing to enlarge its chain of theatres, the latest step along this direction coming last week with the acquisition of the Fred Wuerth Theatres in Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor, Mich., comprising the Orpheum and Wuerth in Ann Arbor and the Wuerth in Ypsilanti. The closing of this deal gives Mr. Butterfield four theatres in Ann Arbor and two in Ypsilanti, or practically all of the theatres in both cities, with the exception of one small house in Ann Arbor. Mr. Wuerth intends to retire from the theatrical filed and after a rest will enter the real estate business.

Another for Goldman

ANOTHER house has been added to William Goldman's growing string of second-run houses. Sigoloff Brothers are to build a 1,200-seat house on the site of their Elite Airdome, Eighteenth street and Park avenue, and lease to Goldman for a term of years. The building will contain stores and apartments and cost upwards of $150,000. Plans are in charge of Kennerly & Stegemeyer, architects, Title Guaranty Building.

William Fox is said to be the big producer-distributor who plans to enter St. Louis exhibition circles. Gossip in film circles is that the Fox interests will build a big first-run house in St. Louis and also become interested in a chain of second-run houses. As has been reported, an eastern financial man and builder were in St. Louis recently studying the local theatre situation. They are known to have visited a number of neighborhood houses with a view of studying their possibilities. These men admitted, they represented a big producer-distributor but declined to reveal his identity.

Those Rumors

THERE also are the usual crop of rumors, some undoubtedly founded on fact and some more or less of the visionary sort. Here are a few of them:

Famous Players has practically closed with Karl Hoblitzelle in the acquisition of his five theatres in Texas key cities and one in Little Rock, Ark. Hoblitzelle has a five-year contract with Fox.

Ray Grombacher seeks to control the Spokane situation by purchasing the Hippodrome and the Will Starkey chain. He especially needs a second-run house, having bought both first and second runs.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer seeks booking control of the proposed $3,000,000 Midland Theatre in Kansas City. Universal and Paramount have majority control of the downtown first-run houses. The Midland will seat 4,000 and in policy resemble the Capitol in New York City.

North American Theatres Corporation seeks theatre sites in Minneapolis and Omaha.

Universal Announces Assistant Sales Directors

SEVERAL important changes in the sales personnel of the Universal Pictures Corporation were made early last week, E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, announces. Le Roy Alexander, for the past year general manager of Universal's Chicago territory, has been appointed assistant sales director of the Western Division, of which Lou Metzger is the sales director. Alexander's jurisdiction will include Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Sioux Falls and Omaha. W. W. Brumberg will replace Alexander as general manager of the Chicago exchange. Brumberg has been Century sales manager for that office for some time.

Another important change is the assignment of W. E. Troug as assistant sales director for that section of the Southern Division, which includes the Indianapolis, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Kansas City exchanges. Troug has been an assistant sales director for Universal for many months, but his territory has straddled the Southern and Western Divisions, including Des Moines, Sioux Falls, Omaha, St. Louis and Kansas City territories. Under the new arrangement his territory is entirely in the Southern Division, of which Ralph B. Williams is the newly appointed sales director. Dan Michalove is the assistant sales director for the section of the Southern Division south of Kentucky.

Earl Kramer, the newly appointed sales director for the Eastern Division, including Canada, has no assistant sales director other than Clair Hague, who has general sales supervision over the Canadian exchanges.

GOLDEN, COL., MARKS TIME

The Golden, Col., city council again postponed definite action on the petition to repeal the Blue Law ordinance which requires theatres to be closed on Sunday. An open meeting was held on November 20 at the City Hall. M. W. McFarland, manager of the Gem Theatre of Golden, explained that his stand represented the wishes of a majority of citizens. The Student Council of the School of Mines, located in Golden, presented a written communication in support of Sunday movies. Another meeting will be held on December 4 to give the opposing forces another opportunity to be heard.

CHARLES RAY BANKRUPT

Charles Ray has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the Federal Coudt in Los Angeles, listing his liabilities at $986,508 and his assets at $130,355. His father, Charles T. Ray, former president of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., filed a similar decree. The government recently began suit against Ray for $250,000 in back income taxes.

New $50,000 Administration Structure Among Those Planned—Library with 20,000 Volume a Principal Feature CONSTANTLY increasing studio activities, unprecedented production expansion plan, and a building program designed for the purpose of making Fox Films properties among the leading show places in Hollywood and Westwood, involve an expenditure of approximately $500,000, according to a statement made by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager.

New building operations at both the Hollywood and Fox Hills studios have already been started. When the entire program at the Hollywood studios has been carried out, there will have been completed a new Administration Building erected at a cost of $50,000, a new previewing theatre costing $10,000, a new wardrobe building costing $20,000, a new still-portrait studio completely equipped and costing $5,000, a new stage on the East Lot costing $75,000 and an entirely new reception building for the North Western avenue lot inclosure, extending from Delong Pre avenue to Sunset Boulevard, costing $75,000. In addition to these improvements, an entirely new and elaborate landscape garden plan will be carried out.

The new Administration Building, occupancy of which was taken this week, was erected to take care of these departments: First floor—business manager and personal staff, scenario editor and personal staff, individual offices for scenario editor, directors, assistant directors and their staffs. Second floor—art director and his personal staff, scenario writers and readers, technical staff, library.

The new building is of Spanish architecture, the exterior being of stucco with red tile roof and artistic wood lighting and ventilation facilities. The new library, which occupies the southeast corner of the second floor of the Adminstration Building, is believed to be the most complete library ever installed for motion picture purposes. More than 20,000 volumes dealing with every known subject that might be required in connection with the production of the motion picture, and selected after months of meticulous research, occupy its shelves. The library is in charge of an expert librarian and a staff of thoroughly competent assistants who see every motion picture production script for the purpose of passing upon its technical and historical correctness.

The scenario editor, scenario writers and scenario readers and directors constantly call upon the librarian for reference books and information. Every detail in connection with the proper dressing of a scene, from the correct length of a pin to the last word in etiquette, will be found somewhere in the library. In addition to the library there is a large script room where all manuscripts are handled under the direction of a chief script editor and staff. The studio telephone exchange also occupies the Administration Building, and there is a complete dictaphone system in operation in the executive offices.

Now under construction and soon to be completed is the new front on the North Western avenue site of the West Lot. When completed, entrance to the West Lot will be into a reception lobby 40 by 60 feet in dimensions. This lobby will be elaborately finished with a tile floor, tile wainscoting, ivory colored plaster, all of Spanish design, heavy beamed ceiling, and in one corner there will be a pool and wall fountain. An elaborately designed wrought iron door of Spanish design will guard the entrance. The lighting fixtures will also be of wrought iron. Over the entrance, which will be of hand-tooled art stone, there will be a large electric sign illuminated by indirect or concealed lights.

The furnishings of the lobby will be elaborate and in keeping with the Spanish design and color scheme. A uniformed man will be in attendance to direct visitors to an information desk where they may state the nature of their business. It will be necessary for visitors seeking admission to the studio to pass through the lobby. From the lobby a long corridor leads to the interior of the lot, the new Adminstration Building, private bungalows of stars, office of general superintendent, Tom Mix Training Quarters, new previewing theatre and the four stages, all of which occupy about five and one half acres of ground.

One of the most important innovations in connection with these extensive building operations will be the new previewing theatre, which will occupy the site where the present cafeteria is located. The cafeteria is to be removed and the building razed. The new previewing theatre will be the first miniature theatre of its kind in the world. Both its exterior and interior will be of Spanish design. The interior color scheme will be polychrome, with the ceiling in blue. The floor will be in black and tan tile. The indirect niche scheme of lighting will be carried out. On the left side of the theatre facing the stage will be a large and artistically designed fireplace. The proscenium arch will be thirteen feet wide by five feet deep, providing for a large screen and being of a sufficient depth for speakers when assemblies may be held. The seating capacity will be 100 and the seats will be of latest model and upholstered in plush. It is needless to say that this new previewing theatre will be

M. Douglas Flattery Dies Suddenly on Boston Street

MAURICE DOUGLAS FLATTERY, managing director of the Marcus Loew theatres in Boston and long one of the most prominent residents of the city, dropped dead on Wednesday morning, November 25, on Boylston street, near Park square, and for several hours his body, tagged "unidentified," lay upon a marble slab at the Northern mortuary. In addition to his activities in the theatrical realm he was a scientist, doctor, lawyer, professor, philanthropist, author and financier, and a figure whose deeds are recorded in half a column in "Who's Who."

Mr. Flattery was stricken while on his way from his home on Stuart street to his office in the Orpheum Theatre on Washington street. He was seen to suddenly stagger and then fall. At Haymarket Relief Hospital it was found death had been caused by heart disease. His body later was removed to the mortuary. It was not until nearly 6 p. m. that his secretary, John H. Devlin, mystified by his absence from his office throughout the day, identified the body.

M. Douglas Flattery was born at Dungarven, Ireland, in 1870. He came to the United States in 1893 and studied at Centre College in Kentucky. He was professor of physiology at the University of Nebraska in 1894 and at Centre College in 1895-1896. He married Georgina A. Mackie of London in 1897. Upon his return to America he entered Harvard Medical and Law Schools and won his degree from both.

Mr. Flattery built the Copley Theatre and later the present Loew's Orpheum. He also was at the head of the project that comprised the building of Loew's State Theatre Building. He was managing director of Loew's Theatres, Inc., State Theatre Company, Globe Vaudeville Company and Columbia Amusement Company.

Mr. Flattery endowed a radium clinic and laboratory at Carney Hospital. In 1919 he established the Douglas Flattery Foundation at the University of Lyons, France, for research work in preventive medicine. The Flattery medal and $500 yearly prize, donated to Harvard for the most important disease prevention in any section of the world, is eagerly sought. In 1920 he reported to President Harding a plan for organized research work at university centers. He was chairman of the Boston Conservation Board and was advisory chairman of the Boston University Vocational Board. His writings include "Wife or Maid," "A Pair of Knaves," "Annie Laurie" and other works. He also had composed an opera.

Besides his wife Mr. Flattery is survived by one daughter.

Funeral services were conducted on Saturday, November 28, at 11 A. M. The remains were cremated at Forest Hills Crematory.

The esteem in which Mr. Flattery was held among his fellow-stockholders of Loew's Boston Theatres Company was expressed in a resolution adopted at the regular annual meeting of the stockholders on November 27. Mr. Flattery had been vice-president and a director of the company for a number of years.

Out of respect to the memory of Mr. Flattery the Loew theatres in Boston did not open Saturday until 11:15 A. M.

Ontario Theatre Owners Again Elect J. C. Brady President

THE Ontario Motion Picture Theatre Owners once more honored J. C. Brady of Toronto, proprietor of the Madison Theatre, with the presidency of the Ontario association at its annual general convention which was held in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, November 27. Mr. Brady has become the presidential perennial of the independent exhibitors in Ontario, having been their leader for many years. He had opposition, three members being nominated for the presidency, but his majority was quite decisive.

The Ontario M.P.T.O. chose Roy O'Connor, manager of the Prince of Wales Theatre, Toronto, as the 1926 vice-president. It is interesting to note that Mr. O'Connor succeeded Ald. W. A. Summerville of Toronto, who is the owner of the theatre of which Mr. O'Connor is manager. The treasurership again went to Joseph C. Cohen, proprietor of the Classic Theatre, Toronto, while Ray Lewis of Toronto was re-elected secretary.

It was decided that the new Board of Directors would elect the 1926 Grievance and Arbitration Committee from its own membership. The members of this committee are to take turns, in sequence, in handling each case for arbitration. The association is also to open headquarters in Toronto for both fraternal and business purposes.

The Board of Directors was elected as follows: H. Alexander, Harry Ginsler, Sam Bloom, George Lester, S. Lent, C. Rottenberg, A. Pollakoff, S. Fine and S. Major. By a standing vote H. Alexander was unanimously elected chairman of the Board of Directors for 1926.

One new member was elected to the roll, this being V. Saxe of Mount Forest, Ontario. About 150 people sat down to the annual banquet of the Ontario M.P.T.O. at the King Edward Hotel, the vaudeville specialties for which were supplied by the Gus Sun Booking Offices.

Among the Toronto members present were President J. C. Brady, Vice-President R. O'Connor, Treasurer Joe Cohen, Secretary Ray Lewis, Ald. W. A. Summerville, Chairman Harry Alexander, H. King, H. Ginsler, S. Ulster, S. Bloom, H. Lester, S. Fine, M. J. Mentel, A. Applebaum, George Lester, A. Polakoff, S. Major, J. Smith, N. Rittenberg, J. Gertzbein, S. Krestall, A. Baillie, Sam Lent, C. Rottenberg, A. Rottenberg and Mrs. Bloom.

Fox Alters Studio

equipped with the very latest type projection apparatus and everything else providing for perfect screening.

The new wardrobe building to be erected on the East Lot will be 36 by 110 feet in dimension, which probably will make it the largest wardrobe building in Hollywood. Aside from housing perhaps the largest assortment of wardrobes in the motion picture industry, there will be accommodations for costumers and assistants, special fitting rooms and one floor entirely for the use of extras. An innovation in connection with this wardrobe building will be the installation of a large well between the first and second floors. This well will provide for the preservation of valuable rugs and drapes for the reason that they may be draped over the railings instead of being rolled and folded after being in use. Costumes, rugs and drapes kept in this building will be of almost inestimable value. The ever increasing growth of motion picture production activities makes this new wardroble building necessary.

The new still photograph portrait studio has already been installed and is now in operation. It is believed to be the most completely equipped studio of its kind in existence. An expert photographer and staff of assistants is busy from morning until night making portraits of artists under contract to Fox.

For some considerable time since Fox acquired the Fox Hills property, building operations have been going on. Numerous buildings have been erected for permanent use, and a number of streets have been laid out for production purposes. These include a Western street, a New England street, a Spanish street, an old English street, a French ruin street, two haciendas and detached farm houses. In addition to these, operation has been begun upon the construction of a reproduction of the city of Johnstown, Penn., as it appeared in 1889 when the great flood swept it from the valley. This facsimile of Johnstown will be used in connection with "The Johnstown Flood," which is now being produced. Other building operations at Fox Hills include the erection of a cyclorama, a treadmill, skyline, the largest individual motion picture stage in the world, it is said, a new permanent portable stage and new elecrtic generator sets.

FILM MEN AIDED WALKER

Financial contributions to the Walker Campaign Committee in New York City from the motion picture interests amounted to $33,808.10, according to a statement filed with the Secretary of State's office at Albany during the past week. While the statement as filed gives no addresses of the contributors, the list contains contributions from William Dillon of Ithaca, president of the New York State M. P. T. O., of $800; R. Cohen, $3,000; Thomas Meighan, $100; H. Brandt, $200; Sam Zierler, $500; L. and W. Brecher, $600; Harold Franklin, $100; Sidney Kent, $100; W. A. Johnson, $250; Leo Feist, $100; B. Rubin, $1,000; W. Small, $2,000 Harry Buxbaum, $100; Jules Brulatour, $200; W. Shallenberger, $150; J. Shapiro, $250; S. Spring, $500; Lee Ochs, $100; H. Rachmil, $1,000; James Grainger, $100; H. A. Warner, $2,000; P. A. Powers, $250 and A. Suchman, $500.

The Supervising Director Script is the Scenario Script, as it appears when the Supervising Director gets through with it. He weeds out conventional situations and other commonplaces. He introduces dramatically VALID procedure, ILLUMINATES the script with imaginative touches, working with the scenario writer to make the script a thing of dramatic LIFE.

The Continuity Script absorbs the values shown in the Supervising Director Script, with a view of establishing a flawless and final producing-script. Mr. Wisby claims that under this check-up, "exits" and "entrances," for instance, are made fool-proof.

The Scenario of Scenic Effects covers everything pertaining to atmosphere, including the settings, properties, wardrobe, costume, the sets whether exterior or interior, and an index of all localities acually approved for production.

Outstanding in this script are the sequences lending themselves to CREATIVE INTERPRETATION in settings and staging on original lines. As Mr. Wisby puts it:—"Instead of merely REPRODUCING the interior of a cathedral which anyone can do, the Director of Scenic Effects CREATES a stylistic motif expressing the particular ecclesiastical note wanted. The setting is built around that note interpretatively. NOTHING is copied or imitated or reproduced. A stylistic creation has been made, which may be counted upon to produce a far more VIVID and ENDURING impression than mere mechanical reproduction of something made for an entirely different purpose."

The sequences in the script which lend themselves to this treatment are blocked out and directions given on which the Director of Scenic Effects may intelligently go to work.

The Scenario of Special Cinematography is given to the Director of Cinematography. In this script the Supervising Director has visualized certain novel effects in lighting and photography. It gives the camera artist a chance to think over his OWN problem—an original conception of photography for interpreting the action of the drama. It encourages him to BROADEN and DEEPEN the suggestions made.

The Master Scenario is a portfolio into which are poured the production values of the preceding scripts. Only one scene is described on a page. Under it are affixed the supplementary values pointing to that one scene from the five other scripts. This information is supplied in the briefest form possible, the object being to furnish the Director of Cast and the Supervising Director with a COMPLETELY ORGANIZED conception of each scene on one portfolio page.

Here then, is a brief outline of the Wisby Plan of production. A plan in which NOTHING is left to CHANCE, but in which a GREAT DEAL is left to the IMAGINATION and the INDIVIDUAL TALENT of ALL the units entering into harmonious execution of the plan AT the moment of actual production.

Wisby is the first regisseur—pardon!—Supervising Director who has methodized every element of production and "housed" them in a system, technically known as a Regie. The New York Times in a two-column editorial, "Pictures First" said of the Wisby Plan:—"Hrolf Wisby certainly gives one the impression that he could do a great deal with the underlying idea if he had the chance. Anyhow, the idea is good. It is SOUND and CINEMATOGRAPHIC."

We talk a great deal about the German system of production. The Plan which Wisby has perfected dates ahead of the German studio system. And it goes, too, beyond it.

Executives of several producing companies are now examining into the Wisby Plan. It would be a treat to see this man take the oldest and most hackneyed theme in the world and treat it in a picture along ORIGINAL, CREATIVE lines.

(Another instalment of "OF the Screen, BY the Screen and FOR the Screen" will appear in Moving Picture World next week.)

ALL THE LLOYDS AT ONCE—Sure! Mildred Harris (Mrs. Lloyd) and the tiny Miss Gloria Lloyd (center), with Mrs. Mildred (at left) getting back into films after three years in "Behind the Front" and Harold himself (at right) —he's mislaid his "specs," he's working so hard on "For Heaven's Sake"—and both stars and pictures are under Paramount banner.

Who Is Hrolf Wisby?

WHO is Hrolf Wisby, the Dane, of whose Plan of Picture Production these articles treat? Hrolf Wisby is a broadly educated, widely travelled author and connoisseur, who gave up his Danish title, Baron Dewitz, and Grand Ducal Chamberlain honors to become an American citizen. He spent more than sixteen years in exploration, travel and as an officer of the Royal Danish Navy he circumnavigated the world with Prince Valdemar, the nephew of the late Queen Mother of England. He was the mess-mate and boyhood chum of Prince Karl of Denmark, who became King Haakon VII of Norway.

Hrolf Wisby invented, together with Capt. R. E. Scott, U. S. A., not only the aerial torpedo, but the battle-aeroplane, the most decisive factor in the World War. Previously, in 1904, on a special tour of the United States, he introduced an improved system of business management, which later on became known, and was widely imitated, as efficiency science.

He is the author of "War's New Weapons," the first technical volume on the World War, prefaced by Hudson Maxim, who considers it the most valuable book on the subject. He was Supervising Director for Mme. Oda, prima of the Royal Danish Theatre, and for Mlle. l'Aerolia, the Belgian diva. He made "Diana," a three-reel picture in which none but amateurs appeared, first shown as the feature attraction at the New York Mark Strand, and which earned in excess of 800 per cent of its cost. He supervised "Daughter of Destiny," in which Olga Petrova appeared for First National the first time.

A lifetime of study and travel; seven years of close application to the arts and sciences, from the PICTURE viewpoint ONLY—after years of WORKING study of the screen; these are PARTS welded into the Wisby Plan of Production, presented in a series of articles, beginning herewith. As you will see, the background which Mr. Wisby possesses is essential to the highly organized Plan which he has perfected.

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

12 Miles Out

WILLIAM ANTHONY McGUIRE has written and presented a lusty, romantic melodrama—"12 Miles Out"—which could be quite happily transferred to the screen.

Jane Burton (Mildred Florence) has been miserably married for three years to a yapping bit of legal promposity, John Burton. (Albert Hackett). She obligingly married him because he saved her brother, Chuck, from prison. This charming but erring boy has returned after a long absence to make his home with his sister, much to John's discomfiture. The three are sitting at dinner in John's modest little house on Long Island—a half mile from the nearest neighbor,—when, in the midst of a storm, Gerald Fay (Warren William) a rum runner, bursts in, followed by his men. He is being chased and commandeers the house to store his liquor. John yelps around about "upholding the law," etc., but he is pushed aside and many cases of Johnny Walker, Haig and Haig, et al, are landed.

Nobody is permitted to leave the house, but Chuck opens a case on his own, gets tight, tells friend brother-in-law what a skunk he is and tears out to catch a train back to New York. A shot is heard. Chuck has been killed by hi-jackers, commanded by Michael McCue (Frank Shannon) who have been pursuing Gerald. The hi-jackers rush into the house and force all the occupants—nor do they forget the liquor—on board Mike's old scow and start south.

Both Mike and Gerald fall in love with Jane whose husband by this time proves himself a coward of rare low order. In a fight between run runner and hi-jacker, Mike is mortally wounded and dies in his cabin just as a revenue cutter captures the whole outfit.

Of course rum runner gets the girl, but she just came along for the ride, for it's a man's play—magnificently written and magnificently acted down to the last male character.

Morals

IT would be difficult to screen Ludwig Thoma's delightful play "Morals" which Dudley Digges is staging at the Comedy Theatre without seriously offending the censorship regulations. No way has been found, to date, by which a house of prostitution can be hexed into an ice cream parlor.

La Tosca

PASSION stalks through every second of Puccini's opera "La Tosca" which, musically and dramatically, is outstanding and could be made into an intense, vivid picture.

The character requirements are not difficult: Tosca, a famous singer, Mario, a painter, and Baron Scarpia, Chief of Police. However, the role of Tosca would have to be played by a brilliant-minded woman of mature beauty; an actress with hips, heart, hair and head. No shingled, spindle-legged, sexless dramatic junior could interpret the part which Jeritza has so ennobled.

When we recall that all the scenes are laid in Rome where every building is a cathedral, every day a Holy day, religious processions more numerous than bath tubs and Italian girls break into warm womanhood at the same age that the average American girl is having braces made for her teeth—we can understand how limitless is the color which could be put into this production.

The lion-jealous, cobra-true, indescribably beautiful Tosca loves Mario and loathes Scarpia. To avenge himself Scarpia has the painter arrested for assisting Cesare Angelotti, a revolutionary, to escape. Tosca—in a gorgeous white costume which enhances the loveliness of her voluptuous figure, comes to plead for her lover. The Chief of Police is sitting at dinner calmly eating some fruit. Tosca's blood is turned to water when she hears horrible, animal-like screams from the next room. Mario is being tortured to betray the whereabouts of Angelotti.

Scarpia swears to save Mario's life if Tosca will give him her love that very night. She vainly implores him by the Madonna and by God to release her. He only laughs: "Already the gallows stretch to heaven; the death drums can even now be heard."

Hopelessly she promises. He goes to the writing table and signs the purported pardon. While his back is turned Tosca's little hands—made for caresses, accustomed childlike to be joined in prayer—steal along the table and reach a fruit knife. Scarpia turns and tries to melt her with his kisses. She stabs him, hissing as he draws his last breath: "Die in your damnation."

With a terrible sort of religious fascination, she places holy candles at the dead monster's head and feet and falls out into the night. She flies to the prison as the sun breaks over Rome; rushes to the top of the tall building where the execution is about to take place; crushes the pardon into the chief official's hand and runs to Mario's arms whispering: "You are free. Scarpia is dead. I have killed him. A carriage waits below to take us to a ship—and then on the deep sea. But first the soldiers must pretend justice. Scarpia has written them to use blank cartridges as they did the last time. When they shoot, fall; lie still; don't move a muscle. Then we will fly. Freedom trembles in the morning air. Love has vanished death."

Mario faces the squad bravely and is shot—dead, as the last prisoner was. Tosca agonizingly realizes that even in death, Scarpia has betrayed her. Her screams mount higher and higher in a horrible crescendo: Mario, Mario! MARIOMARIOMARIO! The police arrive at that moment to arrest her for Scarpia's murder. She tears herself from Mario's body, climbs to the parapet around the top of the prison wall, stands for a second defying her tormentors and then jumps to join Mario as her beautiful body breaks into pieces on the courtyard stones far below.

Paid

IT COSTS at least $50 to be born and three times that amount, anyway, to be buried—even with a cut rate undertaker. It's money, money, money from the cradle to the crematorium. At the Booth Theatre Sam Harris is presenting Sam Forrest's "Paid" which deals exclusively with the "long green," and if this plan is put on the screen it will be enthusiastic interest to every person carrying in his pocket a dirty envelope with a single sheet inside: "Account rendered; please remit." Naturally, for those few who cut their teeth on platinum rattles and pay their bills promptly on the first of the month this picture will hold no thrills.

It's a simple story: Two poor families, the Ramseys and the Baxters; Ramsey is trying to perfect an electrical invention that will revolutionize indusrty; he needs $5,000; Baxter is a scarcely-efficient, egotistic floorwalker who by eight years of self denial has saved $4,950. He disbelieves in banks and keeps the money hidden at home until his wife nearly has a nervous breakdown. She threatens to leave him if he doesn't permit her to put the funds in safe keeping. He gives a grudging consent. She starts out with the money in a shabby old handbag clutched in her hand.

A thief picks her pocket, loses courage and throws the pocketbook into a darkened doorway until the crowd subsides when he plans to return. But Ramsey happens along, sees the bag, picks it up and steps into a taxicab just as the thief doubles back in his vain search.

Ramsey, encouraged by his wife, keeps the money, invests it in his electrical invention and makes an enormous success. Regardless of this dishonesty he is a man of fine character and searches until he finds Baxter, who thoroughly crushed by the loss of his money, has fallen lower and lower until at last he is working as a waiter in a modest restaurant. Ramsey gives Baxter a position in his factory at $75 a week and gradually increases his salary until at the end of fifteen years he is making $30,000 a year besides receiving twice that amount from stock dividends.

Baxter is an abominable egotist and cynic. If he had not lost the money he would never have made a success. He is inefficient, boastful, forgetful and envious. He hates his benefactor and proves such a poor business man that Ramsey has to create a special department for him which isn't of the slightest consequence except in Baxter's eyes.

Of course, the Baxters have a daughter and the Ramseys a son, who inevitably fall in love. But the ending isn't inane or sugary. It's a fine play and would make a stirring picture.

Edward Ellis in his interpretation of Baxter is superb and Roger Pryor as Ramsey Jr., is the equal of any juvenile I have ever seen.

Robert T. Kane has acquired the rights of Michael Arlen's The Dancer of Paris.

Columbia Pictures have purchased the screen rights to Guy de Maupassant's Poor Girl, which Charles Frohman produced on the legitimate stage many years ago.

Switching the Spotlight to the Exhibitor

Albany's Film Row to Shift in Spring

FILM ROW in Albany will be shifted a mile to the north next spring, for judging from present indications the majority of the exchanges are planning to house themselves in the new film building being erected and which will give each exchange a unit to itself. Exhibitors visiting Albany will find the exchanges quartered on the road between Albany and Troy. Already a half dozen have taken leases, with others reported to follow suit.

Walter Seaman, who runs theatres in Highland, Marlboro and Milton, is reported as being about to take over a theatre in New Paltz from the Hasbroucks. The house was originally slated to go to Irving Lesser, but the deal fell through for some reason, and now Mr. Seaman is giving the theatre more than the once-over.

John Mattice, a well-known exhibitor in Middleburg, kept his word and as a result the biggest rooster that ever came to Green Island graced the table of the Halligan family on Thanksgiving Day. Some time ago while Mr. Mattice was in town he told Mr. Halligan that he would take care of him for his Thanksgiving Day dinner. Lo and behold, there arrived the forepart of the week a rooster standing at least three feet in height, crated as nice as one could desire. The rooster was such a beauty, moreover, that Mr. Halligan couldn't muster up the courage to use the axe and was forced to summon a butcher. Matthew Moran of Coxsackie also remembered Mr. Halligan the forepart of the week with a couple of broilers.

A Catholic priest argued his case before the Film Board in this city last week, the first instance of its kind in the history of the board. And what's more important to Father O'Riley, who runs the house in Rosendale, and the person in question, he presented his case so ably that he won out. Father O'Riley has been on the sick list, but has recovered and is as active as ever.

Edward Reynolds, a door tender at the Leland in Albany, had little to be thankful for this past Thanksgiving, for the day before he was struck by an automobile and suffered a fracture of his leg. Mr. Reynolds was taken to the Albany hospital where he is now on the road to recovery.

It looks as though Al Robbins of Syracuse would head a new theatre in Itthaca. The two brothers, Al and Nate, had a long talk on the matter one day last week. It is said that several business men in the college town are behind the deal.

There was certainly some crowd at the Rialto in Schenectady as well as the Rose in Troy on the two nights just before Thanksgiving, during which live turkeys were given away. One of the birds broke loose from Mike Freeman of the Rialto and was captured only after a long chase through the house.

The Kajamuck Theatre in Broadalbin, which got its name from the Indian folk lore of the locality, has now closed to one night a week for the winter.

There is still no relief in sight in Albany, Troy and Schenectady from the present coal shortage, and unless something occurs soon some of the houses will be forced to close. A cold snap on Sunday set more than one exhibitor to wondering just how he would get out of the latest difficulty. Theatre owners are conserving their coal supply in every possible way, cutting down the heat to a minimum whenever the house is not in operation.

Charles Sesonski of the Grand in Johnstown was speechless last Tuesday night, strange as it may seem. During the day he was besieged by film salsemen and by night was hoarse from saying "no" at least 500 times.

Sam Hochstim, who runs the Star in Hudson and who has just joined the Kiwanis Club in that city, tells an amusing story of an incident that occurred the other night. It appears that Mr. Hochstim has a fire extinguisher in the lobby of his house. He noticed a patron, obviously from the country, taking hold of the extinguisher. Going over to the man he asked him what he was doing. The man in reply asked if the contrivance was one of these "new fangled drinking water affairs."

Mrs. Francis McGraw, manager of the Rialto in Little Falls, a Schine house, was among those present at the opening of the Capitol in Ilion a week or so ago. Following the second show of the evening, Robert Pierce, manager of the theatre, entertained at a buffet lunch at the Elks Club, with the mayor and other city officials among those present. The house will maintain a seven-piece orchestra.

Exhibitors in Northern New York will be interested in the fact that Austin Interrante, who has been traveling that section of the state for the local Fox exchange, has been named as manager of the Warner Brothers exchange in Albany, succeeding J. N. Klein, who goes with Associated Exhibitors.

With Christmas trade picking up in his large general store, Bill Donovan of Tupper Lake will probably find little time for his theatre between now and New Year's.

Another minister of the gospel is operating a picture theatre along with his church and gathering in the shekels that go toward meeting the expense of the church. He is the Rev. Mr. Weaver of South New Berlin, who runs one night a week and fills the pulpit of the Methodist Church on Sundays.

Dave McLoughlin of Oriskany Falls is now running three nights a week, and between his dances and his motion pictures he says that he has no fear of the wolf at his door this winter. Business is good at the knitting mills of the village.

Harvey Edick, who runs the theatre in West Winfield, a dot on the map outside the city of Utica, believes that good music adds 50 per cent. to the entertainment of a picture program. While Mr. Edick is operating Saturday nights only, he uses a five-piece orchestra and gets 35 cents for his high-type entertainment.

There is one person in Central New York who doesn't haggle over the price of film. If he thinks the picture will please, that is all there is to it. He is I. M. Charlton, head of the State Agricultural School in Morrisville, where pictures are shown once a week for the entertainment of the students principally, and with an admission price that allows the school to merely break even. The Oneida Community also runs pictures one night a week for its employes.

If you are seeking gasoline around Fonda, you know "Van"—in other words William Van Alstyne—who has a big gasoline station and who also runs the picture theatres in Fonda and Fultonville.

The Astor in Troy opened for a few days last week in showing a feature picture with an orchestra directed by Maurice Rosenberg, as well as a prologue. It is said that the house, which has been closed for several months, may reopen shortly under new management and become a direct competitor of the Rose and the Lincoln.

Robson Opens Family In Albion, N. Y.

W. H. ROBSON who has operated the Family Theatre in Albion, N. Y., for many years, opened his new Rialto in that town on the evening of December 2. The beautiful, modern house is on the site of the former Sheret Post, American Legion home. The capacity is 800. The building is two stories high. The old Family has been closed. Pictures and vaudeville will be the policy of the new theatre.

The new Thurston Theatre in Rochester will open next Saturday. Al K. Root, manager, and Maurice West, owner, were in Buffalo the other day lining up some big features for this newest community house in the Flower City. The house, which is on Thurston road, has a capacity of 1,000.

The contract for the new Commerford house in Waverly, N. Y., has been awarded to the Breig Construction Company of Scranton. The theatre will cost about $250,000.

Elmer C. Winegar of Winegar Pictures, Inc., and Fred M. Shafer, manager of the Lafayette Square, have been appointed members of the Ismailia Temple entertainment committee. Some real surprises should be forthcoming at the next Shrine ceremonial in the new Consistory Building on December 11.

The Madison Plantation Serenaders, who have been appearing at the Old Teck Cafe, have been engaged by Manager R. S. Averill to hand out their jazz at the Olympic the week of December 6. Ray is after that bonus check offered to the Schine house turning in the most business in Schine Month.

Baltimore's Victoria Goes to Berman

LOUIS BERMAN, Washington, D. C., exchange man, has taken over the Victoria Theatre on the block. The theatre has been renamed the Embassy and will reopen on or about December 25.

Morris Flax of the New Lincoln Theatre has taken over the Roosevelt on Pennsylvania avenue. Mr. Flax also controlled the Northwestern Theatre which closed several months ago.

Benjamin Dishner has sold his Pictorial Theatre in East Baltimore to A. Silver, who formerly controlled the Regent Theatre in Washington, D. C.

Guy L. Wonders of the Rivoli Theatre has returned from Washington, D. C., a winner in the golf tournament held by the Washington Film Board of Trade.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland have retained Martin Lehmeyer, Baltimore, attorney, as assistant counsel. J. Louis Rome, local exhibitor, is chief counsel for the organization.

Scrip Books Selling in San Francisco

SCRIP books containing tickets good for admission at the California, Granada, Imperial and St. Francis Theatres, San Francisco, will find their way into many a stocking this Christmas. Last year several thousand were sold for gift giving and sales commenced early this year, suggesting that they will prove more popular than ever. Tickets purchased in this manner represent a saving of about 16 per cent. and do away with any need for standing in line at the box office. Special scrip book booths have been installed in the lobbies of the theatres for the holiday season, the regular newspaper advertising copy suggests scrip books for Christmas gifts and the message is repeated on film trailers. The books are put out in two sizes, one selling for $5 and the other for $10.

Plans are being completed for the erection of a picture house at York and Twenty-fourth streets, San Francisco, by Al Levin and associates. The theatre will seat 1,000 and cost about $225,000.

Richard Speir, who has been handling publicity work for some time for the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, has ben made house manager, succeeding Harry David who resigned recently to become managing director of the Coliseum and Alexandria theatres, taken over by Herbert L. Rothschild.

Lucindo Freitas, well known exhibitor of Stockton, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row and reported a wonderful trip to to Europe. Now that he is back in the harness again, he is planning to enlarge his theatre interests and a chain of small houses is contemplated.

The Lyric Theatre at Marysville, Cal., was visited by a fire recently, necessitating the closing of the house for four days. The blaze did not originate in the theatre, but for a time it seemed as though the house was doomed.

J. W. Bascom, who is erecting a splendid new picture house at Mount Shasta City, Cal., is conducting a contest for a suitable name. The new theatre will be ready for occupancy at an early date.

J. A. Harvey, Jr., is building a 500-seat theatre at Santa Cruz, Cal., and expects to open this about the middle of December.

Frank Panero, who has been an exhibitor at Delano, Cal., for many years, will shortly open a handsome new theatre there to supplant the old one.

Lewis & Byrd are remodeling the Universal and Pastime Theatres at Hanford, Cal., and will have virtually new houses when the work is completed. The Universal has been closed for about a year. They also conduct the T. & D. Theatre in that city, but the lease on this may be given up when the other two are in running order again.

The Glade Theatre of Wobber Bros. at Lindsay, Cal., has been renovated for the winter.

D. D. Sims, who conducts a picture theatre at Fowler, is now speed cop in that district. He has arranged to close the house at Del Rey.

A. Wylie Mather, managing director of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, T. H., is expected in San Francisco shortly.

M. S. Vidaver, the live-wire director of publicity for the Greenfield Theatres, San Francisco, will leave shortly for a belated vacation in the southern part of the state.

Harry W. Poole, of the Liberty Theatre, Klamath Falls, Ore., was a visitor at San Francisco late in November.

The Wheatland Theatre, conducted by C. R. Beilby at Wheatland, Cal., has been redecorated and placed in fine shape for the winter.

Walla Walla's Arcade Sold To Inland Empire Theatres

THE Arcade Theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., G. E. Terhune, manager, has been taken over by the Inland Empire Theatres Co., of which Edwin B. Rivers and Mr. Pine are organizers. It is not known whether a corporation has been formed which includes Mr. Terhune or whether he has withdrawn entirely. Mr. Rivers was formerly exploitation manager of the Seattle Heilig Theatre.

Guy Hazelton has started a Country Store one night a week at his Rialto, Missoula, Mont., with excellent results.

Visitors to Seattle Film Row this week were Lon Brown, Brown's Theatre, Snohomish, Wash.; George Reisner, Tokay Theatres, Raymond and South Bend; Ray Grombacher, Spokane; Mr. Quinn of the Liberty and Capitol, Olympia, Wash.

George F. Bessenger has sold his Madrona Garden to Pacific Theatres Co., owners of Seattle's finest suburban houses. The Madrona Garden was opened in May. P. E. Irving, former manager of the Mission, Georgetown, is managing the house. R. E. Ulsh has been appointed manager of the Mission.

Considerable interest over the Spokane situation has been evinced of late. Stripped of its various "rumors" the situation appears to be this. Ray Grombacher, when signing for this year's product, signed for both first and second runs. At that time, Mr. Grombacher was operating the Class A as a sceond-run house. Some time ago, however, this house was partly destroyed by fire. In remodeling, it was completely changed in style, decorated and reopened as a first-run theatre, being renamed the Egyptian. This left Grombacher with no second-run houses. In seeking an outlet for the second runs contracted for, he is reported to have tried to secure Maurice Oppenheimer's Hippodrome and the Will Starkey circuit, which consists of the Empress, Rex and Majestic. The Hippodrome has since gone to first- runs at a 25-cent admission, which apparently eliminates it from such an arrangement. It is believed by those who profess to know that Starkey is not interested. A further report states that Grombacher is endeavoring to make a deal with John Danz, who operates the American in Spokane, as they were observed together on a recent trip to Seattle of Mr. Grombacher, who is reported to be buying up first-run product.

Seattle is to hav a new Orpheum Theatre. Confirmation has just been received of the reports which were strenuously denied a few weeks ago. The location selected, at Fifth avenue and Stewart street, was purchased outright for $300,000. The house will cost $1,500,000. Construction will be begun before the first of the year. The house will seat 3,000, more than 1,500 to be accommodated on the lower floor. There will be but one balcony. It is planned to have the house ready for occupancy next September. The building will be six stories in height. It will contain some offices and stores, but the greater part will be used for theatrical purposes.

Serraro Badly Shot in Ford City, Pa.

DOMINICK SERRARO, aged 45 years, owner of the Savoy Theatre, Ford City, Pa., was shot and badly wounded on November 24, police say, by his brother-in-law, James Izzo. The alleged assailant was errested shortly after the shooting and Serrara was removed to the Kittanning Hospital. Serrara was standing in front of his theatre when, according to witnesses, Izzo approached him and, taking a revolver from his pocket, opened fire on Serraro.

Joseph Paul, well-known treasurer of the Davis Theatre, Pittsburgh, is dead at the age of 37 years, after but four days' illness of pneumonia. At one time deceased was a salesman at the local Paramount exchange.

Among the out-of-town exhibitor visitors seen on Pittsburgh's Film Row recently were J. George Schweitzer, Titusville; Charles Feinler, Wheeling; B. E. Cupler and Nat Walken, Washington; John Zwick, Finleyville; C. M. McCloskey, Uniontown; Charles Johns, Republic; Mr. Baer, Altoona; Mr. Lipsie, Blairsville, and Charles Truran, Meadville.

M. Roth, who recently sold his Seven Stars Theatre at Phillipsburg to Fred Thompson, of Curwensville, is spending a few days in Pittsburgh.

Kansas City Mourning Old Bijou Theatre

KANSAS CITY, especially the North Side, this week is mourning the loss of one of the pioneer landmarks in the picture industry—the Bijou Theatre, owned by Denny Costello. The theatre, which for two decades has had its run from a first-class house to a "palace de opera" for "Flop" houses, has been supplanted by a shoe store. The theatre long has stood as the amusement center of the North Side, being located across the street from the old city market. Always has it featured the wild west drama and the slapstick comedy.

With the completion of the installation of the new $35,000 organ at the Newman Theatre, Kansas City. Earl Thurston, who comes direct from London, where he won recognition as composer of "The Midnight Follies," has been obtained as organist. The new organ is the largest in the state, having the musical capacity of a 100-piece symphony orchestra.

Samuel Carver, manager of the Liberty, first-run down-town house of Kansas City, put over a real exploitation feat this week when he obtained the sanction of the Kansas City School Board to stage an essay contest among 75,000 school children in conjunction with the showing of "As No Man Has Loved." This is one of the rarely few times the school board has sanctioned such an event.

The staging of Charleston dance contests continues to be the best money-making novelty bet among suburban houses in Kansas City despite the fact that the practice has been in vogue several months. This week Adolph Eisner, manager of the Circle Theatre, and A. Wittman, manager of the Strand, "stood them up" with just another "contest."

The Elite Theatre, Humbolt, Kans., was destroyed by fire on November 20, the damage amounting to about $20,000. Oscar Reinert, owner, has not announced if he will rebuild.

Among exhibitors in Kansas City last week were: A. F. Perkins, Schnell Theatre, Harrisonville, Mo.; Glenn Dickerson, Dickerson chain of theatres, Lawrence, Kans.; G. L. Hooper, National Theatre Amusement Company, Topeka, Kans.; Al Kraft, Lyceum, St. Joseph, Mo.; L. Brenninger, Crystal and Cozy, Topeka, Kans.; G. C. The Strand Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has been re-opened after a period of darkness, with a combination policy of tabloid musical comedy, moving picture features and vaudeville. A new six-piece orchestra has been organized, three shows are given daily and prices range up to 30 cents. "Plenty for your money" is the slogan of the theatre. The house was recently redecorated throughout.

F. G. Spencer, owner of the Unique Theatre, St. John, N. B., has made the front of this house, a new feature being two box windows just off the lobby for miniature displays. The Unique has been repainted throughout.

After five weeks' continuous presentation at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, Harold Lloyd's "The Freshman" was withdrawn on November 28 by Manager D. C. Brown to make way for a special unlimited engagement of "The Iron Horse." Along Exchange Row

With the Men Who Sell the Pictures

Kansas City

Business along Kansas City's movie row smacked of dollars this week. A. A. Renfro, Pathe salesman, was promoted to city salesman to succeed Frank Cass, who went to the West Coast as special short subjects representative. More than six Parent-Teacher associations have agreed to support "The Wizard of Oz" when it shows in their communities, according to C. E. Rhoden, manager of the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc. Leo Adler, Pathe auditor of the home office, was checking over the Kansas City books. Ben Reingold, Omaha Fox manager, was visiting film row friends, he being enroute to Oklahoma City to attend a sales convention. Louis Reichart, Warner Bros., branch manager, set forth for a trip to the Kansas key towns, while Jim Flynn, P. D. C. home office representative, was in Kansas City on business. R. L. MacLean, P. D. C. district representative, left for St. Louis after a long stay in Kansas City. C. F. Senning, Educational branch manager, hurried out to visit the Kansas key towns, but not until after he had announced that 75 per cent. of Kansas City's theatres had signed for Educational's new product. The First National Club gave a "Kid" party which was proclaimed to be a "wow," all in attendance being attired in juvenile clothes. J. E. Flynn, district manager; E. M. Saunders and Sam Burger, special representatives for Metro-Goldwyn, were Kansas City visitors. A. W. Day, Warner Bros., office manager, has announced that "from now on" there will be weekly meetings of the entire office force for the purpose of discussing all problems. R. S. Ballantyne, new Pathe district manager, was a Kansas City visitor. All Metro-Goldwyn salesmen were called in for a sales meeting and departed with "pep" in abundance.

Chicago

Film Row and leading exhibitors gave a testimonial dinner to John Mednikow, who resigned last week as short subject sales manager for Universal to become manager of the Chicago offices of the Associated Exhibitors at 1025 South Wabash avenue. The big feed was pulled off November 23 at the Gold Room of the Congress Hotel with 137 film men at the table. Si Greiver introduced Joe Hopp, managing director of the American Theatres circuit, as toastmaster, and then the fun began. First of all, the boys gave Johnny a fine desk set for his new headquarters and of course he told them how thankful he was to have such good friends after all these years in the film trade. P. A. Powers, chairman of the board of Associated Exhibitors, stopped off on his way west to give the assembled guests a talk. Dan Lederman, western representative, added a few kind words. Toastmaster Joe Hopp called on Joe Freidman, manager of Celebrated Players, to tell the crowd how he gave Johnny his first job. Jimmy Gillick, Pathe manager added his tribute to the others. Will Brumberg, new manager of the Universal Exchange, made a happy little talk and Henri Ellman of the Capital Film Exchange added a few more kind words. The comedy hit of the evening was the presentation to Aaron Saperstein of the Saperstein circuit of a few herrings to remind him how salty he'd become. A fourteen act vaudeville bill, introduced by Joe Pastel, finished the evening and the boys all said it was "some night."

H. O. Martin has been named sales supervisor of Associated Exhibitors with headquarters in this territory. E. J. Smith, general sales manager, was in the city for the change of managers.

Harris, who comes to town after much experience in the exchange end of the business, having last been associated with Pathe, has been appointed to succeed Charlie Goodwin as Rochester salesman for the Universal office. Mr. Goodwin, who had covered the Rochester territory ever since the city was established, recently was appointed branch manager.

A ray of hope has appeared on the horizon for G. E. Dickman, salesman extraordinary for the Fox exchange. It is reported that H. E. Hughes, F. B. O. sales representative, has discovered a sure cure for hair that does the disappearing act and has almost closed a deal with "Emmy" for a demonstration on his dome of the dope.

Things were rather quiet along Film Row and in the industry in general the past week. Seeking the reason we found that Bill Bork, Paramount booker, was on jury duty. We hope no exhibitors were hauled before the tribunal.

C. L. Hickman has joined the sales staff of the new Arrow office. He formerly was with Warner Brothers.

Five Pictures Now in Production At Warner's West Coast Studios

WITH five pictures in production, and others in the process of editing and cutting, these are busy times at the Warner Bros. West Coast Studios, in Hollywood. The activity which set in at the beginning of the production season has been maintained without let-up, with the result that the current schedule is now almost finished and preparations for several specials on the 1926-27 program are under way.

The pictures now in production are "The Night Cry," "Nightie Night Nurse," (temporary title), "Don Juan," "Other Women's Husbands" and "The Bride of the Storm."

"The Night Cry" company is about to leave for location on a northern California sheep ranch, where all the exteriors of the picture will be made. The cast so far includes, besides Rin-Tin-Tin, the wonder dog, June Marlowe, John Harron, Gayne Whitman, "Heinie" Conklin, Don Alvarado and Mary Louise Miller. Herman Raymaker is directing, E. P. Dupar is the cameraman, and the scenario is by Ewart Adamson, whom the Warners signed for this picture.

The company making Syd Chaplin's next, the picture temporarily titled "Nightie Night Nurse," has resumed work on interiors, having returned to the studios after location work aboard a boat. The production is now almost finished. Patsy Ruth Miller has the leading woman's role and in the cast also are Gayne Whitman, Matthew Betz, Edith Rorke, David Torrence, Raymond Wells, Ed Kennedy and Henry Barrows. "Chuck" Reisner is the director and John Mescall is at the camera. The story is by Robert E. Sherwood, with scenario by Darryl Francis Zanuck.

Sheldon Lewis and Emily Fitzroy were added this week to the cast of "Don Juan," on which John Barrymore is hard at work, with Alan Crosland directing. Byron Haskins is the cameraman.

The company making "The Bride Of The Storm," from James Francis Dwyer's magazine story has returned from Laguna Beach, where it was on location. Dolores Costello and John Harron are the principals in the cast. J. Stuart Blackton is directing from the scenario by Marion Constance, with Nick Musuraca at the camera.

Huntly Gordon and Phyllis Haver have been added to the cast of "Other Women's Husbands," the forthcoming Monte Blue-Marie Prevost starring production. This is the third consecutive picture for which Miss Haver has signed with the Warners. She is to play the vamp, or "other woman," while Gordon has the role of the "other man."

"Other Women's Husbands" will be the first picture in which Blue and Miss Prevost will have appeared together since the Ernst Lubitsch production, "Kiss Me Again," which scored a great hit. Their reunion in another early attraction was in response to an insistent demand, and Monte voluntarily sacrificed a trip to New York to fit in with the plans. Erle C. Kenton is directing "Other Women's Husbands," which is a comedy drama written for the screen by E. T. Lowe, Jr., Charles Van Enger was selected as the cameraman.

Louise Fazenda has finished her work in "Hassan," in which she played a featured role while being lent by the Warners to Famous Players-Lasky. Warner Bros. have now lent Alice Calhoun to play the feminine lead in the Harry Langdon picture, "Nobody," and, as soon as they finish the work in which they are now engaged, Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller will be lent to F. B. O. to play leads in "The King of the Turf."

NO—NOT AN AD. for a safety razor—it's Matt Moore: Warner Bros. made him this way for the title role in "The Cave Man."

Arlen Coming East

Michael Arlen, the brilliant young British novelist, has departed from Hollywood for New York where he will complete the final arrangements for production of his story, "The Ace of Cads," as a Paramount starring vehicle for Adolphe Menjou. Mr. Menjou is already in New York and the production will be filmed at the Famous Players' Long Island studio. This is to be Mr. Arlen's first contribution to the screen and under his contract with Paramount he is to write a series of original stories for films, one of which will be for Pola Negri.

Fraser Predicts Keenest of Production And Selling Competition for Next Year

THE keenest competition, from a production and selling angle, the motion picture business ever has known, is going to make 1926 an epochal year for the cinema, in the opinion of William R. Fraser, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation.

"The year which is now rapidly drawing to a close, was, taken on the whole, a very good year from a production standpoint," states Mr. Fraser, "but developed little of a substantial or startling nature. But every indication points to a remarkable year during the next twelfth month, because the competition will be so keen every individual producer in the industry will have to be on his mettle to meet the high class product of his rival. This goes for big companies as well as for the smaller producing units.

"A picture educated public has demonstrated more forcibly than ever during the waning year that they no longer will accept the poor pictures, and on the other hand that they will give the fullest measure of support to the higher grade product. First run houses are now closed to a certain type of product which a few years ago were big money makers for the producer, if not for the exhibitor. And during the new year the exhibitor is going to demand only the kind of pictures which with the aid of proper exploitation will bring him the biggest box office results, and give his patrons the utmost satisfaction.

"The main trouble with most pictures during the present year has been their lack of story material. It has been demonstrated time and again that the storyless motion picture is passe. In my opinion the star will always remain paramount in this industry, as in almost any amusement or sport, but even the greatest luminary left high and dry with poor story material is bound to suffer a loss of public prestige. I think this was clearly illustrated in a number of instances through 1925.

"You cannot escape from the fact that a popular star is a great goodwill asset for any theatre. There are countless thousands who never go to a motion picture except when their favorite star, or stars, are playing there. Take for example the tremendous run enjoyed by "The Freshman" at the Colony Theatre in New York. Mr. Lloyd's picture ran there for ten weeks—every one of them a record breaker. New Yorkers in the industry figured no picture ever could do that at the Colony. Yet 'The Freshman' did. But the point I want to emphasize is that this production attracted housands to the Colony Theatre who never before had been there. Undoubtedly many of them were totally surprised to find it was such an excellent theatre, and henceforth will become regular patrons of it. That is the kind of "good will" the popular star builds for the theatre. The same is true of the really great picture, but then in a majority of cases we find that it is big stars who make 'big' pictures.

"There apparently is a dearth of story material available for the screen, and I sincerely hope that the new year will bring out a new angle of thought among writers who know how to pen words that can be transcribed into motion picture action. It seems to me that many great writers fail at motion picture work because of their inability to grasp the difference between high sounding words and faultlessly constructed plots, rather than words that could be photographed in action. In other terms, they lack what has come to be known as 'picture minds.'

"Producers are eager and willing to pay the highest price for story material, and are constantly giving enormous sums for successful stage plays and books, many times only to be extremely disappointed in their transference into screen form.

"The new year may bring some technical developments that will be most interesting. Color photography is being developed to a high state of efficiency, and already several of the foremost stars have announced their intention of appearing in all colored or partially colored picture. The greatest development from a technical standpoint, would of course, be the stereopticon motion picture. For the last several years we have heard rumblings about the perfection of the stereoscopic picture, but nearly all such reports have proved false alarms. However, there are several prominent film men working on the proposition, and perhaps the new year will bring their experiments to a successful conclusion. It would be a great forward step for the industry if this happens.

"Keep your eyes on the comedy field this year. The greatest triumphs of the 1925 screen year have been comedies. 'The Freshman,' Harold Lloyd's epochal college picture, has shattered every box office record wherever it has played. It has doubled and trebled the business done by theatres with 'Hot Water.' Comedies throughout the entire year have been the big bets, and in 1926 they will continue to have the some box office potency. I look for the spectacle to have another vogue this year, with the release of pictures like 'Ben Hur' and 'The Wanderer.' Public taste, however, probably will undergo but little change from 1925, putting it directly up to the producers to make pictures of calibre that will meet the approval of the men and women who patronize the motion pictures of this country."

"Drusilla with a Million" Opens St. Louis Theatre

THE St. Louis Theatre, at St. Louis, Mo. a new $2,000,000 house with a seating capacity of 4,000, selected "Drusilla with a Million," an Associated Arts Corporation-F. B. O. Gold Bond production for its formal opening last week. Its splendid record of performance in first run houses in various sections of the United States, added to its definite merits as a box office attraction, prompted H. A. Kupler and Asher Levy to select "Drusilla" from among the big pictures available on the market.

Thousands jammed the streets on the opening night for blocks around the new theatre for hours in advance of the opening in an attempt to see the house and the feature film. Four thousand fans gained admittance, while hundreds were turned away.

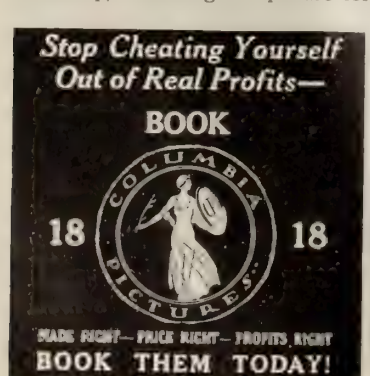
Mayor Miller of St. Louis, and Director of Public Safety Brod in brief addresses extolled the enterprise and public spirit of the men responsible for the new theatre.

The same unequalled applause and enthusiasm which greeted the picture at its New York premiere at the Capitol Theatre, was tendered the film by both audience and the St. Louis newspaper critics. Frances V. Feldkamp, reviewing the picture for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, said:

"Excellent entertainment. As Drusilla, Mary Carr has one of the triumphs of her career. Priscilla Bonner is a sweet and loving Sally May, and Kenneth Harlan is a satisfactory Collin. Claire du Brey admirably portrys the scheming Daphne."

Briston French in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch enthused:

"The photoplay feature 'Drusilla with a Million' is one no movie fan should miss. It grips the interest from first flash to fadeout and is replete with emotional situations."



May McAvoy to Play Lead in "The Chariot of the Gods"

May McAvoy has just been signed by Fox Films to play the leading feminine role in "The Chariot of the Gods," which will be released on February 28. The picture will be based on an original story by Howard Hawks, for many years supervising director on the Famous Players lot, and Mr. Hawks will direct. Leslie Fenton, who has just finished playing the leading role in the modern sequence of "The Ancient Mariner" opposite Clara Bow, has been cast as the hero of the drama. The villainy of the piece will be supplied by Ben Bard, who is said to be the handsomest scoundrel to come to the screen.

Both of these stories are of the "fast action" type in which Miss Dean has achieved her greatest successes.

Independents Successfully Nationalize Exchanges

SEVERAL weeks ago it was announced that Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn, president, vice president and treasurer of Columbia Pictures respectively, were negotiating with the exchange owners and managers, distributing productions with the Columbia brand, to organize into a national chain for the exclusive distribution of Columbia pictures. This new move to lift independent productions from the state right rut has brought many independent exchanges rallying to the Columbia banner, that they might be in on the general trend of stabilizing both independent producers and exchanges; realizing that this progressive step means not only a national organization for the distributing of independent products, but also means extensive national advertising exploitation and publicity which will put the pictures made by independent producers on a competitive level. Exchanges will, therefore, directly benefit, and instead of having state right pictures to distribute, they will have instead nationally distributed, nationally exploited productions.

This new move to nationalize independent exchanges, and its successful conclusion, will once and for all establish the status of independent producers. In the past they were excluded from fair competition through the inadequacy of the state right selling system. With a national medium of distribution their productions will be handled as ably as those of any of the large national organizations, and will receive serious consideration from exhibitors as product worthy of national distribution.

Three Prominent Universal Play Big Broadway House

WITH the current run of "Sporting Life," a new Universal Jewel in all Keith, Moss and Proctor houses, and with the opening of "The Phantom of the Opera," at the Colony Theatre, December 6th, and "His People," in the Rialto, December 6th, the Universal Pictures Corporation is well represented these days along Broadway.

"The Phantom of the Opera" was booked into the Colony for a run following its successful eight week's run in the Astor Theatre at legitimate prices. The Astor run was an eye-opener to the industry and was a prophetic indication of the huge success the picture has since had in all sections of the country, even topping "The Hunchback," Universal's previous box-office wonder. The picture was booked into the Colony to follow Harold Lloyd in "The Freshman." The Universal picture will be held in the Colony Theatre for an indefinite run.

The showing of "His People" in the Rialto marks the first Universal picture to go into one of Paramount's Broadway houses in many months. The extraordinary drawing power this picture had at its Broadway run, when it was presented in the Astor Theatre under the title "Proud Heart," caused the Rialto management to seek for a presentation of this picture at popular prices. The legitimate price run of this picture at the Astor Theatre was cut short because of the sale of the theatre.

"Sporting Life," which is now playing over the Keith, Moss and Proctor Circuit, last week played in eight theatres on Broadway, from Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre, at Broadway and Twenty-third street to the Coliseum, at 181st street. The picture is a Universal Jewel adaptation of the famous old English melodrama and is said to be an ideal picture for thrills and romance. It features Bert Lytell and Marian Nixon. It is a Maurice Tourneur Production.

Prepare Many Advertising Aids For First National Month

THE advertising department of First National Pictures is preparing to back up First National Month, January, 1926, with the largest and most varied assortment of advertisements and accessories ever issued by this company in connection with a sales campaign. The material has been planned well in advance in order that it may be in the hands of the First National exchanges and exhibitors in ample time.

Every type of advertising that can in any way assist in getting the fullest box office value out of the pictures presented during the period of the campaign will be included. Special advertising, calling attention to the month and to the pictures to be shown, will be carried in national magazines, newspapers and trade publications.

Each exchange will be supplied with a cut-out stand about six feet by three, in color. Before the first of December a two-color broadside illustrating the free accessories and carrying copy that puts over the whole idea will be mailed to First National's full list of exhibitors. Envelope stickers in two colors will be used on all exchange mail.

A banner in three colors, for display in front of theatres, will be supplied, also two-colored heralds and two-colored window cards allowing space for the theatre imprint. A special eight-page press sheet outlining the advertisements, stories for newspapers, posters and exploitation stunts that are practical for all types of theatres will be sent to exhibitors.

Another valuable feature of the campaign will be a thousand foot trailer presenting facts of interest concerning First National stars who will be seen in pictures shown during the month. Practically all of the important personalities associated with First National productions, and those of allied producers, will be included in this trailer which will be furnished free to exhibitors.

In addition to this, a liberal assortment of slides, cuts and mats, bearing directly or indirectly on First National Month, will be available.

HERE'S A CHANCE to take a "flyer" with Cullen Landis and Dorothy Devore —"The Midnight Flyer," of course, and an F. B. O. Gold Bond special.

Rogers of Lumas Completes Many Big Transactions in Middle West

BUDD ROGERS, vice president of Lumas Film Corporation, returned to New York last week from a trip to exchanges in Washington, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Philadelphia, in the interests of Gotham Productions.

Several important transactions were completed by Mr. Rogers among which was a new distribution arrangement in Detroit whereby a transfer of the first series of six Gotham Productions was made from Liberty Films of Detroit to the American Booking Corporation of that city. Mr. Minter of the American Corporation will not only take over the physical distribution of "Women and Gold", "The Night Ship," Black Lightning," "Unmarried Wives," "The Silent Pal" and "Shattered Lives" but also all previous bookings contracted for.

This deal does not in any way conflict with the original distribution contract of the season's series of twelve Gothams which franchise is held by Harry Charnes of Standard Film Co., with offices in Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, and Pittsburgh.

Mr. Rogers also arranged for the distribution of the twelve Gothams in the Chicago territory, the name of the distributor to be announced upon signing of the final papers.

Big Campaign for "Keeper of the Bees"

PANTAGES THEATRE, Los Angeles, made an event of widespread civic importance out of the opening there of Gene Stratton Porter's "The Keeper of the Bees," the F. B. O. Gold Bond special whose world premiere took place recently in Salt Lake City.

By means of a tie-up with George Barnes, president of the American Reforestation Association and wealthy music instrument dealer of the Southland and Mrs. Anna Dorsey, superintendent of public schools of Los Angeles and the Los Angeles Park Commission, more than 500,000 public school children planted 300 young carob trees in the school yards throughout the metropolis of the Southwest on Monday, November 15.

The city-wide tree planting was sponsored jointly by F. B. O. and Mr. Alexander Pantages, as well as Mr. Barnes whose efforts in behalf of tree conservation have attracted wide attention among the leaders of the motion picture industry Public speeches were made by city officials as well as noted society women and many of the school orchestras and bands turned out to render appropriate musical selections while the ceremonies were under way.

Later in the week a single sycamore tree of gigantic proportions was planted in Pershing Square, Los Angeles, by little Gene Stratton, grand-daughter of Mrs. Porter, who appears in "The Keeper of the Bees" in the role of the Little Scout.

In addition to the tree planting a midnight matinee for movie folk and newspaper people was held at Pantages Theatre last Saturday night under the direction of Hal Reid of the Pantages press forces and the Reforestation society, of whose advisory council Mrs. Porter was one of the leading members.

Big billboard and newspaper advertising campaigns also featured the campaign which was one of the biggest ever put on in Los Angeles by the Pantages interests.

Chadwick Announces Two for December

ONE special Larry Semon feature comedy, "The Perfect Clown," and the second of the series of George Walsh modern action romances, "Blue Blood," will be released by Chadwick Pictures Corporation in December. The Chadwick schedule calls for two monthly releases through April.

"Blue Blood," which is released on December 1, is the star's second production for Chadwick, "American Pluck," the first, having been released on October 15. "Blue Blood," an original story, written especially for the star by Frank Howard Clark, was directed by Scott Dunlop, who is well known as the producer of fast-moving action stories. The cast of "Blue Blood" includes several well known players: Cecile Evans, former Sennett bathing girl, who has been attracting much attention opposite Walsh, Joan Meredith, 1925 Wampus Baby Star, who is under a long term contract to Chadwick, plays another prominent role. Philo McCullough and Euguene Borden supply the villainy, and the comedy, of which there is plenty, is allotted to Harvey Clark, Robert Boulder and G. Howe Black.

"The Perfect Clown" which will be released on December 15, is Larry Semon's second feature comedy of the season for Chadwick Pictures Corporation. "The Wizard of Oz," Semon's screen version of the world famous L. Frank Baum book, a September release, has proven one of the outstanding comedies of the season. "The Perfect Clown" was written especially for Semon, and was directed by Fred Newmeyer, who has directed most of Harold Lloyd's recent productions. Dorothy Dwan, who is Mrs. Larry Semon, and Oliver Hardy, two of the prominent members of the "The Wizard of Oz" cast, are again seen in support of the star. Stuart Holmes, villain extraordinary, Kate Price, a screen veteran of comedy fame, Otis Harlan, Alice Fletcher and Sam Allen complete the cast.

Peggy Joyce Recovers

Peggy Hopkins Joyce, star of Associated Exhibitors' big special, "The Skyrocket," has recovered from an attack of influenza which kept her confined to her suite at the Ambassador. Following this complete Warner week the Liberty opened the week of November 28 with "Rose of the World," with Patsy Ruth Miller featured.

WHEN THE WEST WAS SCARLET it seethed with drama, and First National has extracted from that era of brawn and blood a splendid offering in "The Scarlet West," in which such splendid actors as Robert Edeson, Johnny Walker, Robert Frazer and Gaston Glass appear. Some of the Indian scenes vie with the best the screen has to offer.

"THEY'VE PUT JOHN GOLDEN'S stage play, "Wages for Wives," in the movies. Let's go see it. These are some things they'll see in William Fox's film version, with Jacqueline Logan and a lot of other popular players.

Sax Lining Up New Story Material

WHILE busily engaged in turning this year's series of twelve Gotham productions out on schedule and in fact ahead of schedule time, Sam Sax, president of Lumas Film Corporation, distributors of the Gotham Product has been also purchasing story material for his next year's line-up.

Although too soon to definitely announce the complete list of titles for 1926-27, the New York office states that the material for the coming year is practically all selected and that the list of titles, authors and scenarists will prove a very agreeable surprise to exchange men and exhibitors.

"I have always been a firm believer" states Mr. Sax, "in what is known as 'box-office titles,' titles that have an allure for the theatre-going public. I am also averse to buying a well known story and changing the title unless it is absolutely necessary. We set a very fast pace for ourselves to follow in our 1925-1926 list of titles but I think we have even excelled it for the coming year."

Lon Young, who reads all material for the New York office, has gone through over five hundred stories submitted and out of this mass of stories material, has carefully selected the subjects for the final decision of Mr. Sax.

In addition to choosing plot and titles, Mr. Sax states that he has also negotiated contracts with many players of note and also made arrangements with several directors and delivered work will begin on the next year's program which will be even more extensive than any previously attempted by Gotham.

Record of "Old Ironsides" to Be Preserved on Screen by Paramount

THE frigate Constitution, lovingly known in history as "Old Ironsides" and the record of its glorious career are to be preserved to posterity forever.

James Cruze has left Los Angeles for Europe on a trip to gather data and select locations for filming of the super-historical epic to be called "Old Ironsides." Mr. Cruze will visit Tripoli where the Constitution reached the climax of its naval fame during the war against pirates of the Mediterranean by the United States in 1804.

Saved once before by Oliver Wendell Holmes, stirring poem, "Old Ironsides," the heroic frigate now falling to pieces from rot and disuse in the Boston Navy Yard is again being rescued from oblivion by school children of America, under the leadership of the Navy department, through millions of small contributions toward its reconstruction. Elks, Daughters of the Revolution and many other patriotic societies are lending their co-operation and support. Although this will preserve the vessel for another half century, it is now to be immortalized in a larger way by Cruze. It is to be preserved, not as a glorious hulk fallen into sad decay, but as a living thing, beautiful and proud; its canvas bellied to the wind, helm down, sailing forever before the eyes of American youth across the magic of the silver screen.

Coincident with Cruze's departure, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players Lasky Corporation, announced that the Constitution's gripping story, from the time its keel was laid in Philadelphia Navy Yard in 1794 and including its valiant service against the pirates of Tripoli, will be filmed on the mightiest scale ever attempted.

"'Old Ironsides' is another contribution by Paramount to the preservation of the thrilling and epic history of the United States," said Mr. Lasky. "For many months our corporation has been quietly working up its plans. Harry Carr, one of America's foremost newspaper men, and Walter Woods are co-authors of the story which is historically accurate throughout. Both of them have made special trips to Washington for extensive research in files of the Navy department and Congressional Library.

"Secretary of Navy, Curtis D. Wilbur, is giving full co-operation of the United States Navy in this gigantic undertaking, this story of youthful heroism and bravery which cradled glorious traditions which the Navy has maintained for more than 135 years.

In 1804 seven kings and two republics of the world were paying tribute to the pirates of Tripoli. It was "Old Ironsides" which carried the flag of the puny nation, the United States of America, to the Mediterranean and inspired by the slogan, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute," swept the pirates from the seas forever. In that glorious chapter of our Navy's history, leading parts were played by lads most of them mere striplings, whose names form a veritable roll of honor of the American Navy, Stephen Decatur, Lawrence, Bainbridge, Porter and Somers.

Full pressure on the work of preparing story, setting and properties is now under way at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. Cruze has been taken off all other directorial work. At Tripoli and Mediterranean ports he will not only gather local color and historical data, but choose locations for part of the production which is to be made in Tripoli. Cruze will be gone between six and eight weeks. On his return, he will hold a final conference in Washington with Secretary Wilbur and on arriving in Hollywood, will plunge immediately into the work of actual production.

Consideration of cast for "Old Ironsides," which will be a 12 reel super-special and will be sent out as a road show as were "The Covered Wagon" and "The Ten Commandments," is now in progress. Jesse L. Lasky predicts that it will be the most brilliant cast ever assembled in motion pictures.

"I expect 'Old Ironsides' to be the crowning event of my career as director," said Cruze, who is notable for his usual reluctance to make predictions, as he prepared to board the train. "And Mr. Lasky is determined to make it the crowning event of his career as a producer."

The Constitution will be sufficiently reconditioned and ready for sea when production actually starts.

EDGAR HART AND DOUGLAS MacLEAN TALK OF OLD TIMES— Years ago the present manager of the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., showed Doug how to make up, stressing the fact that the trick was to know where to leave off. On his recent vacation trick he visited the comedian.

Report Big Activity

Rapid Progress Being Made on Macfadden's True Story Films

The intense activity which marked the progress of Macfadden's True Story Films has not subsided in any respect as the result of the recent suit instituted against the picture producing unit of the magazine publishing organization by the Astor Distributing Company. The cameras are grinding away on the fifth of the series of eight productions to be released this year. In all probability the picture, the release title to be announced later, will be ready for the cutting room within a few days. Hugh Dierker is wielding the megaphone.

Already Mr. Macfadden is negotiating with the Will H. Hays office for adequate distribution of True Story Films by a representative organization. That there will be an alliance soon formed with a national distributor of recognized importance and facilities is obvious from the reports emanating from the Macfadden offices.

It is understood that one of the most drastic campaigns will soon be launched exploiting the new Macfadden Made Movie. Torrents of the most effective publicity will soon be unleashed by this organization.

F. B. O. Signs Harlan and Miller

Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller will take up the burden of romance for F. B. O. in "The King of the Turf," a melodramatic comedy of the racing world, it was announced by General Manager B. P. Fineman of the studio. James Hogan has been assigned to the directorial megaphone, and work will be begun within a day or two.

"The King of the Turf" is an original story by Louis Joseph Vance and John C. Brownell. The adaptation was done by J. Grubb Alexander. A complete cast will be announced shortly.

Prospects for Big Season Are Great Is Report of Spring on Tour of Exchanges

"PROSPECTS for the biggest year that motion pictures have ever known were never brighter," is the summary of a wire sent by Samuel Spring, chairman of First National's Sales Cabinet to Richard A. Rowland, general manager. Mr. Spring has reached Cincinnati with Ned Depinet, sales manager of the Southern territory and is prepared to start on the second lap of a whirlwind tour of key cities, conferring with exhibitors, branch managers and salesmen.

A. W. Smith, Jr., sales manager of the Eastern territory, accompanied Messrs. Spring and Depinet to Albany and Buffalo where the sales executives found a most enthusiastic response to the campaign outlined for First National Month. A. Buckley, representing the Leland and Clinton Square theatres, was present at the Albany meeting and promised his whole-hearted support in behalf of First National Month. Walter Hayes, representing the Moe Mark interests, guaranteed the fullest co-operation of that important combination giving first run dates for his houses in Albany, Syracuse, Troy and Utica.

Another rousing meeting was held in Buffalo where Vincent McFaul of the Shea enterprises pledged his co-operation and promised all the available first run dates for the month of January.

The enthusiastic reception which greeted the sales executives at the first two stops was repeated at Cleveland. Messers. Spring and Depinet had their Thanksgiving turkey in Pittsburgh, following a morning meeting at the exchange attended by the complete personnel of that office and a number of prominent exhibitors. Cincinnati was the next stop, then Louisville and Indianapolis. Other cities to be visited are St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Detroit and Toronto.

Mr. Spring reports that he has found a spirit of optimism among all of the exhibitors whom he has met. On every hand there is confidence that the public never was more ready to respond to high grade pictures. Prosperity is general and theatre attendances show a steady increase. Exhibitors have expressed their faith in the superior quality of the pictures offered by First National for the new season, because of their star value, story value and the production excellence assured in the product of First National.

Having visited Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis, Ned Marin, sales manager of the Western territory has headed for the far West where he will conduct meetings at exchanges and confer with exhibitors in Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Salt Lake City. Before his return, Mr. Marin will also make stops at Des Moines and Detroit.

Literary and Dramatic Folk Views "The Wedding Song"

At the request of Ethel Watts Mumford, author of "The Wedding Song," produced by Cecil B. De Mille with Leatrice Joy as the star under Alan Hale's direction, a special private screening of the picture was arranged by Producers Distributing Corporation this week, in the company's projecting room, attended exclusively by celebrities from literary, dramatic and art circles.

No attempt was made to make the screening a de luxe showing. It was projected "cold" and the Producers Distributing executives were highly gratified when this hypercritical audience applauded the production and Ethel Watts Mumford, the author of the subject expressed her approval of the picture—an almost unheard of happening in motion picture history.

Authors, as an almost unwavering rule, are dissatisfied with the mation picture treatment of their literary efforts. But in the case of "The Wedding Song" Miss Mumford expressed entire satisfaction with the manner in which her book has been visualized. She also ventured the opinion that the production would be as complete a success on the screen as it is now proving in book form.

Among the notables who attended the screening were: Mrs. Inez Haynes Irwin, winner of the O. Henry award for 1924; Mr. and Mrs. Brainbridge Clark, Kathleen Norris, Mrs. Irving Cobb, Mr. Wallace Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Herford, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Coburn, Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt Howland, Marion Green and Ethel Watts Mumford.

Without a dissenting vote, the picture was unhesitatingly voted a screen offering of genuine excellence.

Griffith to Assist Turnbull

Baltimore Exhibitor Waxes Enthusiastic Over "Never the Twain Shall Meet" and "The Midshipman"

Enthusiastic appreciation of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer product has been expressed by Whitehurst's Theatre Interests in Baltimore, the organization owning and operating the Century, New, Parkway and Garden theatres.

"My best wishes for a continuous success in producing productions with the merit of 'Never the Twain Shall Meet' and 'The Midshipman,'" writes Exhibitor H. M. Messiter.

"'Never the Twain Shall Meet' played at the New Theatre the week of November 2 to a gross decidedly above the average business, and was spoken highly of by the newspaper critics, as well as by the audience generally.

"'The Midshipman' played at the Century Theatre the week of October 12, and broke the attendance record at this theatre; and from my observation delighted those from nine to ninety, which, in terms of pictures, represents true universal appeal.

"Productions of the above mentioned type, in my judgment, not only do business but at the same time increase audience interest."

"THE HANSONS ARE COMING!" Lars Hanson (left) and Einar Hanson have come out of Sweden, and are now on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot in Culver City, and, both being screen players of the first magnitude in their own Scandanavia, big things are expected from them in the various roles in which they will be cast by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production of M.-G.-M.

Warner's "Lady Windermere's Fan" in Brilliant Premiere at Casa Lopez

WARNER BROTHERS' picturization of the Oscar Wilde classic, "Lady Windermere's Fan," produced by Ernst Lubitsch, had its world premiere Tuesday night, December 1, at the exclusive Casa Lopez, New York, where Vincent Lopez was host to two hundred persons representing the artistic, dramatic and social worlds.

Following the dinner, Lopez was introduced and he in turn introduced Sam E. Morris, Warner Brothers' general manager in charge of distribution. Morris presented Irene Rich, who plays Mrs. Erlynne in "Lady Windermere's Fan," as the chief guest of the evening.

"I haven't seen the finished picture yet," said Miss Rich in her remarks. "If it doesn't turn out to be a good one the industry will have one girl less in it tomorrow." Herman Heller's Orchestra from Warner's Theatre played during the showing, Mr. Heller conducting.

Following the screening of the production, which was so well liked that it won the applause even of this discriminative audience, Warner Brothers presented the various screen favorites present to the movie fans of the country by radio through WMCA, the Hotel McAlpin station. These included:

Irene Rich, Mabel Normand, Mrs. Rudolph Valentino, Matt Moore, Clive Brook, John Roche and Lewis Milestone.

For the general dancing Vincent Lopez directed his orchestra, and the music throughout the evening was broadcast.

IRENE RICH, WARNER BROS.' star, returning from Europe on the Aquitania, is met down the bay at New York by Vincent Lopez, who gave an elaborate dinner-dance at his exclusive Casa Lopez, December 1, to accompany the world premiere of "Lady Windermere's Fan." Miss Rich, who had the role of Mrs. Erlynne in this Warner picturization of the Oscar Wilde classic, produced by Ernst Lubitsch, was hostess of the evening, cutting short her vacation abroad in order to be present.

Kathryn McGuire Makes Two Independent Pictures

This has been the busiest week in a busy season for Kathryn McGuire, best remembered as Buster Keaton's leading woman in "The Navigator" and one of the original Wampas selections for its Stars-of-Tomorrow. Within a period of ten days, she will have worked on two pictures, both for independent release, a part of this time playing simultaneously in both productions.

The first of these is the Van Pelt production entitled "A String of Diamonds," under the direction of Frank Mattison. The second is a Gerson production, now being made at the California Studio, with Oscar Apfel directing. The film is titled "Somebody's Mother."

Danish Actor Joins Fox

Anders Randolf, well-known Danish actor, has moved his makeup box and paint brushes to the Fox studio, where he has just commenced his role of John Hamilton in "The Johnstown Flood," which Irving Cummings is directing.

Withey to Direct for Evelyn Brent

Chester Withey will direct Evelyn Brent, F. B. O. star, in her next vehicle, according to the announcement of General Manager B. P. Fineman made at the F. B. O. studios. Miss Brent will begin work the first of the week on a Fred Kennedy Myton story, which has not yet been titled. It is hailed as one of his best stories.

Theodore Von Eltz has also been engaged to play the leading role in support of Miss Brent, Mr. Fineman announced. The actor was her leading man in "Broadway Lady", her last F. B. O. production, which has just been completed.

Associated Exhibitors Lists Four of Its "Triumphant Thirty" for December

FOUR of the strongest pictures of Associated Exhibitors' "Trumphant Thirty" are scheduled for release during December. The quartet of attractions presents not only a powerful star-story-director-production combination, but also offers wide variety, numbering, as it does, a society drama, a fast-moving comedy, an outdoor special and romantic drama.

"Counsel for the Defense," for release December 6, begins the month with Betty Compson in the intriguing role of a piquant girl, who wages a successful legal battle to clear the name of her old father, played by Jay Hunt. House Peters plays opposite the fair heroine as a rugged, two-fisted newspaper editor, while the ever suave Rockliffe Fellowes lends his villainy to add complications to the plot. Leroy Scott is the protagonist of this melodrama which appears as a novel.

Burton King cracked the directorial whip during the making of "Counsel for the Defense." He is said to be one of the most enterprising directors on the west coast.

A vivid contrast to "Counsel for the Defense" is offered by "The Pinch Hitter," the uproarious Glenn Hunter baseball comedy, which is to be released December 13. With Constance Bennett and Antrim Short supporting him, Mr. Hunter gives one of his best performances, interpreting a green youngster from a small town, and his experiences as a baseball neophyte in the freshman class at college. Hilarity prevails throughout the picture until the climax, which waxes dramatic and concludes Glenn's career by letting him win the big game as pinch hitter, thus becoming the college hero.

That veteran actor and director, Joseph Henabery, who handled the first Rudolf Valentino, productions, put Glenn Hunter through his paces in "The Pinch Hitter," which came, by the way, from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan.

The famous dog-actor, Strongheart, takes the laurels the following week, December 20, with the release of "North Star," in which he essays the title role. His supporting cast is headed by no less than Virginia Lee Corbin, Ken Maynard, and Stuart Holmes, while the opus itself is by no less an author than Rufus King, popular writer of animal stories and tales of the great northwest, whose novel, "North Star," has attained a wide circulation.

Paul Powell was in charge of the direction of "North Star," which was supervised by Howard Eastabrook. Miss Jane Murfin, owner of Strongheart, loaned the canine actor to Estabrook for the film.

As "North Star," Strongheart plays the protector of a young girl and her frightened young brother who is being hounded by Stuart Holmes, the villain of the piece. Ken Maynard adds his virility to the cause, and wins his reward by gaining the love of the lady. A terrific battle between Maynard and Holmes, and the final death of the latter when he flees from Strongheart add a tremendous climax to the tale.

"Lovers' Island," the Associated release for December 27, complete the four with a poignant and simple story of an unworldly girl, brought up in a rude fishing village, and her fight for beauty and romance against the superstition and ignorance of her people. Hope Hampton does some of the best emotional acting of her career in this part, and needless to say, is more beautiful than ever. James Kirkwood plays opposite as the summer visitor who is the hero of the girl's young dreams, while Louis Wolheim, of "What Price Glory?" fame on the legitimate stage, is cast as the girl's stern, unyielding uncle. Ivan Linow, Flora Le Breton, Flora Finch, and Jack Raymond comprise the supporting cast.

The famous French director and producer, Diamant-Berger, handled "Lovers' Island," his second production for Associated Exhibitors. His first, "Fifty-Fifty," has already won wide approbation from audiences and critics. T. Howard Kelly is the author of "Lovers' Island," which appeared first as a short story in the Smart Set Magazine.

To Direct Jack Hoxie in Two Universal Films

Al Rogell is directing Jack Hoxie in another pair of twin pictures for Universal, despite the fact that this director resigned from the "U" last week. At the insistence of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, Rogell temporarily reconsidered his resignation and accepted an assignment to direct Jack Hoxie again.

Pathe Lists "Treasures of the Vatican;" Shows Papal Court and Its Marvels

"TREASURES OF THE VATICAN," Dr. Vincent Fago's remarkable screen feature revealing the papal court and its priceless art treasures, will be released by Pathe on December 13. His Holiness the Pope and American Cardinal Hayes, Mundelein and Dougherty appear in this "personally conducted" pilgrimage to the Holy Precincts at Rome.

The current year has been officially designated by the Pope as "Holy Year," a period of special religious and ceremonial significance which recurs every twenty-five years. During this period hundreds of thousands of pilgrims from all parts of the world visit Rome. The pilgrimage from the shores of the United States has been so tremendous that steamships have found it impossible to accommodate all those desiring to make the trip, and it is accordingly reported that the Pope is about to extend the Holy Year Celebration into 1926 so that all Americans so desiring may participate.

In view of this Holy Year observance the release of Pathe's "Treasures of the Vatican" comes as a most timely screen attraction. The production, covering as it does every phase of the Vatican's vast store of historical and artistic treasures, visualizes on the screen the same scenes greeting the eyes of the thousands upon thousands of pilgrims that have been thronging Rome during the Holy Year period of celebration. Several of the scenes show the immense throngs of pilgrims in the great piazza before St. Peter's Basilica. Thus "Treasures of the Vatican" becomes a veritable screen pilgrimage to Rome and the Precincts of the Vatican.

This unusual feature reveals the Vatican as a Museum of Art and the Palace of His Holiness the Pope. The spectator of this film not only takes a pilgrimage to Rome, the Holy City, but is permitted to see many seldom seen precincts of the Vatican which are revealed to the public for the first time. The spectator may experience all the awe, thrills and enthusiasm of visiting the Court of the Pope and marvel at the world's most notable examples of art in painting and sculpture.

Entertainment finds its basis very largely in the appeal to the imagination, and the views of priceless art revealed as one passes through the corridors of the Vatican via the new Pathe film are designed to stimulate the imagination to a high degree.

"Treasures of the Vatican" discloses, with all the grandeur and impressiveness of the originals, the great dramatic moments from the Bible and Church history, as caught by the master brushes of Michelangelo and Raphael and transmuted into immortal frescoes on the Vatican walls and ceilings. Statuary that dates back to the twilight of history, tier after tier of gifts and objects of art associated with some of the greatest events and celebrities of the past, paintings world-famous for the perfection of their technique all are set forth in their original beauty and impressiveness.

The great astronomical laboratory of the Vatican is also revealed for the first time in motion-pictures, with its huge telescopes and camera equipment in action.

Close-up views of His Holiness the Pope are shown as his Holiness moves through the Vatican corridors and the marvelous Papal gardens. American audiences will be glad to know that three American Cardinals appear on this pilgrimage. They are Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes of New York, Archbishop George W. Mundelein of Chicago and Archbishop Dennis J. Dougherty of Philadelphia.

Audiences will find "Treasures of the Vatican" one of the most enjoyable and unusual features ever projected on the screen.

Asher to Produce Drury Lane Melodrama for First National

BEFORE leaving for the Coast on Sunday, November 30, E. M. Asher announced the closing of negotiations with Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, whereby he will produce the Drury Lane melodrama, "Good Luck" for release by that company. Conway Tearle will be starred in the picture.

"Good Luck" is a typical melodrama of the type that has been popular for years in this country as well as England. It offers ample opportunity for all sorts of exciting and spectacular action—horse races, airplane smash-ups, hairbreadth escapes and an intense love story with a thorough-going villain forever blocking the path of the hero and heroine. As a stage play, "Good Luck" had a long run at the Drury Lane Theatre, London, last year.

As soon as he returns to the Coast, Mr. Asher expects to decide on a director for the production and to start assembling a cast. Production is scheduled to begin about the middle of January.

Advices received by Mr. Asher state that everything is in readiness for the production of "Mlle. Modiste," Corinne Griffith's new starring vehicle for First National. The opening scenes will be shot December 7th, under the direction of Robert Leonard.

William de Mille in N. Y. Conferring with Officials

William de Mille who arrived in New York last week after having completed his forty-first production for Paramount, "The Splendid Crime," is conferring with production officials regarding his next picture. If there is room in the Long Island studio he will follow his custom of making one picture a year in the East.

Pierre Collings who wrote the continuity for Pola Negri's "A Woman of the World" accompanied DeMille. He will write the scenario for Adolphe Menjou's next starring vehicle, which has not yet been titled, and which will be produced in New York. St. Clair will direct.

"Cheap Skates"

(Educational-Comedy-Two Reels)

IN this Jack White production under the Mermaid brand, written and directed by Norman Taurog, the comedy revolves on roller skates. Lige Conley, the featured player dons roller skates and losing control lands in a skating rink just as the champion is expected. Although he falls all over the place, the manager mistakes him for the champion believing he is cleverly imitating an amateur. Lige is finally exposed and the safe has been robbed, so he is suspected. He escapes on his skates and the heroine appears with the money which she has taken for safe keeping. There are some gags on the seashore including the mistaking of a bald head for a stone and other more or less familiar comedy devices. Variations of common slapstick situations such as bees getting in Conley's trousers and the negro porter getting stuck fast to a rope tied to Lige, together with his efforts to get about on the skates, furnishes the comedy. There is also a live dog that is served as a steak and a scene where a dusky dame leaps into a barrel of whitewash, and a goat that forcibly propels several of the players about. A good twist is given this gag when the negro using his head as a battering ram sends the goat a flying. An amusing number with several laughs for the average patron.—C. S. Sewell.

"Bachelors' Babies"

(Educational-Comedy-Two Reels)

THIS Juvenile Comedy is based on the idea that a member of an exclusive bachelor's club excuses his not going home by saying the club is giving a party to orphans. His wife invites herself down and he has to make good. He goes out and gets a bunch of tough and ragged kiddies who succeed in making a wreck of the place generally. Before the fun is over, each of the four clubmen slip out and dress as Santa Claus and all get caught in the chimney when a porter starts a fire. Finally the tree is wrecked and many other things happen, but nevertheless the kiddies enjoy themselves immensely. It is a good comedy especially for the kiddies and especially appropriate for the Christmas season. The antics of the children and the way they get on the nerves of the bachelors and finally win them over makes this subject decidedly entertaining and amusing, with a good touch of heart interest.—C. S. Sewell.

"Breaking Loose"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

THIS is another of the series of Comedy Westerns released under the Mustang brand featuring Pee Wee Holmes and Ben Corbett. Their boss's pretty daughter returns from school, bringing her teacher, who is a regular chromo. The usual rivlary of the boys centers around their schemes to capture the pretty girl and palm off the old maid on the other fellow. This includes a fake bandit scare and phony rescue by Pee Wee. The teacher's pet monkey creates havoc in the sideshow by exposing the bearded woman and Siamese twins as a fake and then is carried aloft by toy balloons. In seeking to rescue the monk the boys finally land on a runaway elephant and are saved by the local fire department. The comedy is good-natured burlesque and clowning and has several amusing moments.—C. S. Sewell.

"What's Up"

(Educational-Comedy-One Reel)

A NEW leading woman, Rose Shirley, who proves to be a beauty, makes her bow in this Cameo Comedy with Cliff Bowes. The fun takes place on the seashore. The idea is a familiar one. Cliff is to meet Rose under an umbrella but he has trouble as everyone has an umbrella. He has trouble with an elderly gent who turns out to be Rose's father. To get the best of the old man, Cliff dons a mustache and later puts on women's clothes. Father falls for him and also gets in trouble with another woman who starts the crowd after him as a masher. Much of the action takes place around an amusement park. The principals enter small autos and chase around finally leaving the enclosure and dashing into the water. Fast-moving, with plenty of laughs and slapstick action,—one of the best of the series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Starvation Blues"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

CLYDE COOK plays the lead in this Hal Roach subject and arouses a whirlwind of mirth. It's a great comedy to accompany a serious drama on your bill. Cook is a tramp musician who, with his partner, meets difficulties in making a living with bass horn and organ. The comedy, of course, is eccentric, and the backgrounds are great. Assisting Cook are Syd Crossley, Mildred June, Brooks Benedict, Cesare Gravina, Frederick Kovert, Fred Kelsey and Tiny Sanford. Richard Wallace directed. Some of the scenes are Chaplinesque in their artistry. They are certain to arouse the mirth of any audience, and they suggest something different in the way of slapstick comedies.—Sumner Smith.

"Thou Shalt Not Pass"

(Short Subject-Cartoon-One Reel)

BUD FISHER'S popular cartoon characters Mutt and Jeff compete in a bicycle race in this issue of the series. Mutt enters the race and hides Jeff under his sweater to help him. It is well that he did this for after a bad smashup, Jeff improvises a bike and wins. At one point in the race Mutt's wheel is damaged and he grabs one wheel in his hands and pedals the other. There is the usual amount of cleverness in the cartoon work and comedy in the action that makes it amusing entertainment.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Window Dummy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

IN this Mack Sennett subject Ralph Graves plays a human window dummy who four-flushes his way into high society. He has discovered that a "front" gets one ahead in the world, meets a beautiful girl and accepts her invitation to spend a week-end with her and her father. Ralph arrives in a limousine which he besought for a ride, and carrying a handbag very diminutive in proportions. The girl's father takes Ralph's advice on the stock market and his stock falls, then rises. On the strength of this Ralph becomes his financial adviser. Lloyd Bacon directed. Thelma Parr is the girl and Marvin Lobach is the unsuccessful suitor. The comedy has zest, pep and some good gags.—Sumner Smith.

"From Rags to Britches"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THERE is some good slapstick stuff in this Mack Sennett comedy directed by Del Lord and presenting Billy Bevan, Madeline Hurlock, Kewpie Morgan, Leo Sulky and Sunshine Hart. Two heirs—a man and a girl—inherit a classy gown "shoppe." But the lawyer specifies they don't get it unless they are unmarried. Both are married, and not to each other. One's husband and the other's wife take cleaning jobs in the shop to keep their eyes on their respective spouses, while the lawyer sends detectives who pose as automatic models to learn if the owners really are unmarried. Jealousy spills the beans, but then the lawyer discovers that the will specified that both man and girl should be married.—Sumner Smith.

"Wooden Shoes"

(Cranfield and Clark—Scenic-One Reel)

A NOVEL idea is employed in presenting this scenic of Holland. The reel opens with a lover leaving his wooden shoes outside while he makes love to his sweetheart. The shoes get tired of waiting and go on a journey visiting points of interest such as the canals, and a floral exhibition, returning in time to take the youth home. There are some striking and beautiful views of enormous fields of tulips and hyacinth which are grown for their bulbs as well as for the flowers which are used in making perfume. An interesting and insrtuctive reel.—C. S. Sewell.

Pathe Review No. 50

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

THIS issue features "Crossing Arctic America," Knud Rasmussen's three-year trip through the land of the Esquimos. It is the first installment in a series and of great interest. Other subjects are "Harvesting the Pie," showing blue-berry picking in Maine, and "Weavers of the Other World," scenes in Morocco.—Sumner Smith.

"The Haunted House"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS issue features "Crossing Arctic" depicts the annoyance the famous mice cause the equally famous farmer. It is one of the best ever of the series. The art work is on a more elaborate scale than usual and very effective.—Sumner Smith.

Hammons Urges Exploitation of Shorts When It Builds Business for the Theatres

NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH is a logical climax to the concerted efforts that have been made for some time past by the motion picture trade papers, producers and distributors and leaders in the exhibition field itself, to show exhibitors the value to themselves of better exploitation on Short Features. And the hearty response that has met the announcement of the LAUGH MONTH campaign is the best of proof of the victory that is being won.

LAUGH MONTH can, and will, do many things. It will encourage many people to look on the brighter side of life. It will contribute no mean influence toward making 1926 a better and brighter year for the whole country by getting a large part of its citizenry to start the year right—with merriment and laughter. But from the standpoint of the motion picure industry alone, if it induces one hundred exhibitors who have never exploited their Short Features to boost them in January—to prove to themselves the additional profit that can be made by this better exploitation of the whole program—it will be worth all the time, effort and money that are being spent on it.

It becomes more and more apparent that the value of exploiting Short Features is the thing that an exhibitor has to prove for himself before he is "sold." He will read the many fine editorials that have been written about it; he will listen to the arguments in favor of it—but until he has tried it he is seldom convinced.

Fair Trial Is Asked

But let him once give exploitation of the Short Feature a fair trial and he will never return to the policy of advertising one picture only.

Whenever you meet an exhibitor who is sure that exploitation of anything but the long feature is worthless, you may be sure that you have met a man who has never thoroughly tried out all-round exploitation of the Whole Show.

LAUGH MONTH—January, 1926 will be the ideal period for the exhibitors who is still skeptical to put Short Features advertising to the test. The special accessories, prepared "ads" and carefully detailed exploitation plans, will make it easy for him. The force of the national campaign of publicity will back up his own efforts to an extent never before approached in connection with Short Features, and if he deliberately passes up this opportunity to make added profit from his comedies and other Short Features, then he is deliberately passing by box-office money that might just as well be his.

Big Advertising Drive

Every one of the eight big distributing organizations sponsoring Laugh Month is ready to give every possible help to the exhibitor who wants to cash in on Laugh Month. Educational will tell the millions of readers of the Saturday Evening Post about it in its advertising space in this great magazine the first week in January, offering a tie-up of tremendous force for the Showman who puts up the special accessories and uses the special newspaper "ads" and in the many other possible ways boosts LAUGH MONTH in his own locality.

LAUGH MONTH should bring a great awakening to many exhibitors everywhere as to the unlimited possibilities for building bigger business than are offered to them in the Short Features. And bigger business is the whole point of the argument. A trade paper editor recently commenting on the preparations for LAUGH MONTH remarked that it should be kept on a dollars and cents basis. This is the basis—the only basis—for the exploitation of Short Features at any time, just as it is the only reason for any advertising by an exhibitor. No expenditure of effort or money on advertising or exploitation is justified at any time unless it will build business for the theatre. But proper advertising and exploitation on comedies and other Short Features, in conjunction with advertising of the longer feature and of the theatre itself and its many attractions, WILL BUILD BETTER BUSINESS. It is doing it right along for an army of exhibitors that includes most of the country's outstanding showmen and hundreds of its smaller exhibitors and that is growing in numbers with every passing week.

Let's all start the year right by giving the picturegoing public the best in laughs and then telling them about it; by looking on the brighter side of life ourselves, and by letting the old box-office join in the laughter. And there's only one thing the box-office laughs about—better business.

THE CAMEO THEATRE, LOS ANGELES, makes special posters to advertise Educational-Mermaid comedies, using stills from the picture as well as advertising these Jack White productions in the big banner over the box office.

Harry Langdon Special Listed in Pathe's National Laugh Month Release Schedule

PATHE is getting behind "Laugh Month" with full force and announces a list of twenty-three sure-fire laugh-makers on the January short feature release program, which is headed by a Harry Langdon special comedy made by Mack Sennett and includes four two-reel comedies from the Sennett studio, five two-reelers and three single reelers from the Hal Roach lot, and five releases each of "Aesop's Film Fables" and "Topics of the Day."

Popular comedy stars and featured players who will be seen in Pathe comedies during "Laugh Month" include such box-office magnets as Ralph Graves, "Our Gang," Alice Day, Clyde Cook, Harry Langdon, Charlie Chase, Billy Bevan, Glenn Tryon, Andy Clyde, Al St. John, Lucien Littlefield, "Husky" Hanes, Jimmy Finlayson, Lige Conley, Martha Sleeper, Dot Farley, Kewpie Morgan, Madeline Hurlock, Cissy Fitzgerald, Jack "Rube" Clifford, Thelma Parr, Marvin Lobach, Paul Parrott, Douglas Gerrard, William McCall, Ruth Hiatt, Peggy Montgomery, Vernon Dent, Sue O'Neil, and Vivian Oakland.

Titles of Pathecomedies listed for "Laugh Month" include the following: "Saturday Afternoon," three reel Harry Langdon-Mack Sennett comedy special; "A Punch in the Nose," two-reel Hal Roach comedy; "The Gosh Darn Mortgage," Sennett two-reeler; "Good Cheer," "Our Gang" comedy; "Hot Cakes for Two," Alice Day-Mack Senett two-reeler; "Whispering Whiskers," a Mack Sennett comedy; "Long Pants," a Glenn Tryon-Hal Roach comedy; "Soft Pedal," one reel Roach comedy with Paul Parrott; "Don't Butt In," a one reel Roach film with Paul Parrott, and "Between Meals," one reel Roach comedy with Paul Parrott.

"Aesop's Film Fables" to be released during "Laugh Month," include "The Gold Push," "Three Blind Mice," "Lighter Than Air," "The Little Brown Jug" and "A June Bride." All of these subjects are packed full of fun devised by Paul Terry and his staff at the studios of Fables Pictures, Inc.

Five releases of "Topics of the Day," the ever-popular reel of wit and humor clipped from the press of the world by the editorial staff of Timely Films, Inc., will be offered exhibitors.

In presenting the next Harry Langdon comedy special for release in "Laugh Month," Pathe is giving exhibitors one of the funniest films ever enacted by Langdon, who is conceded to be one of the foremost comedy bets in the business today. Only recently Langdon's "Lucky Stars" was featured for a week each at the Rialto and Rivoli on Broadway and is now playing 126 days on the Loew Circuit. In "Saturday Afternoon," the Langdon release for January, the droll star has a vehicle with a real plot embellished with a generous number of positive laughs. His supporting cast includes Vernon Dent, Ruth Hiatt and Peggy Montgomery. Harry Edwards, who has made the majority of the Langdon Sennett comedy successes directed "Saturday Afternoon."

"Good Cheer," the "Our Gang" comedy produced by Hal Roach presents the famous Rascals in a holiday story with wide appeal to adults as well as the youngsters. The story concerns the efforts of the "Gang" to brighten the Christmas season for the less-fortunate kiddies. They encounter a whole army of Santa Clauses and uncover a big plot as well as providing a real Merry Christmas for many children. All the "Gang" members including the latest addition, Jay Smith, contribute to the fun. Robert McGowan directed this holiday laughmaker.

"Hot Cakes For Two" is another rollicking, wholesome Alice Day comedy with the Mack Sennett comedienne at her very best. She plays a sweet maiden from the corn fields of Kansas who seeks screen fame and undergoes experiences which every film aspirant will want to see. And the fun of it all will convulse any audience. Her supporting cast includes Gus Runty, George A. Beranger, Joseph Young, and Marvin Lobach. Alf Goulding directed.

"Long Pants" offers Glenn Tryon in two reels of fun directed by Fred L. Guiol for Hal Roach. Tryon appears as a young "flipper" or male flapper who has acquired his first long pants. The said trousers are of the newest, widest and longest style but not unshrinkable. Glenn Tryon is supported by Cissy Fitzgerald, Vivian Oakland, Jack "Rube" Clifford and Sue O'Neil.

"Whispering Whiskers" is a typical Mack Sennett comedy of the brand bearing his name and was directed by Del Lord. Billy Bevan and Andy Clyde head the funsters which include Madeline Hurlock and Kewpie Morgan. The plot involves stolen rubies, clairvoyants and mysterious disguises which aid in making the fun fast and furious.

Those named are typical of the high standard of comedies which Pathe has lined-up for "Laugh Month."

In addition to providing a big array of funfilms, Pathe is also lining-up complete exhibitor helps to put over the comedy subjects in the many theatres that are sure to cash-in on the wide publicity and fine programs being offered because of "Laugh Month." In the selection of stills and posters special care has been paid to choose the funniest scenes for display in the lobby frames and show the "customers" that a real comedy is being shown inside.

To emphasize the punch scenes in forthcoming comedies, Pathe is issuing special art posters on the short feature comedies. Such artists as Gustav Michelson, George Kerr and Merle Johnson are drawing an unusual line of posters which Pathe exhibitors will find ready-made for advertising their "Laugh Monfh" attractions. Press books are issued on all Pathe two-reel comedies and these books will include stories and cuts which will aid the exhibitor in supplying the local papers with stories about comedies of the moment.

Music cue sheets are another new exhibitor aid being issued by Pathe on the short feature comedy product produced by Hal Roach and Mack Sennett. Undoubtedly exhibitors will pay particular attention to the accompaniment given their comedy subjects during "Laugh Month," and the Pathe cue sheets will prove invaluable.

Pathe is particularly well equipped to provide exhibitors with all-comedy programs in great diversity as to stars and length of subjects. Such three reel comedies as Harry Langdon in "There He Goes" on "Saturday Night," and Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" are just the type of attraction to form an all-comedy bill around. A Mack Sennett and a Hal Roach two reel subject added to the three-reeler and one of the "Aesop's Film Fables" and a release of "Topics of the Day" affords one of the best comedy programs available. The success of all-comedy programs is well known, and the continued use of this type of bill by Max Graf at the Egyptian and Aztec Theatres in San Francisco with big results at the box-office has proved the money-making possibilities of such programs.

There is no doubt but that one of the highlights of "Laugh Month" will be the many all-comedy programs offered by wide-awake exhibitors and the house of Pathe is ready to do its part in giving the exhibitors every cooperative aid in making January 1926 a month of real joy for audiences with resultant benefits for the exhibitor.

Congratulations for Cohen

Editor of Pathe News Receives Comment on Anniversary Dinner.

Wires and letters received by Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, since the Fifteenth Anniversary Dinner of Pathe News, have with one accord expressed the highest praise for his conduct of the memorable occasion commemorating the birthday of the newsfilm which brought together the most distinguished gathering of illustrious men in the history of the screen.

"Flashes of the Past," the comprehensive newsfilm review of historic events during the last fifteen years which was screened at the banquet and which is being shown serially in Pathe News, has come in for a large measure of praise.

Curtis D. Wilbur, Secretary of the Navy wrote:

"I very much enjoyed having the pleasure and privilege of attending the Fifteenth Anniversary of Pathe News. I enjoyed every minute of my visit at your entertainment, and wish to thank you. The picture shown after the dinner was enjoyable and brought to mind most vividly some of the most historical events of world's history since the advent of the news reel. I enjoyed particularly your historical sketch of the news reel especially that of Pathe which has had a wonderful influence on World's history."

Others who, following the banquet, communicated with Mr. Cohen to express their delight at the exceptional affair, were: Gov. E. Lee Trinkle, of Virginia; Admiral W. S. Benson, of the U. S. Shipping Board; Admiral W. A. Moffett, U. S. Navy, Bureau of Aeronautics; Maj. C. L. Hall, Chief, Press Relations Section, U. S. War Department; Bernard M. Baruch; George Kleine; Sydney S. Film Booking Offices of America Prepares Imposing Array of "Laugh Month" Shorts

AN unusually imposing array of short subjects has been scheduled by Film Booking Offices for release during January, 1926, officially designated as National Laugh Month. The producing and distributing company will contribute seven short comedies to the attractive array of shorts which will be distributed during Laugh Month.

F.B.O.'s program is headed by "High But Not Handsome," No. 9 of "The Adventures of Mazie," in which Alberta Vaughn is starred, with Larry Kent, Kit Guard and Al Cooke in support. The series based on stories by Nell Martin, which originally appeared in Top Notch Magazine, is replete with action and humor, and has been pronounced by exhibitors throughout the country as easily the most popular series released this year. Alberta Vaughn, knwn as the girl with the most beautiful figure in the world, possesses definite box office values as a star with an enormous fan following, while Larry Kent, a newcomer to the screen, has already established himself as one of the most attractive young juveniles in pictures. The stories are being adapted by Doris Anderson and directed by Ralph Ceder. "High But Not Handsome" is scheduled for January 3rd release.

"Mummy Love," a Blue Ribbon comedy, starring Alice Ardell, is one of the funniest two-reelers F.B.O. has yet released. Alice Ardell is a piquant, delectable little French comedienne who adds specie and charm to the series of comedies which Joe Rock is producing for Standard Cinema and F.B.O. release. The entire series of Blue Ribbon comedies has proved unusually successful wherever they have been shown. A number of well known comedians appear in support of the attractive Alice. "Mummy Love" will be shown on January 10th.

Another January 10th release is "The Giraffe's Long Neck," a one-reel novelty from the Bray Studios, in which Walter Lantz, the artist, acts in conjunction with the cartoon characters he creates. These cartoons are unusually clever, and are meeting with enthusiastic response wherever they are shown.

"Little Andy Looney," No. 10 of "The Adventures of Mazie" will be shown on January 17th, while "In the Aair," a two-reel Standard Fat Men comedy, featuring "Fat" Karr, "Tiny" Alexander and "Fatty" Ross, the three fattest men on the screen, will be distributed on January 24th. The gross weight of these three fat men equals a ton, and their humorous antics have created unusually large fan following in the thousands of theatres in which the Standard Fat Men series are run. This series is also being produced by Joe Rock for Standard Cinema and F.B.O. release.

January 17th will also see the release of "Dinky Doodle at the Studio," a one-reel novelty in which Dinky Doodle cavorts merrily and mischievously with his cartoon creator, Walter Lantz.

On January 31st, No. 11 of "The Adventures of Mazie" called "A Snitch in Time" will be shown.

The twelfth Mazie, as yet untitled, is now being shot at the studios of the company. At its conclusion, work will start immediately on "Fighting Hearts," a series based on stores by Sam Hellman, well known humorist and contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and other nationally known magazines. It is not yet definitely decided who will appear in the series, although it is probable that Alberta Vaughn will star, with Larry Kent, Kit Guard and Al Cooke in support.

The works of H. C. Witwer will continue to be a feature of F.B.O.'s production program for the season of 1926-27, details of which are now being arranged at the studios of the company in Hollywood. The announcement of the purchase by Mr. Witwer's current series, "Bill Grimm's Progress" running in Collier's Magazine, was recently made. The stories in serial form narrate the adventures of a taxi driver and are done in the inimitable Witwer slang style.

Features "Short" Review

Seattle Star Gives Preference to "Screen Snapshots" Over Feature

Screen Snapshots, which is a screen record of home life, divertissements, and intimate glimpses of stars under all sorts of circumstances and conditions, has won the interest of audiences throughout the entire world.

Reviews have come in from all over this country highly boosting this "short," and as an example of this the Seattle Star featured this "short" over the feature, writing up Screen Snapshots in the headlines and reviewing the feature later in the same column.

An issue of Screen Snapshots is released once every two weeks.

R. F. Woodhull Endorses "Laugh Month"

BAKER THEATRE
Dover, New Jersey

November 26, 1925.

Nat G. Rothstein, Esq.,
Short Feature Advertising Association,
Film Booking Offices of America,
723 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

My dear Nat:

Am writing this letter to you on Thanksgiving Day because the more I think of the idea of setting aside a month for the purpose of directing the attention of the public and ourselves to "laughter," the more it is apparent to me that I have one more blessing for which to be thankful. We are all inclined at times to under-rate the physical and mental value of a good laugh. I have been present at many "serious at the moment" controversies in our industry when if both sides had endeavored to maintain a little sense of humor, the problem at hand would have dissolved into a mere nothing.

I presume this movement has for its purpose the further directing of the attention of the exhibitor to the value of the short subject part of his program. If I am correct in this presumption, then I can honestly express the opinion that it is a worthwhile labor. We are all prone at times to think of newsfilms, comedies and novelties as "fillers" instead of "featurettes." It will surely react in a splendid way if we theatre-owners, in our constant effort to please the public, will devote the month of January to a little less thought about the "headline features" and concentrate on the importance of divertissement. This latter ingredient is only supplied by screen entrees which materially assist in the problem of balancing the diet of a patronage sometimes fed-up on dramatic photoplays.

I sincerely hope that your January laugh-project will be a huge success and that countrywide merriment will "top" the tiresome noise of the high-salaried, crepe-hanging reformers who are permitted to run at liberty every month of the year.

Cordially yours,
(signed) R. F. WOODHULL,

Special Posters and Accessories Are Ready On Fourteen Fox Laugh Month Comedies

FOURTEEN corking two-reel comedies which made reviewers laugh as they seldom do at a pre-release showing, will be the contribution of Fox Films to National Laugh Month, to be observed in January by motion-picture theatres all over the United States.

The purpose of National Laugh Month is to impress upon exhibitors the importance of advertising and exploiting short subject films instead of playing the loud pedal on feature attractions and letting the rest of the program take care of itself. Eight of the foremost producers of short comedies have formed an organization to this end and National Laugh Month is the result.

Included in the list of Fox Films comedy releases for November, December and January are three Van Bibbers, "The Wrestler," "A Parisian Knight" and "The Feud;" two of the O. Henry series, "Failure," and "Cupid a la Carte;" seven Imperials, "Strong For Love," "East Side, West Side," "Control Yourself," "Heavy Swells," "The Flying Fool" and two untitled two reelers, two of the Helen and Warren Married life series, "The Peacemakers" and "His Own Lawyer."

Seldom, if ever, have two-reel comedies elicited such enthusiastic praise from reviewers as these, particularly the Van Bibbers, which are produced as lavishly, as many feature-length films. It is the opinion of many that Fox has set a new standard for short comedies, not only in elaborateness of production but also in displacing slapstick and hokum with genuinely humorous situations.

"The Wrestler," one of the latest in the Van Bibber series, fairly abounds with screamingly funny situations and affords Earle Foxe greater opportunities to create laughs than perhaps any thus far released. In this picture Foxe, as the bashful Van, is compelled to mix it up with a professional wrestler who has quarreled with his sweetheart, and it is guaranteed to make any audience howl with mirth. "A Parisian Knight" also is crowded with laughs and it would be a gloomy soul indeed who couldn't find a cure in this film. "The Feud" is a hilarious adventure in house-buying that brings a family war along with the purchase.

In the Married Life of Helen and Warren series, "The Peacemakers" finds Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley, the newlyweds, in a thrilling adventure on board ship in which mistaken identity gives rise to considerable merriment. "His Own Lawyer" gives Hal some anxious moments.

"Failure," an O. Henry comedy, shows what happened to a divorce lawyer who tried to collect a fee from each of the three principals in a human triangle and lost out all around, while "Cupid a la Carte" is a typical O. Henry yarn made into a great film.

Perhaps the outstanding picture on the list for National Laugh Month, judging by the reception it received from pre-release reviewers, is "Control Yourself," an Imperial, in which Sid Smith introduces the celebrated electric horse made famous by President Coolidge. Smith appears as a gilded son who struggles to overcome a violent temper and win the hand of a beautiful heiress and the big scene is the crumbling of an immense dam which a crooked contractor has built for the girl's father. The hero discovers that his prospective father-in-law is about to be swindled out of $100,000 and resolves to prevent it. This picture was declared a knockout by all who saw it at a recent screening.

However, the high praise bestowed on "Control Yourself" does not mean that the others on the list are inferior in quality. Everyone on the list brought hearty laughs and spectators agreed that they were much above the usual standard of short laughing subjects.

Felix Adler, who recently signed a contract as chief title-writer of the Fox comedy department, after several years in a similar capacity with Mack Sennett, adds greatly to the entertaining quality of these comedies with titles which are in themselves irresistibly funny.

George Marshall, comedy supervisor, has surrounded himself with a staff of fertile-brained gagmen and, according to announcement from the Fox West Coast Studios, an absolute ban has been placed on all the old time-worn gags which once were regarded as indispensable in the making of comedies. Working under Marshall's direction are Robert P. Kerr, Albert Ray, Lex Neal, Max Gold, Andrew Bennison, Daniel Keefe, Lew Seiler and Benjamin Stoloff, some of the ablest comedy directors in the film industry and a veritable army of gag-inventors.

The Fox comedy program is filled with exploitation possibilities. Linked with the Van Bibber comedies is the name of Richard Harding Davis, the celebrated American author who wrote the stories on which they are based. O. Henry is the world's greatest short story writer. Mabel Herbert Urner, author of "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," is now writing stories which are syndicated to eighty-one of the most important newspapers in the country. Each of them runs pictures of Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley in scenes from the Helen and Warren comedies.

In order to help exhibitors put over National Laugh Month with a real bang, Fox Films has provided unusually attractive posters, lobby photos, newspaper clip sheets, and, in fact, everything conceivable in the line of accessories to keep the box-office busy.

Vivid Stories of News Reel Exploits Told At Opening of Fox News Cameramen's College

MANY of the problems which confront the camera-bearing reporter who serves a motion picture news reel were entertainingly discussed at the recent session opening the second season of the Fox News Cameramen's College.

Truman H. Talley, director-in-chief of Fox News, presided and the principal talks were given by Clyde W. Eckhardt, assistant to the general manager of Fox Film Corporation, and Fred C. Quimby, short subjects sales manager. Following the suggestion of Messrs. Eckhardt and Quimby, Mr. Talley called on the field men for their own impressions of the best manner of "shooting" a picture and getting it back to the lavoratory.

Vivid stories followed the dashes to the scenes of sport, disaster or famous gatherings to record the events photographically.

Mr. Quimby astonished nearly all present by telling of the amazing growth of the Fox News Reel in seven months. He quoted figures to show that the increase has passed 37 per cent in that short period, and that over 4,200 theatres show this reel each week.

This Camera College is one of the most interesting features of the entire Fox organization. Twice each month Director Talley and his staff assemble with all of the members of the College and listen to addresses from departmental heads, scientists, archaeologists, world travelers and men distinguished in other walks of life. Some of the greatest thinkers in the land have discussed various problems and voiced their suggestions for the betterment of news reels.

"We all know," said Director Talley, "that the producing of a news reel is a continuation of the producing of a newspaper because its purpose is to place before the public a record of the most stirring events of the day. That our work presents that record in a more vivid, and, I believe, more interesting manner than it can be presented by a newspaper, may be denied by newspaper editors, but a motion picture certainly puts an event before the public in a more convincing entertaining way.

"Your responsibility, therefore, is great. Yours is the task of speeding by the most rapid means of transportation to the scene and there picturing an event which millions will be eager to see. The more judgment you use, the more vision you bring to your task, the better will be the results. It's our duty, as it is the duty of the newspaper reporter, to get all of the news, and the best man is the one who gets it in most entertaining form and gets it first."

Seider Says: "Short Subject Has Come Into Its Own"

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA
745-7th Avenue, New York City

December 1, 1925

Short Features Advertising Association,
218 West 42nd Street,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

It is superfluous for me to add my endorsement to the National Laugh Month idea.

The Short Subject HAS come into its own.

The only problem in this relation, as I see it, is the method of bringing the realization of this fact to the theatre owner. Some distributors of Short Subjects have recently added a clause to their contracts in which the exhibitor agrees to give equal space to that given to the feature, for the Short Subject.

It is my conviction that "National Laugh Month" for the purpose of educating the motion picture forces, to the value of the Short Feature is the better plan, and which should and will bring the desired and merited result.

Cordially yours,

To Make Comedies in East

Laymon Units Leave Coast to Get Prominent Eastern Spots

To overcome the sameness found in two reel comedies, Gene (Fatty) Laymon has brought his whole company, including actors, working staff and camera men, to New York and started the first of his new series for the independent market with Broadway and Wall Street backgrounds. The Woolworth building will figure prominently in the first subject, "The Inventors," in which Gene (Fatty) Laymon and his co-star, Charles Dorety, will get a good view of New York as window washers a few dozen stories above the other tall buildings. It is these views of New York that Fatty wants in his new series of comedies to contrast with the competing short subjects with Hollywood backgrounds.

Seven other series of "shorts," also being released through Tennek Film Corporation, are being made on the coast, three of them on the Selig lot. One series of wild animal stories starring Queenie, the tiger, is being made with the Selig zoo as an all-star cast. A dog series with the police dog, Lightnin, will also have California backgrounds so that Kenneth J. Bishop is considering bringing other units East to help add variety to his otherwise diversified program of dramas, comedies, travelogues and magazine novelties.

Six Test Runs of Moana Give a Line On Best Methods of Exploiting Film

BECAUSE Moana of the South Seas is a narrative rather than a drama, the Paramount Theatres Organization sent the picture to six of its theatres for advance runs to test out the exploitation possibilities. It does not appear any effort was made to indicate to each house a different method of handling, but rather each manager was left free to use his own judgment and to form his own campaign on the argument that he best would know how to gain a response from his patrons.

Moana, you may recall, is one of Robert Flaherty's pictures, seeking to reveal manners and customs rather than to offer a photoplay production, though it possesses a definite story. It differs from the usual photoplay in that the tricks of the scenarist are not employed, a plain, unvarnished tale being the aim of the producer.

The towns selected were Asheville, N. C., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Jacksonville, Fla., Pubelo, Col., Austin, Texas, and Lincoln, Neb.

In Asheville

In Asheville the picture was given the Imperial Theatre, and Manager Morrison started in two weeks in advance, using teasers in the form of two inch block letters, one to a page, spelling the word Moana; care being taken to run the letters in their proper order. This was to familiarize the newspaper reader with the name. One week in advance display ads were used, large and small displays alternating, culminating in a two eights in the Sunday papers.

The newspaper work was partly to unloosen the reading columns, for Mr. Morrison figured that the film oddity would take a lot of putting over. Because the picture was different, the newspapers were unusually generous and ran daily stories on Flaherty and his work, the South Sea Islands and the life of its people.

A Special Screening

One week in advance a special screening was attended by the usual group of educators, clergy, press and prominent citizens. Worthwhile prizes were offered for the three best contributions on "Why I liked (or did not like) Moana." This was designated a "Reaction Contest."

The lithographic supply was limited to 35 each on ones and three-sheets, and 200 block window cards were used to supplement this scant supply. Trailers were used three weeks in advance, at which time a display of curios, loaned by Mr. Flaherty, was made in the lobby. For the showing period the display was a South Sea landscape, with light effects, built into a shadow box, while Spanish moss was used on the house front and palms and ferns were used to decorate the foyer, soft blue illumination suggesting moonlight.

The Hays office sent letters to those on its personal relations list and the Asia magazine supplied a list of its subscribers in Asheville. A similar list will be supplied on any town when the picture is regularly released. Mr. Morrison also sent out 1,000 letters over his own signature.

The net result was a business considerably over the average "first three days" for that house, due to the fact that interest had been created and sustained over a three-week period. On a regular photoplay this would be detrimental to the intervening subjects, but all six of the campaign very definitely demonstrate that the way to sell this is to create advance interest, and that this interest does not detract from the current runs, as would special publicity for a regular feature.

Jax Came in Strong

All first day records were broken at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, where Guy Kenimer started a month in advance in the house organ and on the screen of his own and other houses. Five tack cards were prepared, each bearing one of the letters of Moana. These were tacked as close together as possible, and always in that order, the word being spelled out before the next M was tacked up. Stress was given the world premiere, and a special appeal was made to tourists in the shape of "souvenirs," or the South Seas in the shape of pay envelopes filled with white sea sand. These were placed in mail boxes by the office clerks.

The public library was hooked to a display of South Sea literature in both fact and fiction titles. Two window displays were made from the supplied curios; personal adornments in a jewelry store and heavier articles in the department store. A shadow box scene and a cutout three sheet were placed in the lobby a week in advance, and a special showing was given a week ahead. Kenimer made an announcement to Kiwanis, and sent letters to other luncheon clubs, while a strong newspaper campaign was run in both the advertising and reading columns of the newspapers, along with car-dash cards.

The prologue was a woman doing the Siva-Siva.

Pueblo Played Schools

E. P. Briggs, of the Rialto Theatre, Pueblo, made a drive on the schools, obtaining permission to address the pupils of every school on Flaherty and his work. The subscribers to Asia were called on the telephone, instead of being circularized, and 1,500 post cards and 500 letters were mailed to others.

HAND PAINTED BANNERS DESIGNED BY E. E. BRIGGS FOR MOANA OF THE SOUTH SEAS

The supply of pictorial paper being limited on the advance showing, the Rialto Theatre, Pueblo, Colo., made a lobby display of hand work and got unusually good results. In the wall panel is one of the actual three sheets, which supplied the suggestion for the painting shown in the foreground of the same photograph. When paper is available, paint up the cutouts.

His teaser contest was different from the other in that it was interrogatory, asking "Who is Moana?" "Is Moana man or beast?" and similar questions, copy being changed each day until the display ads were broken.

The usual pre-showing was given, and Rotary, Lion and Commerce Clubs were interested. Block 28 sheets replaced the usual pictorials, which were not available, there were 50 window cards and one window display. Three stores used South Seas sundaes and special posters were made by hand for the lobby display.

The business was better than usual "with the possible exception of westerns."

Pleased Poughkeepsie

Because of its nearness to New York, the Stratford Theatre, Poughkeepsie, was able to offer the personal appearance of the producer the first night of the three-day run, but Manager Ed. Zorn credits his advance showing with being the best single item in the campaign. He used 72 column inches of newspaper advertising for his advance and 92 during the three days of the showing.

He used single letter tack cards, but instead of spelling out the name along the street he used all M's the first day and overtacked these with the O-A-N-A on successive days. This seems to be a better handling of this idea, for he held interest for five days.

In default of a proper supply of paper, he put out 40 ones and the same number of threes and had secial paintings made for the lobby. The trailer was used for two weeks, and a display of curios was made in a store window.

Business was above the average, but not record breaking.

Boomed with a Band

E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, used a bunch of jazz bands to put over the picture the first day, figuring that it would get him the verbal advertising that would care for the two days following

A STRONGLY SELLING MARQUISE DISPLAY ON MOANA

Moana of the South Seas offers real dancers and not made up players, and the dancers help to get the interest perhaps better than any other angle that can be used for lobby work. The front offers a hand painted banner with a landscape.

Four local bands were thrown into one, and Mr. Roberts fairly howled about it. He even got the merchants to run a one-line slug in their ads reading "Mass orchestral—Moana—Nov. 2—Majestic." This was run daily for three weeks in advance. There was also a one page cooperative ad, about Moana and the bands, the day before the opening.

The campaign started a month in advance with the mailing of 8,000 circulars advertising the dual event, following with the trailer and a poster contest for the schools, which compensated in part for the limited supply of lithographs.

The curio exhibit was made in a photo-supply store, with the phonograph stores tying to their records, Hawaii being moved into the South Seas zone temporarily.

An effective pre-view was given, and a miniature was built for the lobby. Business was "highly satisfactory."

Switched in Lincoln

Originally Moana was booked to the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., but a kink in the bookings necessitated the transfer to the Rialto, to fill in a gap.

In consequence this was the smallest campaign of the six, and yet Charles Shire made a better business showing than some of the other houses with longer campaign.

Much of this was due to the use of a number of cutout three-sheets of Shiva dancers who were placed around the marquise. He could use only seven one sheets and twelve threes for his board work, but he bolstered this with 200 window cards reading "Moana, Robert Flaherty's True Romance Picture of Life in the South Seas, made by the man who made Nanook of the North."

These very materially helped to get the increase over the average business.

Apparently he was unable to use the advance showing, or the results might have been even better, but he put it over well with only 72 column inches, divided between the two papers.

Must Be Sold

The answer seems to be that you can sell Moana IF you sell it. You can't tell them to come and get it, like the cook on a chuck wagon. You have to tell what it is and why it should be seen. Your best bet is an advance showing. If this cannot be arranged the second line is a good newspaper campaign, especially as to reading notices, and in most towns you'll find it easy to break in with the readers supplied.

Local color in the lobby is the third strongest appeal—especially the dancers, and you cannot do business without the trailer.

Put it over right and you'll sugar your receipts, but you must use salesmanship.

Lots in a Name

The name stunt was employed by the New Lyric Theatre, Camden, N. J., to put over Romola. A telegram was sent from Los Angeles signed by the Gish sisters asking that free admission be given all sisters named Lillian and Dorothy.

All girls who claimed admissions were named in the newspaper the following day, which gave the neighbors a chance to check htem up, but that did not stop a lot of sisters from temporary renaming.

Radio Wedding Newest Wrinkle

Broadcasting a stage wedding is the newest form of this always good advice. It was worked lately at Loew's State Theatre, and while no applause cards demanded an encore enough were received to prove that the stunt interested.

Gifts were displayed in the lobby for three days in advance of the showing of Exchange of Wives, and at the end of the first night show on the opening day the happy couple appeared on the stage and received their license. Then the show went on and at eleven o'clock the audience was permitted to look on while the stage was set.

A silver cyke was dropped and against this was placed an altar and white pedestals. A ribbon aisle guard was run down the centre aisle, floor cloths were placed and potted plants run on.

Then for fifteen seconds the house went black, while a floaral drop of smilax and flowers was lowered against the cyke, and then every light went full on in a sudden blaze. It was a clever touch and set the house in an uproar.

When the applause quieted the bride entered down the centre aisle and the ceremony was performed in front of the knees of W. S. B. F. The Mayor offered his felicitations, while his deputy presented the key to the city, and a short musical program followed to give the listeners their money's worth.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

RUSSIAN Cossack singers and a Russian peasant orchestra of ten pieces, with a female Russian singer and a male dancer provided plenty of color for the prologue which was put on with the new Rudolph Valentino picture, "The Eagle."

This presentation was one of the three which went to make up the program, additional films being a Thanksgiving subject and the Mark Strand Topical Review. The entire performance ran for 1 hour and 51 minutes, with the Valentino picture getting 1 hour and 12 minutes of this. The Thanksgiving film and the Topical Review together took up 10 minutes, which left 29 minutes for the musical presentations.

In the overture place the Mark Strand Orchestra, with Harold Stern and Emil Bierman conducting, was presented in "Victor Herbert Favorites." This opened with "Babes in Toyland," by the orchestra, while on the screen was being run an announcement title. The screen was flooded from the dome by a blue Mestrum flood, deep at the bottom and thinning out as it went up. At the conclusion of the title on the screen the purple spangled draw curtains were closed over the production stage. The second selection was "Sweethearts," sung by a soprano dressed in a springtime gown and carrying a big straw bonnet and appearing on the apron of the small stage in front of the draw curtains. Following her the orchestra took up a strain of Erin Go Bragh" and from that went into "Kiss Me Again," featuring first violin and cello. "A Kiss in the Dark" followed, with the xylophone player standing for this selection. The presentation closed with "Thine Alone" as a duet by soprano and tenor on the apron of the production stage. The lights: 2 steel blue Mestrum floods from the projection room on the drapes and draw curtains for the first number; foots and borders of large stage in blue and Mestrum blue Kliegl floods on the orchestra from the dome. For the second number bridge spots of white were shot down on the soprano. For the third and fourth the dome changed two spots on the orchestra to Nile blue. For the fifth selection dome took one flood off orchestra and focused it on xylophonist. For the concluding number the dome put a Nile blue across the production stage. This presentation took up 10 minutes.

Lily Kovacs, girl pianist of the Mark Strand Orchestra, was presented in a Moskowsky waltz, the arrangement being made especially for this occasion. The lights were Nile blue floods on the orchestra with a white spot overhead on the pianist. This number took 4 minutes.

Immediately preceding the photoplay was the atmospheric prologue in a special setting designed from a scene in the picture and showing the mosques and spires of a Russian city through 3 arches. On the stage were grouped a male sextette in Cossack costumes, flanked on either side by musicians of the 10-piece orchestra. At opening Russian melodies were sung by the male sextette accompanied by the orchestra. The orchestra then played "Whistling Waltz," which was followed by "Kaleenka," sung by a mezzo-soprano who had been off the stage up to this point. "The Volga Boat Song" sung by the sextette followed and then "Bright Shines the Moon" by the orchestra. The presentation closed with a Russian dance by a male dancer. The time required for this was 15 minutes and the lighting was predominated by blue.

Gibson Statue is in Permanent Use

For a long time this department has favored anything which gives permanent symbol for an attraction, such as a set lobby for the chapters of a serial or similar stunts.

Used for the first time on The Calgary Stampede, Mr. Meister plans to display this figure in the lobby each time he has Hoot on the program. People seeing it will know that he is to be seen inside, and as he swings a strong following in the town Pabst made famous, the stunt works well. This almost over-decorative lobby broke all house records with the Stampede. It must be good, though it looks rather overdressed.

Neighborhood Houses Split Joint Ad Cost

When The Iron Horse was shown in Cleveland at the neighborhood houses, twenty-five prints were at work and the picture was shown simultaneously all over town.

To put it over, there was carried a large advertisement telling where the picture was on display, with teasers drawing attention to the main advertisement.

The cost was split between the 25 houses (with a kick-in from the exchange, probably), and each house was able to get a large space at a cost within its means.

type and wave rule, with part of a stock Christmas holly border to fill in the one blank. Any compositor can work this up with stuff to be found in any printing office, and yet it stands out better and bolder than the best cut that Metro-Goldwyn could devise. A cut would be just a cut. This is an idea. It's something different, and it gets over with more punch than most spaces carry. It's going to hold your attention long enough to find out what it is you have to beat, and by that time you are into the running story, and staying there because it is written colloquially. It's written in a breezy style that carries conviction. To say that "there are more stars on the Metro-Goldwyn roster than there are in a Jack Dempsey punch" carries a vivid mental picture. It soaks home the idea in a flash. Try it on yourself. Tomorrow ask yourself if you have forgotten that line. Just write on a slip of paper "What line am I to remember?" and pin it on your desk. Look at it and that sentence will flash back to you, just as it did to the readers in Devils Lake, N. D. That's the value of good copy. It sticks. You can put it into more elegant English. You can say that M.-G. has fifty stars or a hundred stars or more stars than any other company and the reader will forget the statement by the time he has turned the page of the newspaper, but you can't forget a statement conveyed in a simile. It would be worth the entire four twelves to the State to get that one idea over, since it has the M.-G. bookings, but that's only one of the lines. Look down at the bottom. Vision in the slogan without the "Write this on your cuff." You'll realize that it won't mean half as much. It won't mean one tenth as much, though it is precisely the same thing. That cuff writing is merely the nail that drives the idea onto the wall of your brain. They have a natural copy writer out there at the State and we'll tell him he's good in case he does not already know it.

five days. Probably he did his own talking in other sections of the paper, but he realized that this reproduction of a newspaper column would mean more than the most elaborate cut, and he produced a singularly powerful display. It's the natural tendency to take the rest of the space to run in what the critic said, and we think that Mr. Kadow's economy of copy is the most striking thing in the space. It's a great thing to be able to talk convincingly, but is a more valuable gift to be able to realize that sometimes you can untalk the good already done. Mr. Kadow lets the criticism speak for itself. He does not weaken it by trying to build up with his own talk. This is one of the places where silence is golden, and Mr. Kadow knew it. He could have flopped the entire space with just a line or two more—but he didn't. That's the way he's built. He knows when to keep silent, and get over.

The Journal has arranged for the production of her new feature film, Classified at the State Theatre to usher in Journal Classified Week." You can guess how much arranging the Journal did, but it carried a walloping bunch of publicity that cost only 150 tickets, which were awarded as the lesser prizes for the best letters on "Which classified ad interested me most, and why." The top prizes were $5, $3 and $2 each day, with twelve pairs of seats. Across the river, in St. Paul, the Pioneer-Press was tied to the names-in-the-ads idea with $50 for the best definitions of "classified," bannered its wagons and for the first time carried a picture of a player in its roto section. were used in both the morning and evening papers for five days with no hint as to what it might be. Then the sixth day broke this three twenties with precisely the same teaser at the top and an arrow pointing through seven inches of space to a three tens. Latre the three tens was repeated as such, with the teasers cut out, but the contact had been made very effectively. This seems to be a new idea. It is not new to link the teaser to the first splash, but the arrow is the first time out, and this gives much more display value to the three tens. It gives the regular space the value of sixty inches. More than that, it carries much of this sixty-inch effect over to the succeeding three tens. It is an effective idea and to be recommended to others desiring to hook the teaser campaign to the regular display ads. It materially helped the Minneapolis run.

The reverse panel in this display on The Midshipman from the Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, is good. It puts the title, the star and the chief selling fact over with a punch, and that is about all an advertisement should be expected to do. It would have been better to have left off the drawing of the ship; which has no sales value, to let in type announcement of the small features, which possess a distinct influence on the box office. The lower third of that display is mostly wasted space. It would have been better to have set the reverse panel in white space. That would have given greater attraction value than a confused drawing. A drawing is of value only when it helps to sell more tickets than could be disposed of through a straight advertisement. It must serve either as an attractor or an interest getter. Here it is not an attractor, since it is inferior to the panel above. It is not an interest getter because it does not offer any suggestion that is not better covered by the "A gripping romance of the Annapolis Naval Academy." It's a battleship and not a naval academy, and the space might better have been taken for a type announcement that it was produced in co-operation with the Navy.

Wooden

D. Roscoe Faunce went to the woodpile for his exploitation on A Son of His Father at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham. He had 3,000 heralds printed up on veneer strips, with the copy: "Harold Bell Wright's A Son of His Father recalls the old saying, A Chip off the old block." House and playdates followed. Very few were thrown away, and most were shown around. The cost was very slight.

A White Oval is the Display Here

But the big idea is not the cut but the manner in which the display is arrived at, and this can be worked on any picture. The same display with an evenly white ground would be only fairly good, but with the benday shading a portion of the clear space, to throw up the white, the space seems fairly to leap at you from the page on which it appears.

"The Road to Yesterday"—Producers Distributing Corp.

B. DeMille Exceeds His Best Records In This Tense Drama of the Mystic Past

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

PERHAPS the sincerest tribute to Cecil De Mille's work in his first production for a new connection is found in the fact that one of the best staged mechanical effects ever brought to the screen is accepted by a bulk of the spectators as merely a step in the advancement of the plot. Their interest in the story is so strong that even a big mechanical punch becomes secondary.

Most Cecil de Mille pictures of the past have drawn considerable, if not most of their strength from the gorgeous stage pictures, mechanical tricks and beautiful women superbly gowned. None of these trade marks are lacking in "The Road to Yesterday." The production is along the most sumptuous lines. Mr. De Mille will not disappoint those who look to him for purely visual effects. But in this picture he offers the most sincere presentation of a fine story that he ever has effected.

Based on the stage play by E. J. Sutherland and Beulah Marie Dix, a very free translation has been made for the screen, to the decided betterment of the story. In he original the excursion into the past was the result of a walsh rabbit dream. In the screen drama the return to an earlier existence is made during a period of unconsciousness following a railroad wreck. Beth Tyrell dips again into her past life, finding in those romantic costume days her associates of 1925 in very different positions.

The occult, coupled to the general belief in reincaration, makes a certain and definite appeal, and the sequence has been charmingly handled in its adaptation.

The romance period is not merely a gorgeous interpolation as is too often the case, but a logical and necessary part of the running story; a play within a play that forms the most vital portion of the picture.

In direction, production and acting values, "The Road to Yesterday" is of a standard to warrant its road showing were it not for the desire of the production company to keep faith with its clients. It is cunningly contrived to appeal to the greaest possible number, and whether the spectator finds the story or the spectacle of the greater interest, he is certain to be amply content, for the presentation is an unusually happy and successful combination of the visual and the mental.

Mechanically the railroad wreck is one of the most perfect stage illusions ever devised. The effect of the head of the freight locomotive ploughing into the sleeper is terrific. Were the story less gripping the play could be sold on this effect alone. As it is, the wreck to most of the spectators is merely a means to an end.

Vera Reynolds exceeds previous work as Beth. William Boyd and Joseph Schildkraut divide the honors among the men and Casson Ferguson is excellent as the society idler who is the nearest approach to the traditional villian. He and Jetta Goudal are at their best in the romance period. Miss Goudal is almost too exotic in the modern dress portion. Trixie Friganza is good in a slight comedy role and no part in poorly played.

In production and direction Mr. De Mille never has done better.

Colleen Moore Has Another Jazz-Flapper Picture Directed by John Francis Dillon

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

ISRAEL ZANGWILL'S play contrasting the ultra-advanced ideas of certain members of the younger generation with the staid old-fashioned mode of thought and living of their parents, furnishes Colleen Moore with her newest starring vehicle for First National entitled "We Moderns."

As Mary Sundale, Colleen moves with an extremely gay London set who take pride in referring to themselves as "we moderns" and upsetting the established ideas of conduct. She determines to do just as she pleases, without restraint and to flout her parents' advice. She admires John, a civil engineer, but imagines that she is madly in love with Pleat, a married man and the leader of the set. Her real self is awakened when Pleat attempts to force his attentions on her. She is glad to fall into John's arms and to admit that her parents were right after all.

It will be seen that this story provides Miss Moore with another flapper role. The picture opens with wild jazz doings, this atmosphere is maintained throughout, there being scenes where she is carried to her room by the butler and locked in and climbing down a trellis she goes on a treasure hunt which takes her into Pleat's bedroom, where he finds her hidden under the bed. The climax occurs during another jazz party aboard a dirigible which is struck by an aeroplane just as Pleat is becoming obnoxious. This is a novel touch and the falling of the machine and its burning up is well handled and provides a good punch. The action takes place in London and Miss Moore is seen in a number of shots where places of interest such as Trafalgar Square, Buckingham Palace, etc., serve as the backgrounds.

Colleen has a congenial role and Jack Mulhall does well as the young civil engineer. Claude Gillingwater and Clarissa Selwyn provide fine contrast as the dignified father and mother. Carl Miller effectively suggests the ultra-modern conceited he-flapper.

The action moves forward at a snappy pace and there some sprightly humorous touches. It will probably prove moderately entertaining for the average fan.

"Lady Windermere's Fan"—Warner Brothers

Irene Rich in a High-Class Adaptation of Stage Classic Directed by Ernst Lubitsch

AN ERNST LUBITSCH production with Irene Rich, Ronald Coleman, May McAvoy and Bert Lytell adapted from a stage classic by the famous author Oscar Wilde, which has served as the vehicle for some of the most noted actresses of the spoken drama, is the showmanship combination offered to exhibitors by Warner Brothers in "Lady Windermere's Fan."

Lady Windermere is a titled English social leader whose mother committed an indiscretion. This fact was kept secret from Lady Windermere who worshipped her mother's memory, believing her dead. A mysterious Mrs. Erlynne sends for Lord Windermere and produces proofs that she is his wife's mother and he pays her for secrecy. She lives in luxury and becomes the gossip of society even intriguing the fashionable Lord Augustus. Seeking to marry him she arranges to appear at Lady Windermere's party. Driven to jealous desperation by the insinuations of her admirer Lord Darlington, Lady Windermere goes to Darlington's apartment and leaves her fan in the drawing room. Mrs. Erlynne follows and when Lord Windermere and his friends find the fan she sacrifices her own reputation to save Lady Windermere. Her audacity in turning down Lord Augustus' previous offer of marriage wins him back.

Essentially a society drama of the drawing room type, one naturally does not expect stirring action, rather is the appeal based on character portrayal and the development of the plot leading up to the big situation, centering on the little article, which gives the story its title. The fact that since Oscar Wilde used the idea of one woman sacrificing herself to save another, it has been employed time and again in both drama and melodrama, strips it of originality but does not rob it of forceful dramatic effect, especially in the hands of Lubitsch and Miss Rich.

Mr. Lubitsch' direction is of course excellent. The development is smooth and straight-forward, advancing at a moderate tempo in keeping with the type of drama, and while marked by less than the usual subtlety, Mr. Lubitsch has contributed several clever and distinctly individual touches, such as a progressive blocking off of the screen as the bachelor overtakes Mrs. Erlynne, the sudden bobbing up of the heads of the three dowagers when she appears at the ball, the unexpected and amusing handling of Lord Darlington's declaration of love for Lady Windermere and the deft way he assists the Lord to retrieve an incriminating letter, also the rather risque touches showing the development of the affair between the bachelor and Mrs. Erlynne. There are other notable points in Mr. Lubitsch' direction, for example the clever and extremely effective facial by-play of the society gathering when Mrs. E. appears at the races. Here, too, he has used his penchant for novel camera work by "shooting" Miss Rich from a wide variety of angles, and in this and other scenes shows a deep understanding of the workings of human nature. With telling effect he builds up the tension and toys with the suspense after you know Mrs. E. will appear at the ball.

In the exacting role of Mrs. Erlynne, a woman of poise, fascination and charm, Miss Rich is exceptionally fine. Never has she given a better performance or looked so stunning. Bert Lytell is thoroughly satisfactory as the easy-going, whole-souled husband, and Ronald Coleman is fine in the rather thankless role of a gentlemanly cad. May McAvoy is sympathetic and charming as Lady Windermere, a role the exact opposite of Miss Rich', and Edward Martindel as Lord Augustus, does by far the best work of his career. Without disparaging the work of the players themselves, the hand of Mr. Lubitsch is evident in their portrayals.

This production is a distinctly high-class rendition of Oscar Wilde's play. It retains the dramatic values and has fine moments of comedy relief. A happy ending all around has been provided by a clever, amusing and typical Lubitsch touch. He has adhered rigidly to the drawing room tempo throughout, even refraining from detracting from the story by utilizing the possibilities of the racing scene. Because of the nature of the story and this method of handling, while "Lady Windermere's Fan" should entertain the average patron, its greatest appeal will probably be to the highest class of patronage.

"Clothes Make the Pirate"—First National

Leon Errol Is a Riot in Screamingly Funny Pirate Travesty — Dorothy Gish Is Co-Star.

WHEN Leon Errol, the popular stage comedian made his screen debut with Colleen Moore in "Sally" and scored such a decided hit, it was enevitable that he should achieve stardom. This goal is reached in his second appearance before the camera, in "Clothes Make the Pirate," a Sam E. Rork production for First National

The action is laid in New England during Colonial days when pirates infested the seas. The new star is cast as a mild-mannered, long-suffering and much-henpecked tailor who loves to picture himself as a ferocious pirate forcing his tormenters to walk the plank. One night he dons pirate attire, scares his wife and is himself so scared he hides for safety in a small boat. Mistaken for the noted pirate chief Dixie Bull he is taken aboard ship to command the bloodthirsty crew. Morning finds some of his ardor gone but with the aid of a naval lieutenant who is in love with his niece the false pirate chief bluffs the crew. There is a battle with an English man-o'-war and finally the real pirate chief is captured. Making his escape, Errol is glad to return home but instead of submitting meekly to his wife he bosses her around and she likes it.

"Clothes Make the Pirate" is really a travesty on blood-thirsty pirate stories, every situation being developed from the comedy angle and it is full of laughs. The subtitles which are a combination of staid old English and modern slang add to the general merriment. Dorothy Gish is co-starred with Errol, appearing as his wife and giving a fine performance in a role that is quite different from her usual ones, but Errol is practically the whole show. His familiar wobbly legs again serve him in good stead. Blaming it on an old wound, he is continually falling or staggering and each time it is good for a laugh for Errol does these falls in his own inimitable way, a way apparently impossible for anyone else to duplicate. In addition, he has other amusing mannerisms such as a ludicrous way of rolling his tongue around in his cheeks. Even his pirate costume is good for a round of laughter,

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

No one can take the story seriously but it is chock full of humorous situations such as his efforts to hide during the battle, his sudden courage when he recognizes his wife among the prisoners and demands her and his niece and a pretty vamp and then flirts outrageously with the vamp.

There is a pretty little romance between the lieutenant and the tailor-pirate's niece but it is subordinated to the comedy angle. The picture has been excellently directed by Maurice Tourneur and is finely mounted, the views of colonial Boston with its narrow streets and picturesque little houses and shops being especially attractive.

"Clothes Make the Pirate" should prove thoroughly amusing to any audience and establish Leon Errol as a popular star. Not only is he screamingly funny, but his work is entirely different from any other screen comedian.

New Tom Mix Film Is Good Entertainment With Lively Action and Exciting Climax

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

ALTHOUGH he appears as a wealthy tenderfoot idler in the opening scenes of his newest Fox production "The Best Bad Man" Tom Mix soon gets into his elements and gives a performance that will please his enormous circle of admirers.

Tom is cast as a chap who has never taken life seriously until a westerner demands that he complete a dam on his property that was promised by his father and is necessary for a score of ranches. As Tom has already sent money for this project he determines to investigate for himself, and disguises as a peddler of musical instruments. He finds that his agent is a crook, steals his own money back and resists arrest until he is identified. In the meantime he has fallen in love with the girl leader of the ranchers. The villain dynamites the dam and Tom saves the girl

There is plenty of snap and action and a lot of good comedy in this picture. Tom contributes his share of the latter, but big Tom Wilson as his negro valet is responsible for most of the laughs. His performance from start to finish is a scream,

In escaping from the sheriff and the villains, Tom exhibits his wonderful horsemanship and Tony comes in for a share. The manner in which this pair take fence after fence is superb. There is plenty of gunplay in the sequence where Tom holds off his pursuers.

The blowing up of the dam provides a fine punch climax. Director J. G. Blystone is to be credited for the thoroughly realistic manner in which he has staged these scenes, making them unusually effective. You see the principals engulfed by the wall of water while fleeing to safety and then swept along by the raging torrent. There is a real thrill when the girl is carried to the edge of the falls and is finally rescued by Tom with Tony's assistance just as she is about to be carried over.

Tom Mix is his usually, pleasing wholesouled, likeable self in this picture and Clara Bow is excellent as the girl, giving a spirited and thoroughly pleasing performance. Cyril Chadwick is a capable villain and the others give thoroughly satisfactory performances.

With its comedy, romance, western stuff and fine thrill climax, "The Best Bad Man" offers a variety of pleasing if rather improbable entertainment and it should prove a good attraction for the majority of patrons

Pleasing Story of a Dancer of the Paris Underworld Serves as Mae Murray Vehicle

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

IT is a story of the Paris underworld that is unfolded in "The Masked Bride" Mae Murray's newest starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and second only in interest to the star is the reappearance of the former screen favorite Francis X. Bushman after an absence of several years, in the role opposite Miss Murray.

The star is seen in the role of a cabaret dancer in the Montmartre section of Paris whose dancing partner and friends are thieves. She meets an American millionaire who is a reformer and making a study of crime and kids him along, even falling in with her partners scheme to rob him of a valuable necklace. She plays the game to the extent of preparing for the ceremony but her better self comes to the fore when she realizes the depth of the American's love and the duplicity of her sweetheart who choses the necklace in preference to her, and finds happiness as the American's wife.

While the story is highly improbable it is made entertaining by Miss Murray's excellent portrayal of the vivacious French girl and the wonderful dancing for which she is noted. Her Apache dance has a novel finish and is unusually fine. There is considerable sparkling comedy in the role, especially in the way she outwits the supposedly super-clever prefect of police. The picture is handsomely staged and Miss Murray wears some striking creations as the dancer.

Mr. Bushman is as handsome as ever in the role of the millionaire and gives a good performance. Roy D'Arcy is excellent as the prefect of police and Basil Rathbone give a sterling performance as the dancing partner.

At no time is the heroine masked and the only reference to the title occurs in a leader where the millionaire refers to the fact that as the hoydenish irresponsible woman she is really masking her real self.

"The Masked Bride" is sprightly and pleasing entertainment.

"One Man Ranch"—Universal

Action, Fine Horsemanship and Plenty of Fights in Western Starring Pete Morrison

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

PETE MORRISON is the star of the newest Universal Blue Streak Western which is based on a magazine story by George C. Jenks. He appears in the role of a western chap who after an absence at college returns to the ranch with effete eastern ways and dresses as a regular drug-store cowboy, earning the ridicule of the cow punchers.

The story develops along the line of one of the familiar formulas for Westerns, the plot embracing a dispute between neighboring ranchers over water-rights which they hope to adjust through marriage. Hero and girl both resent this. The hero saves the girl from a villain and she in turn aids him when the villain knocks him out. They fall in love without knowing each other's names, and all is straightened out when they again meet just as a big fight has started between the opposing factions.

Morrison gives a satisfactory and likeable performance as the hero, while Dolores Gardner appears as the girl. James P. Lockney, Leo Meehan and other familiar names appear in the supporting cast. Milburn Morris contributes several laughs by his eccentric clowning.

The action is punctuated by the usual run of hand-to-night fights, villainy, and good horsemanship, and there are some striking scenic shots. Altogether, "One Man Ranch" is a picture of average entertainment value that should provide enjoyment for audiences that like "Westerns."

Associated Exhibitors

ADVENTUROUS SEX. Star, Clara Bow. A story of everyday life which should please the better class of patronage. Did not register at the box office very well for me. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Big city, Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

NOW OR NEVER. Star, Harold Lloyd. A reissue that is well worth playing again. All of the old Lloyds should be reissued including the one reelers. They are much better than the comedies of today. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

YANKEE CONSUL. (6,148 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A picture like all of MacLean's, full of funny and hair raising incidents. Will please all. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

F. B. O.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels). Star, Al. Wilson. Not much story to this picture but the stunts Wilson does will make up for it. Picture similar to "Omar Locklears Great Air Robbery." Sunday, yes. Special, No. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION. (7,301 feet). Star, Mary Carr. This is the best picture we have ever run. If you can get them to come they will like it. Boost it to the sky for it will bear out any statements the press book makes. Make an appeal to the women and people who appreciate a real picture. It will not appeal to the "two gun, bloodthirsty" fans. It is really a clean picture. Tone, excellent. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-nine per cent. Farmers, town of 400. Admission 10-25. Ross S. Young, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

HEADS UP. (6 reels). Star, Lefty Flynn. Ran this with a six reel western and did pretty good. A lot of Flynn fans don't care for Lefty at all any more. The pictures he is appearing in of late don't satisfy them. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, not much. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

KEEPER OF THE BEES. (6,712 feet). Star, Robert Frazer. Here's a picture that had drawing power. It's by Gene Stratton Porter. I did better on this than her "Girl of the Limberlost." Print new. Rental plenty. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Not hardly suitable for special. Appeal, one hundred per cent. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

KEEPER OF THE BEES. (6,712 feet). A money maker, buy it and boost it, ran it two days to bigger crowd the second day, bought it right. Joseph L. Delise, Liberty Theatre, Saltsburg.

LILIES OF THE STREETS. Star cast. Go after this one strong, truly a great picture and a wonderful lesson to the flappers of today. Print new. Tone, very good. Sunday and special, yes. Great appeal. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

RIDING THE WIND. Star, Fred Thomson. Two days to fair business. This is the poorest Thomson picture to date. A few more

"Boys, every one of us is running a theatre for the good of the commnunity or city and for profit.

"That's why we realize the need of every booking tip. These reports are OUR contribution toward better booking conditions.

"We avoid bias—we're fair to the picture and to YOU. Use these tips and show your appreciative generosity by sending your tips in turn." OUR GANG will kill him. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

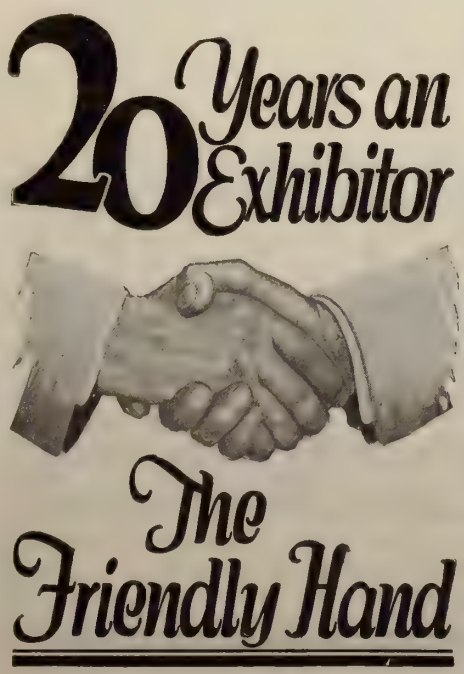
RIDIN' THE WIND. Star, Fred Thomson. Thomson always pulls for us regardless of weather and opposition and "Ridin' the Wind" is a good western with many laughs and not a few thrills; paper is flashy. Our patrons prefer Silver King to Tony and we agree with them. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

RIDING THE WIND. Star, Fred Thomson. Another good western with Fred doing his stuff as usual. Silver King also fine. Thomson is becoming quite a favorite here. All of his stories average up good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SILENT STRANGER. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Very good western, plenty of action and some comedy worked in and with the white horse. He is some actor himself. I would say book it. Tone, and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 25-50. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

THREE WISE CROOKS. Star, Evelyn Brent. Good picture that will please on an off day. Miss Brent well liked here and should please anywhere with her charming personality. F. B. O. is a good bet for any exhibitor. Sunday and special, no. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Thomson goes good here, although this picture is below the average. Too many impossible stunts in this. Silver King is an intelligent horse but he does things in this picture too impossible to swallow. However, they liked it and did a good business. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Farmers, town of 400. Admission 10-25. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.



First National

DECLASSE. Star, Corinne Griffith. Considered by my patrons as just fair. The film version don't start with the stage play, and outside of gowns and production I can't give this much. If you have to play it, go easy on promises. If Corinne Griffith is well liked in your town, maybe they'll pardon this one. Weather fine, fair attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontaic Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

DESERT FLOWER. (6,837 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Nothing but praise for you Colleen. You certainly know your eggs and always put over a winner here. Everytime they see one of your pictures they holler for more. We give you a rising vote of thanks for your efforts. You have this town, hand, tooth, and toenail. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, okay. Appeal, one hundred per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

FINE CLOTHES. (6,971 feet). Star cast. Junk for small towns. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

FLAMING YOUTH. (8,474 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This is a very interesting modern time picture that all like. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (220 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

HER NIGHT OF ROMANCE. (7,211 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. A fair picture where star has not lost her popularity. Some comedy in a few places. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre, Glasgow, Missouri.

HER NIGHT OF ROMANCE. (7,211 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. For light stuff this comedy-drama is not often surpassed. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, good. Rural and small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W Cannon Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

I WANT MY MAN. (6,174 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Very good show. Will please everyone. Sills is a favorite with us and usually brings out a crowd. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission, twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

LOST WORLD. (9 reels). Star, Bessie Love. This is a great picture and while I wouldn't recommend it for small town theatres, it went over in fine shape here. Don't be afraid to buy it and advertise it, for you can't go wrong. We did a very nice business and we have heard only good comments. People came who were never at a show before. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. A good picture with limited appeal. Its age is beginning to tell on it now. Not a picture that will stand the test of time. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Limited appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 350. Admission 10-35. Nelson & Ottem, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

SECRETS. (8 reels). Star, Norma Talmadge. This is a fine picture and as a special it is all okay. Buy it and "boost" it and you will get results. Didn't make expenses on it as we were rained out on Saturday night. This is our first picture by Norma Talmadge. Have some more bought and hope they will be as good as this one. W. C. Snyder, Cosy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

SKIN DEEP. Star, Milton Sills. This is an old picture but it is certainly good. One of those "different" pictures that keeps you guessing what will come next. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers' town of 400. Admission 10-25. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes Cty, Iowa.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. A good picture but too long and dragged out. One person told me they should have named "Cows." It didn't please here a great deal. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. Fair. Sunday, yes; special, no. A. J. Masters, Columbus Theatre, Lowellville, Ohio.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. A dandy picture for the small town. Work of Charles Murray as Meech unusually good. Plenty of humor throughout. Had weak ending. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Small town class and farmers town of 350. Admission 10-35. Nelson & Ottem, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN. (6,910 feet). Star cast. A dandy, but lost money. Paid too much for it for us. Very good tone. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (220 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

Fox

AS NO MAN HAS LOVED. Star cast. Excellent picture and you can boost it; fine character acting. This might be a special since it is taken from "The Man Without A Country" and you could tie up with the school for a booster campaign. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Possibly suitable for special. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

AS NO MAN HAS LOVED. Star cast. Four days to big business. Advertised it as "Man Without A Country." Everybody liked it. City of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

DANCERS. Star cast. Was disappointed in this picture as I expected a special, but was only a mediocre program production. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, poor. Rural and small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The Mix fan will be disappointed in this picture as it is costume stuff and Tom don't fit in there. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fair. Rural and small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Connecticut.

DURAND OF THE BAD LANDS. (5,944 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Did not show this to as many as "Timber Wolf." Am sorry as it is a better picture. Everybody seemed pleased. Just released. Print new. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FOOL. Star, Edmund Lowe. A good picture for its kind, but didn't draw here. Mixed class. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre, Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

FOOL. Star, Edmund Lowe. Billed like Circus. Failed to get film rental out of it on two days' run. Entirely too slow. Fox can't make a real special without Mix. They are as bad this year as last. W. H. Hall, Gem Theatre, Memphis, Texas.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. Star cast. Can't see why they make such pictures. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

LIGHTNIN'. (8,050 feet). Star cast. A good picture that don't get any money. Tone, too rough. Sunday, no. No appeal. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

WHEEL. Star cast. Three days to fair business. These John Golden pictures are good clean shows but have no draw at the box office. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. This is in a class by itself. Different from

A Letter-Report on "Dark Angel"

"My Dear Van and 'Gang':—Very seldom do I ever get a picture that I get so enthused about as to write a letter or do anything more than giving it a good recommendation in the regular Straight From The Shoulder Report Department but in all justice to those who had a hand in the production of 'THE DARK ANGEL' I feel that the regular report blanks are not big enough to report this picture on.

"The 'DARK ANGEL' is in my estimation just exactly what we exhibitors want and need. It is about the best balanced picture I ever saw, that is containing the right amount of everything that should go into the production of a fine picture. It has comedy, drama, pathos, action and on top of every ingredient that should be instilled into a picture it has Audience stuff or hokum. In plain words it is there from every standpoint and the man or woman who will not like this picture regardless how ignorant or cultured he or she may be should be hung or gotten rid of in some other manner.

"Since the first year I entered the picture business, which was five years ago, I have not written any concern or any special writeup above the regular reports which I send you and I have run everything from THE TEN COMMANDMENTS to SELL 'EM COWBOY which I think should include everything printed on celluloid. I state this just to impress on the exhibitors who have this subject yet to run and if they don't go after it in a big way they will be the losers.

"The Dark Angel is by far the best thing Mr. Fitzmaurice has ever done in my estimation (this is not from some high-brow critic, but from a man who is selling his entertainment to the public and speaks from a horse sense angle), and I state frankly that if he will keep these pictures coming like he has been making since A Thief in Paradise, he will be the greatest EXHIBITORS' DIRECTOR and PRODUCER in the field It is this type picture that not only we exhibitors want but our hungry entertainment seekers are looking for and when they get one like this they eat it up.

"Again in closing would impress upon every exhibitor who has this picture bought to sit right down and double their advertising and step out and go after this one in a big way. It don't cost much so you will not have to rob your patrons but get a reasonable price, then when the shows are over stand around where they can see you, for you'll feel proud of your business; feel a greater sense of pride down in your breast for having given them a fine piece of entertainment like this.

"I am not sending this to First National but to you for the regular report department if you can find space for it for I know it will mean money to any exhibitor who has this marvelous picture under contract."

"STICK UP A ONE SHEET!—They say the man in a small town sticks up a one sheet on a picture and beefs because he gets no business. G. A. Peterson, Folly Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma, sends this in as the answer to the slam.

anything we've had lately. Quite a change from the "sex" or society stuff we've been getting. Good entertainment. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

BROKEN BARRIERS. (6,717 feet). Star cast. This is a poor picture for small towns. No drawing power at all. We lost money on it two nights. Probably god picture for cities, parts are well acted. Too much "free love." Sunday and special, no. Appeal, very small. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

CHEAPER TO MARRY. (5,921 feet). Star cast. Two days to good business. A pleasing show. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,965 feet). Star cast. This picture appeals to those interested in horse racing. Ran it on a stormy night and lost plenty of money, but received many compliments from those that saw it. Don't be afraid to boost it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers' town of 400. Admission 10-25. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

NELLIE THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Very good picture that brought out the young people. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. Oil class town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Peter The Great (dog). This made a wonderful offering for Friday and Saturday, and pleased everyone. The dog was very good, should bring them in at the box office. The public demands action pictures of better type. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

WHITE DESERT. (6,464 feet). Star cast. Three days to big business. A very thrilling pleasing show that everybody liked. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. (6,002 feet). Star cast. This made a fine show for a Saturday night. It pleased young and old. A good picture for the small town. It is funny at spots. Tone and appeal, good. Not a special. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

AIR MAIL. (6,976 feet). Star cast. This went over with a bang and everybody seemed to like it. Business good. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

ALASKAN. Star, Thomas Meighan. Boys, here is one that drew good attendance through unsettled weather and mud. Meighan slightly miscast, but it is a good picture. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Very good appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 for specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

A SON OF HIS FATHER. (7 reels). Star cast. One of the best Harold Bell Wright stories we have ever run and should please all who like this type story. It being a western makes it unsuitable, however, for the highbrows. Tone, good. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK. (6,874 feet). Star, Edward Everett Horton. One of the poorest pictures received for some time from Paramount. It went over their heads. Patrons displeased and they didn't hesitate to tell us so. The picture seems a jumbled up affair and if you are not seated at the very start can't figure out what it's all about. Bought for two days but used only one. Lewis Hepinger, Orpheum Theatre, Clarion, Pennsylvania.

BEST PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Warner Baxter. This is a real up-to-the-minute modern picture, plenty of good comedy that sent them all out smiling. Pleased nearly all and did not mean much at the box office. Will go good in a city. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, very good. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

BEST PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Bessie Love. This is a nice little picture and one people enjoyed, but I ran it in zero weather in October and that caused it to fall down. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

CHARMER. (6,076 feet). Star, Pola Negri. The majority thought this a fair program offering. The story itself weak and fails to carry conviction despite Miss Negri's excellent acting. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

CHARMER. (6,076 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Not every audience likes Pola Negri but this particular picture is a good one although far from being as good as "Passion," which by the way was a masterpiece. In the character of a Spanish dancing girl, the charmer, Pola shines. Brought to America she becomes the rage of Broadway and the story develops a rivalry between two Americans played by Wallace MacDonald and Robert Frazer, artists both of them. Three is much comedy in the episodes. If this star has a following among your people, get it, otherwise not. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This is very good. Not as much comedy in it as most of her pictures, but a better picture than her average. She proves very capable in an entirely new character. People enjoyed the picture very much. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

BIG BROTHER. (7,080 feet). Star, Tom Moore. This picture pleased a well filled house. Had several compliments. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Rural and small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Had several walkouts on this show; could not blame them; she spoiled it by trying to play two parts. Norma Talmadge can do this and put it over, but not Miss Gloria. I notice that she is going with United Artists. This will save me the trouble to ask Paramount to not book me with any of her pictures on next group. I used to pay top money for her features but it's been so long since she has given us a real good one until I cannot get them in. If you have this one booked put it on as a program and not as a special. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

EVE'S SECRET. (6,225 feet). Star, Jack Holt. We got fooled on this production, so did our patrons by staying away, thinking it was another "sex" or society picture, but it was all right, a very good picture and well acted. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

EVE'S SECRET. (6,225 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Not even a good program picture. Had a poor audience and personally thought it to be cheese myself. Tone and appeal, none. Sunday and special, no. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre, Glasgow, Missouri.

LORD JIM. (6,702 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Good story, but a little bit overdrawn. Will please the majority. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

LOST A WIFE. (6,420 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Title changed from "Young Wives." Wrong picture for here. Lost money on it. Good for one day only. Special, no. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This we found to be one picture that gives them the satisfied look on leaving the theatre. Fast snappy story with a wonderful climax, drew exceptionally well and made us money. Dix very popular. The kind of a story they like. Could well be classified as a special. Lewis Hepinger, Orpheum Theatre, Clarion, Pennsylvania.

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). Star, Tom Meighan. Not as good as some he has made. In fact, you can't go very strong in its praise, but he has a fine hold on a certain class here, and they just thought as long as it was "Tom" it was okay, and in consequence I did nicely. Would say on this it depends on how they like this star as to what you should say and do when you play it. It will get by—not much more. Fair weather, fine attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Played two days to fine business on second night on Armistice Day in connection with the American Legion. It is one of Betty's best shows. Pleased young and old alike. Very good program show. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A little better than some of his previous pictures, but somehow or other Tom doesn't draw them in the way he used to. I think the fualt lies in the stories they have been giving him. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. The coming comedian—Griffith. This picture is an absolute scream, although it becomes a little foolish near the end. Keep up the good work, Ray. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finns Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Not quite up to the Dix standard. While containing some good thrills the story has been seen so often on the screen that you are never in doubt of what follows. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

Operation

You'll all be sorry to learn that good old E. N. Prescott has had to undergo quite an operation. That's what held up his tips.

But he came through all right, for which we're all glad.

And, like the dependable scout he is, "Pres" has grabbed the blanks and started shooting straight tips which, with his letter, will come to you as soon as type can be cast.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. Star, Bebe Daniels. Fellows here is a real honest-to-goodness story with stars, action, thrills, and everything to make it go. Did well at box office while the rain continued. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 on specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

SPANIARD. (6,676 feet). Star cast. Fair program picture that pleased the majority. Business average. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. Star cast. An action story that had no drawing power at all. The first fair day in two weeks and didn't get one-half of film rental. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Eighty per cent. appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 on specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. Wonderful picture as many exhibitors have said. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 25-50. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Positively the greatest money getter ever made. Had best week since I opened the house fourteen years ago. Tone, okay. Sunday, sure. Absolutely suitable for special. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,000. L. H. Greife, Opera House (500 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. Cannot improve on other exhibitors reports, but can say best picture I ever had here and I certainly received a good bunch of film. Tone, cannot be better. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. A wonderful picture from every viewpoint. Broke house record for receipts. Everyone seemed to be very much satisfied. Book it and boost it to the skies. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Fine appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Another corking good Zane Grey picture. Many people considered it even better than "The Covered Wagon." It certainly has some "big" scenes. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TOO MANY KISSES. (6,750 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Not as good as previous Dix releases according to opinions expressed here and did less than average at the box office. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WILD, WILD SUSAN. (5,274 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good comedy. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (500 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Pathe

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Harold is said to be on the skids and is quite likely to slip strong if Paramount has collared him. In this one he seems to hold his own and an extensive advertising campaign brought good business for the first time on a three night show. Everybody howled. It must be good. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 25-50. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FRESHMAN. (6,883 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Harold's latest and best. Didn't knock them over as I expected, because Denver exchange made me charge forty cents admission where I always charge twenty-five cents, unless it is a superspecial. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a picture, and one that pleased everyone that saw it. Absolutely the best he has made. Be sure and step on this and get a raise in admission. You will make money providing Pathe don't want it all, like they did from me. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Fellows, grab this one while it's hot! The best drawing card for a student town ever made. Whether they like Lloyd or not, they'll like "The Freshman." Dust off the old S. R. O. sign or have one made. Sunday, maybe. Special, yes. Fine appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

WHITE SHEEP. (5 reels). Star, Glenn Tyron. This is a crackerjack picture and should please any type of patronage. Great for the small town. Print good. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner. Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

second day than first. Everybody seemed to like it. Nothing big, but there is something about it that takes. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,500. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

HELEN'S BABIES. (Principal). Star, Baby Peggy. If you have an off night and do not expect much business just play this. It will please the kids and that is all. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Railroad class and miners town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Producers' Dist. Corp

ANOTHER SCANDAL. (8 reels). Star, Lois Wilson. A very good picture with lots of good acting and a good cast. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. (5 reels). Star cast. Sure knockout. Book it and cash in on it. F. E. Carney, Star Theatre, Marked Tree, Arkansas.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet. Star, Florence Vidor. Splendid picture for schools. Historical element good. P. W. Harnly, Senior High School, Grand Island, Nebraska.

BEYOND THE BORDER. Star cast. Knockout western. All Carey's sure bets. F. E. Carney, Star Theatre, Marked Tree, Arkansas.

CHALK MARKS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Just an ordinary program picture that should be run as such. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Industrial class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

CHARLIE'S AUNT. (7,245 feet. Star cast. A good farce comedy. Pleased all. More comments of favorable nature than any picture played lately. R. S. Helnring, Liberty Theatre, Marysville, Kansas.

CHARLIE'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star cast. A knockout. Best long comedy we ever had. Play it and be glad. Charles B. Dean, Empress Theatre, Leeds, North Dakota.

COMING OF AMOS. Star cast. Very good little picture and will appeal to majority of audience. Picture seemed to please. Morris L. Abrams, New Theatre (400 seats), Lake City, South Carolina.

ON THE THRESHOLD. Star cast. Melodrama devoid of action. Poorly acted except by veteran Waltham. Will "get by" in the woods. E. V. Hanegan, K. of C. Theatre, Oteen, North Carolina.

SEVEN DAYS. Star cast. Good, entertaining, very laughable. Big. Great comedy, well acted. J. B. Russell, Washington Theatre, Maysville, Kentucky.

They have to be written—they have to be mailed—they have to be typewritten here—then sent to the printer and set up in type—and all this takes some time, that's clear.

So, don't hold a grouch if tips don't see light the minute they're dropped in the mail—they'll go to "Our Gang" as soon as they can, and so—send them on without fail.

KEEP TIPS COMING!

United Artists

HIS MAJESTY THE AMERICAN. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A very nice entertaining story with much humor and overdone gestures. Reminds one of a home talent pantomime of some grand and glorious song. I'd like to see maybe Reginald Denny or Johnny Hines in this story. It's old. Tone, maybe. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY. (8,500 feet). Star, Mary Pickford. For two years I, like many others, especially the smaller towns, have protested and crabbed against Mary appearing in the velvet and laces roles that catered mostly to high-brows. Now after a long absence of Mary in the role that made her famous (I have played every single one she ever made), she comes to us as the Mary of old and she's remade. Back again as "America's Sweetheart," the idol of old and young, I had seen "Annie Rooney" before playing it and knew it would go over. Had stiff local opposition the first night, but the balance went over with a "bang," and what pleased me most of all was the record breaking kid matinee which was the best in years, beating "The Freshman" by yards and three downs to go. When Mary gets back in the good graces of Young America you can bet she's In. Many Thanks, Mary, and come again in this type of story that made you "America's Sweetheart." Mr. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Universal

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A picture that I enjoyed but the people here didn't like it. Those that came the first night knocked it so hard nobody came the second night. Story too complicated for our crowd. Didn't do film rental. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ten per cent. here. Farmers town of 400. Admission 10-25. Ross S. King, Opera House (225 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Just the type of story for Gibson. Lots of action and plenty of comedy and will sure stand 'em in line at the box-office. Print good. Special, yes. Great appeal. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

ACE OF SPADES. Star, William Desmond. Absolutely the best serial I have used for a number of months. Have used only two episodes but they are both above the average. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre, Glasgow, Missouri.

TAMING THE WEST. (5,304 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A very fine western from Hoot. Pleased everyone who came out. Tone, okay. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

Vitagraph

MYSTERY OF LOST RANCH. Star, Pete Morrison. Morrison is getting to be very popular here and is making better westerns than he did before. Print good. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Warner Brothers

GOLD DIGGERS. (6,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. Have seen lots better stars but the story is an okay one. Belasco usually puts a show across and this one is no exception. Clever titles are a great help. A Warner's Classic that isn't too classic. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Independents

ACE OF THE CACTUS RANCH. (State Right). Star, Art Mix. A fair western with a good story but with misleading advertising. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Oil class town of 700. Admission 10-25. G. M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

BATTLING BREWSTER. (State Right). Star, Franklin Farnum. This is a very good serial, but has not the punch that some other serials have. Oil class town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre, Wynona, Oklahoma.

About That Buck We're Shelling Out

WE'RE getting a good kick out of handing over a dollar for any major error that one of you folks writes us to point out. The letters are coming along often enough to show that you're taking real interest in helping us make this the most accurate Chart being published.

But, remember this, please!—Major errors, such as wrong feature footage. A parenthesis left off after a star name—or a release eliminated as we do cut them out at top of list when we add new releases—those aren't major errors. They don't work any hardship on exhibitors.

Last week we got three different letters from exhibitors—glad to get 'em. They brought out the point that Paramount's "Golden Princess" footage was away out. One said correct footage was "less than 7,000"—another gave it from an exchange measurement as 6,400, and the third had it 6,502.

So you see, prints differ SOME in different places—BUT—these boys will get the buck because we were away up around 8,000, as we got it with the information published with the review of that film. But it shows you that minor differences are bound to occur—just wise us up when they're REAL ERRORS.

Oh, yes—the New York Paramount office gives that footage on "Golden Princess" as 6,546.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by Colby Harriman

Bowes Predicts Prologue Demise

THE stage features of the motion picture theatre are struggling to find a proper niche, one which will remain permanent. The stage features are striving to define themselves in concrete forms tending towards standardization. It may be that the old order of things will pass entirely. We have secured the opinions of several of the leading producers; some are pessimistic while others are hopeful. Is the prologue to pass?

In the opinion of Major Edward Bowes, Managing Director of the Capitol Theatre, who has also launched successfully the presentation on Broadway of "The Merry Widow" and "The Big Parade," the "atmospheric" prologue to pictures has outlived its purpose.

"A picture is constructed along elementary dramatic principles," maintains the Major, "the same principles on which a play or a novel is written. The story is begun and unfolded in its logical sequence of events. How absurd and incongruous it would be to tear out several pages from the middle of the book and place it at the beginning! A novelist does not give an exposition of his story as the preface. Similarly, it would never occur to a dramatic producer to preface his play with a motion picture, an entirely foreign and different medium, and reveal the crux of his climax and his plot. It would be against all laws of dramatic construction and defeat the very purpose of the play.

"A picture is built along the same dramatic lines. A scenario is written and the picture directed according to the logical development of the story. All elements which might disclose the plot are carefully concealed until such time as it suits the dramatic purpose of the director to reveal them. Each scene has its logical position in the development of the story.

"The prologue defeats that very purpose. It extracts an important part of the plot and reveals and destroys the dramatic effect which the makers of the picture have gone to great lengths to achieve. The medium of the stage is different from that of the screen; the tempo, the elements are entirely foreign; the whole stage picture is so far afield from the elements of the motion picture as to make the contrast appear ludicrous.

"And yet so many exhibitors feel it their duty to give the picture a prologue. They take a scene in the picture from its place in the logical development of the story and attempt to reproduce it and achieve a similar atmosphere on the stage. With what results? The physical limitations of the stage and its accompanying effects, compared with the wide and far-flung scope of the screen, only serve to make the prologue appear in the light of a cheap and puny imitation. The carefully developed climax of the picture has been revealed and the result is distinctly anti-climatic. And when the stage scene fades out, it is immediately succeeded not even by the opening scenes of the picture, which, according to all rules of dramatic construction, are scenes of pure atmosphere and exposition, but into a succession of credit titles and facts in connection with the making of the picture.

"Pictures are made like any other products of creative art. They are complete artistic achievements in themselves. Now and again there comes a picture so colorful, so brilliant, so complete and comprehensive, that no prologue within the confines of the limited stage could hope to convey the spirit and atmosphere of the production. It would be sheer anti-climax. Such a picture is "The Big Parade," where this theory was successfully put to application.

"Music is the logical medium of interpreting the mood and character of the story, and the music score to "The Big Parade" by David Mendoza and William Axt of the Capitol Theatre, was conceived as a musical counterpart of the motion picture. The picture needed no introduction; its strength and beauty carried itself. But the scoring received as much attention as the actual making of the picture. Seventy-five per cent. of the score was original music—especially composed for the picture by Dr. Axt. There were 180 separate numbers. No less than 8,340 sheets of music had to be marked and cued.

"No prologue could hope to convey the magnitude and scope of this production. It could at best only be a cheap aping of its spirit. Instead, we made of the score a cumulative symphonic treatment of moods and characters. The music carried the mood of every scene and followed the action of every character. Each person had his or her theme which expressed the individuality of that person and his development.

"This is the special province and contribution of the exhibitor, and, in my opinion, the way he can best serve the interest of the motion picture and the motion picture public."

Hyman Features Seasonal Shorts

TOPICAL short films, fitting special ocsasions, are a strong point with Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre. One of the most recent indications of this was the special footage used for Thanksgiving Week, running about five minutes and combined with the Topical Review of selected subjects. James A. Fitzpatrick, producer of the Famous Music Master Series, produced the Thanksgiving film, setting forth the creation of Thanksgiving, dates, etc., and dedicating it to the people of Brooklyn. The program carried the following: "To Our Patrons"—In dedicating these thoughts to Thanksgiving we extend our sincerest thanks to you for your patronage and wish you al the happiness of the season. (signed) Edward L. Hyman, managing director." The Topical Review and the Thanksgiving film together ran ten minutes, being the only short subjects of the program.

As with Thanksgiving, every occasion meriting it has its special short subject. Hyman as a rule does not go in for short comedies, the time that would be given to these being given instead to stage and orchestra numbers. Unusual and novelty subjects are used, however, when possible to get them in. Music films are put on ,with the musical scores, and never fail to win as much applause as any other stage number. Plastograms, the third-dimension movies, nad other novelties are booked in when they will balance with the remainder of the show.

Rothafel Corrects Report

S. L. ROTHAFEL, head of the new Roxy Theatre organization has notified us that the report of the engagement of Erno Rappe as musical director for his new theatre is not authentic. Mr. Rothafel informs the department that a conductor for the new theatre has not yet been signed, although it is rumored that one of the leading symphony directors is being considered.

"For a Happy New Year"

These New Year Suggestions, Intended to Make Holiday Business More Interesting to Patron, Are Offered Herewith for the Consideration of Showmen Who Stage Prologues

Moving Picture World Presentations—Devised by Colby Harriman

THE three suggestions which are offered have been devised with the idea of giving three distinct treatments for seasonal presentations. The gayety and hilarity which characterize the New Year day may be easily reflected in presentations and contrast with those of Yuletide. The suggestions are simple to reproduce and may be successfully mounted on practically any stage.

1. "NEW YEAR'S EVE"—The scene suggests a balcony overlooking a city sky line. A cut arch drop may be hung at the curtain line to serve as a frame and masking piece for the set. A platform should extend across stage and, dressed with two balustrades placed at the downstage side of the platform with an opening at center which may be filled with a unit of steps. On the upstage side of the platform a low wall can be placed; back of this a sky line which may be painted on a drop or cutout. This treatment depends upon the area the producer has at his disposal. A moon box may be used back of the drop. The background should be silhouetted in deep blues against a gray blue sky; an orange moon hung to contrast with the sombreness of the background. The foreground should be highlighted with orange amber and canary with a green flood on the cut arch. An effective treatment may be achieved by this set by hanging a silver gauze so that it separates the platform from the background, the house tops being visible through the gauze. A typical New Year's revel may be staged in this set. As a bit of novelty the moon may be so constructed that the face of its becomes a clock.

2.—"TIME AND THE YEAR"—A large clock either a constructed set piece or painted on a drop constitutes the set. The face of it is painted to represent a clock with the hands working and the hour approaching twelve. In the center the face of Father Time appears; a song may be introduced by him to introduce the twelve girls whose faces appear back of each figure. The girls should be made up to represent the various months of the year, such as 1 o'clock—January; 2 o'clock—February, etc. For the big number the girls may appear on stage and at 12 o'clock the face of Father Time disappears and in its place the chubby face of a youngster, while on the background back of the clock stars appear forming the figures "1926."

3. "MEMORIES"—This number has been devised to introduce several novelties. The singer dressed in white flowing robes accompanied by Father Time appears from the large candle. They are dwarfs in comparison with the surrounding set. A spell is woven over the scene and through the window can be seen various characters emulating some of the outstanding features of the year. This may consist of repeating some of the famous song hits; introducing some characters made up as certain motion picture stars representing their successes of the year; also historical characters may be introduced.

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

I'm a Ba-a-a-a-d Reel!

(Caught in the act through the courteous co-operation of J. Weinberg of Fox Exchange and H. Herzog, F. R. A.'s Albermarle Theatre.)

AH-HA-A-A! I have her in my toils! Spare the poor print?

Not I! Not little Desp'rit Desmund Reel. I'm a ba-a-a-d Reel and I don't care who knows it. One touch of my trusty derringer and the print is shot!

"Protect the Print?"

This fellow Van comes out and lets the poor, hard-working print bewail her troubles last week. Chivalrous! Ah, yes!

But not with me lurking in the background. I'm ba-a-a-d! I'm rotten to my very shaking core. I'm the one that makes the projector's gears grind their teeth in despair. I'm the one that shakes and tears and rips and ravages.

Triumphant and unashamed I stand upon the prostrate, despoiled print. Show my photograph if you like. I'm not afraid. None other has ever achieved so great a villainy as I. I exult. I chortle. I laugh!

Ha—ha—ha—ha—ha, ha, ha, ha, haha!

Oh, I was a goody-boy in my youth. Sunday School texts were no strangers to me. I closed the text in my protecting embrace and gave her steadiness and support.

But I got kicked around and banged until my milk of human kindness curdled. I went bad. And when I got bad—I was ba-a-a-d!

Now I lie quietly in wait, either in some careless corner of a "coop" (ha! who ate you to make ME say projection room?)—or else in a junk pile in some exchange. And they forget I'm there until some sweet day my chance comes and I'm grabbed up and jammed on a rewinder and again I have the print in my clutches!

Then do I gargle that well known refrain from Treasureless Island—

"Seventeen patches on a dead reel's chest!
Yo—ho—ho! and a bottle of cement!"

And well may I carol—for I will shake and rattle and gouge and slip and bend and quiver and snatch at the film and bind in the projector—and cackle in glee as I hear them curse the defenseless print that I have in my fell power.

"Protect the Print!" Ha! Not while I'm in circulation.

Repair and rejuvenate your projector how you will. Jack up your inspection as much as you please. But as long as I—I, the ba-a-a-d reel, can get around—your efforts to protect the print will be in vain!

There is only one man I fear—and he is the man, whether he be in an exchange or in a projection room—who has a new reel, and a strong, sturdy reel, "a goody-goody" reel that hasn't had time to learn from me—and who kicks me into the back alley and replaces me with the safe support—curse his interfering!

But as long as there are some who don't care, as long as the few will keep me working—I glory in my sins.

Look at me! Shudder at me! Fear me!

I'm a ba-a-a-d reel.

Ha—ha—ha—ha—ha, ha, ha, ha, haha!

Protect the Print!—hahahahaha haha—"

Heroism and Equipment

"FIRE!" The cry that can fling a theatre full of people into a fighting, surging maelstrom, a trampling, life-loving—life-crushing—mob of maniacs!

The real excuse for such a cry—all the elements to cause a panic, and on a holiday—Thanksgiving!—existed in the New York Rialto when the film in a projector showing for private view caught fire.

Abraham Brenner was in the projection room where it happened. With a bravery that resulted in many burns, we hope none serious, he left the room only long enough to secure a fire extinguisher, then went back and fought the fumes and flames until he won—and the audience packing the theatre never knew a thing was wrong.

That's HEROISM!

What if the chemicals in that extinguisher had been old: What if the projection room hadn't been equipped with every possible device for preventing the spread of fume and flame?

But the Rialto keeps its extinguishers in working condition, keeps its fire prevention equipment right up to the minute. So there was a Thanksgiving audience safeguarded and insured against panic.

That's EQUIPMENT!

Brecher's Salesman

LEO BRECHER doesn't take a back seat to anybody when it comes to showmanship — and these days that means SALESMANSHIP. Mr. Brecher's Plaza Theatre, where Milton H. Chamberlain is Manager and Director of Advertising, proves it.

This way! The Plaza gets out a brochure—an eight page booklet with cover, neat, well printed, that carried a "Let's Go to the Movies" on the front, and on the coated stock first-page a cut of the Plaza marquise and sign and the punch—"Of COURSE, the Plaza".

The balance of the booklet sells the comfort, courtesy and facilities for patron-pleasing, with enough cuts to show the charm and play up the lure.

Mr. Chamberlain keeps his neighborhood in hand, getting posted on every new tenant moving into any of the numerous apartment houses or homes in the vicinity—and each such gets a brochure. At the start, when Mr. Chamberlain first designed and executed this very attractive mailing piece, ten thousand went out, first class postage; more are going out all the time.

That's salesmanship! Compliments are due Leo Brecher for his cleverly devised patron-making copy. Mr. Chamberlain has supplied your equipment with some copies. Want to see one?

More About Penn-State's "Lab" That Builds Patron Allegiance

By Kenneth V. Woodward

(Second Half of Story—Continued from Last Week.)

HOT and cold water should be available as well as drainage. The hot and cold pipes should run into one so that the temperature of the water can be varied. Any good carpenter can construct the sink and when finished it should be coated several times with some good waterproofing paint. The developer is placed in the tray on the left end of the sink, water in the center tray and the fixing bath in the tray on the right.

It might be stated here that it is well to substitute a wooden tray for the fixing solution instead of the metal one sent out with the Stineman outfit inasmuch as the chemicals used in the fixing bath are very harmful to the metal and will probably cause chemical reaction. The metal tanks are quite satisfactory for the developer and the water.

In regard to the chemicals to be used in the laboratory, I can not think of a more convenient method than to use Eastman's No. 16 M. P. developer for the developing agent and Kodak Acid Fixing Powder for the fixing solution. Some may disagree with me on this point, but it must be kept in mind that the purpose of this article is to simplify the process as greatly as possible. The No. 16 developer is available in 5 lb. cans. We take one of these 5 lb. cans and from it make three gallons of stock solution storing it in gallon bottles. Then, when a subject comes in to be developed we use 96 ounces of this solution to two gallons of water—the amount required in the Steinman tank for the developing of a 200 ft. reel. It will be observed that this matter of using the chemicals is quite inexpensive. We have found that as high as 1000 ft. can be put through 96 ounces of the stock solution mixed in the two gallons of water without giving any real harmful fog from forced development.

Kodak Acid Fixing Bath is a fixing solution put up in convenient boxes of 1 lb. We find that by using about 5 lbs. of the Acid Fixing Bath mixed in three gallons of water very excellent results are obtained. This ratio may not be in accordance with the exact formulas prescribed by laboratory experts but it gives a maximum amount of footage with a small amount of chemicals, works satisfactorily and it seems to me that this is what the amateur installing his own laboratory is after. I would advise anyone contemplating the operation of a small laboratory such as I have described to purchase the large volume called "Motion Picture Photography" now available at all large bookstores and camera shops. It contains a wealth of information along motion picture camera and laboratory lines and should prove very helpful to the one about to commence his own newsreel.

Illustration 8 shows Mr. McCloskey watching a screening of the newsreel before it is placed on the screen of the theatre. Frequently scenes are made which need fuller description, sometimes they are too lengthy —all of these faults are corrected in this preliminary screening.

The obtaining of suitable subjects for the local newsreel I have not touched upon as yet. As I have said briefly before, I believe that upon this most important matter hinges the success of our "State News Weekly." From the time of its inception we have endeavored to make it as much like the first-page of a newspaper as possible and have confined our efforts to strictly news material. Your patrons will soon tire of "seeing themselves on the screen" but they will never tire of seeing the news of the community pictured in an interesting manner.

Do not think that by going out and "shooting" a group of the natives lined up along the street you have an attraction for your theatre—they have tired of that long ago. Go after NEWS events of your community and present them in an interesting manner. By interesting manner, we mean to make your titles live and breathe with the language used by the experienced newspaper writer in describing some stirring event. Observe the current issues of the national news weekly releases; notice how their titles seem to vibrate with news interest. Sometimes, even though the subject in itself is not so interesting, proper titles well arranged will make it seem better to the patron than the good subject poorly arranged.

Speed is another thing which has made our "State News Weekly" interesting to our patrons. For instance, several weeks ago an airplane carrying a pilot and two passengers was wrecked near here early in the afternoon and the three killed. As soon as the newspaper informed us of the event I immediately started for the scene by automobile, while my assistant commenced making titles—that is, setting up the type and printing the cards. In a little over an hour I was back to the theatre, my helper had the title cards all ready and it was but a matter of another hour to put the film through the developing processes. Then, at the six o'clock show that evening the scenes were flashed on the screen. Imagine the surprise of the patrons as they sat in the theatre watching actual pictures of an event they had just finished reading of in the local paper at the dinner table! In case of fires in nearby towns we always endeavor to put the pictures on the screen the same evening. Recently Governor Pinchot made a hurried visit through the county in which Uniontown is located. Everyone in town was interested but few could spend the entire day roaming about the county to see the governor as he visited the different spots; in fact, all that energy was unnecessary, for they knew they would see the pictures of the complete tour on the screen the same evening!

When the "Around The World Flyers" passed over Uniontown some time ago we had a plane ready to take the air with a cameraman the minute the flyers approached the city. Some excellent views were obtained and we gave our patrons a real close-up view of the three ships from the air. Very few of them really saw the planes because of the foggy atmosphere so it may be imagined that "State News" won quite a little fame for itself by giving State patrons their only sight of the World Flyers as they passed over Uniontown. The plane from which we photographed the pictures was obtained without cost, by giving the flyer quite a little screen publicity from time to time in connection with an aviation field he operates.

On the screen this week as our State News Weekly feature we are running a 500 ft. special of the football game between West Virginia and Penn-State at Morgantown, W. Va. Quite a few local people attended the game and naturally the Uniontown lovers of the rugged sport are quite interested in seeing the game pictured in a thrilling manner.

When we first commenced work on our news reel I though the difficult part would come in obtaining a constant run of suitable subjects but I find that patrons of the theatre more than take care of this for us! Just as I am writing this, the physical director of the local Y. M. C. A. comes in to ask if we will photograph a swimming contest he is holding in the near future. So it is nearly every day—some rooter for the State News phones in or comes in with a suggestion for an event and I believe it is all because we have made our patrons feel that the "State News Weekly" is a real "go-getter" occupying practically the same position in the community as their newspaper.

In closing, if I have neglected any particular phase of the production of a small-town news reel, I will be only too glad to give any exhibitor contemplating installing a small laboratory any information I am able. I am only too anxious to see more exhibitors try the local NEWS reel proposition as a real business booster and institutional advertisement. Stahl's Fourth

ARMISTICE DAY, November 11, was opening date for Homestead's new theatre at Eighth avenue and Ann street. The theatre will be one of the finest in the country and rivals East Liberty's proposed new house. The building was begun last March under the supervision of Victor A. Rigaumont, Pittsburgh architect. It was to have been completed by Thanksgiving but will be opened in advance of the date set. The structure is of brick and tile and represents an expenditure of approximately $1,000,000. The capacity is over 1,500. A policy of five acts of vaudeville and a feature photoplay will be the rule. Two performances daily, one in the afternoon, and the other in the evening. The building is three stories high. The new house is named after its owner, John Stahl, who controls all of the picture theatres in the town, four in number.

Tegu Boys Build for Better Shows

TO GIVE St. Johnsbury, Vermont, better shows, work has began for the new theatre at 26 Eastern Ave., which is erected for John & Andrew Tegu.

The building will be 127 by 56 feet for the auditorium and 58 by 16 feet for lobby, with a large stage and dressing rooms for plays and vaudeville.

The structure is of brick and it will seat 1,000; it will cost pretty close to $100,000 and be ready for business the first part of next July.

Haynes & Mason of Fitchburg, Mass., are the architects, and Joseph Bergeron & Co. of Keene, N. H., are the general contractors.

Making It Better for El Dorado Patrons

DOWN in El Dorado, Arkansas, there's an exhibitor who knows what brings, and holds, patronage. Equipment of the best!

So he has closed his Rialto Theatre and is going to remodel, put two Powerlite Reflector arcs in and give them a Minusa de luxe special screen to do their stuff on.

Six hundred new steel, upholstered chairs will give comfortable seating, and a large, new pipe organ will provide harmony of the best sort for the patron. New lobby display frames to attract; new Fulco film cabinets for safety in the projection room; that shows you that the theatre is going to reopen with the best there is.

And L. B. Clark, the owner and manager of the Rialto, wanting the best in co-operation, got it from the Southern Theatre Equipment Co., of Dallas, Texas.

A Correction

In the issue of Moving Picture World for November 26th in "As They Came Out" the Albemarle Theatre, Brooklyn, New York, was named as a Fox theatre. This is not the fact, as the house, we are informed, has not been under that control for the past four years. It is under the control of the F. R. A. Operating Corporation, of which Mr. A. H. Schwartz is General Manager. Mr. W. H. Applegate, Manager of the Albemarle, kindly brought the facts to my attention. Excuse.

Chicago's Ambassador Gets 'Em Through Strong Visual Appeal

W P. McCARTHY had a vision—of a theatre right at the Oak Park section of Chicago with class and equipment that couldn't be touched by anything within miles.

Mr. McCarthy had been a showman, and even boasts about it—from the days when he was a "candy butcher." He knows the game; he appreciates—few men as well—how much the equipment and the visual appeal of a theatre contributes to the building up of patronage.

Visions don't always come to be facts. But this one did. And now Mr. McCarthy, president of the M. & H. Theatres Corporation, has seen his vision snap into reality with the completion and opening of Chicago's Ambassador Theatre—a house that is planned for the patron, a house in which all patrons (and there are 2,500 seats ready for them and being filled by them) get comfort, ease, clear vision of the screen, good projection, and courtesy from the attendants.

Imposing as the new theatre looks from the exterior view-point, the ravishing wonders of the architecture of the early Italian renaissance, after which the Ambassador auditorium is modelled, has a delightful aesthetic appeal for even the most blase theatrical fan. Grey, gold, rose and old ivory predominate in the auditorium color scheme, producing a harmonious effect with never a suggestion of gaudiness, thus making the patron feel perfectly at home in this palace beautiful of the drama.

The policy of clean, wholesome enjoyment, both from the screen and stage aspect, which the new palatial million-dollar Ambassador theatre at Division street and Mansfield Ave. has established since its premiere performance Oct. 20, has already earned for it a large and enthusiastic patronage.

Current photodrama classics of the new Ambassador theatre are given musical interpretation by a large symphony orchestra under the direction of Nathan Leavitt, a musician of note, who received his musical training in the Imperial Academy of Music at Petrograd, Russia and was formerly first-violinist of the Chicago Opera. The organist is Haines Jr.

Better Projection Pays

Not Always to Blame

FROM Chicago comes this very interesting letter:

Dear Brother Richardson: I have intended writing you for quite a while. At last here it is, BUT please understand that if you publish this letter with my name attached, I will face trouble in at least two directions. I therefore ask that you use discretion. I've no objections to the publication of the letter, but under the circumstances, please permit yourself to forget that I have any name at all.

During the past you have, on several occasions, told some rather cold, and very hard truths about conditions in the projection field of this, my "home town." What you have said was decidedly unpalatable to us here, as you without a doubt very well knew it would be. Personally I believe that in the long run you might have accomplished just as good, or even better results had you not used the sledge hammer quite so heavily, but no man who is honest and who knows the facts in the case would attempt to deny the truth of what you said. It also is a fact that your honesty of purpose was shown and proven because in every instance you named the place and thing you criticised or praised.

Did Some Good

That your plain speaking did a very considerable amount of good I personally know, though few of the men would then admit it. Union labor is very powerful here, and that is not altogether an unmixed blessing. I say that who have been a member of local union 110 for many years, and who hold my unionism as equal to any man jack of them all, without exception. The trouble with great power is that it makes either men or organizations too ready to just butt through by sheer weight and force, not always paying as much attention to right and justice as would be the case were less power on tap.

Another thing—and this is where you got our combined nannies for fair—we of 110 are not accustomed to being openly and adversely criticised. We resent it. To us it is a crime that any one would have the GALL to get up and land as squarely on your neck as you did—darn you! It was, I think, more the fact that you dared say what you did, that hurt, than it was WHAT you said.

Not Always to Blame

And now, "Rich." I'm going to set forth a condition which will tend to prove that, while we of Chicago may be no angels, tin or otherwise, still we are not always to blame for the punk work we get blamed for. We have troubles of our own. I personally have them in plenty.

I am faced with a queer situation. My hours are good. The job I have is one of the best, as far as pay goes. I am well treated by the theatre manager, who is a pleasant enough sort of chap—except in one vital particular, which is that he is the original one who invented the term tightwad. I think the bird saves what he picks from between his teeth at breakfast and has it for luncheon.

He has the purchasing of all supplies for the theatre, or at least nothing can be had until he has O Kayed the requisition, and when it comes to persuading him to replace some worn projector mechanism part—well, it just simply can't be done, unless the aforesaid part be worn completely and netirely out, and is finished and done. It is even said that he kicks about employees drinking too often, because it wears the water faucets out unnecessarily. I won't swear to that, though I've sworn at him and his ways until my cuss words are all worn down to a thin fringe.

House Good

The house is a good one. The film service is excellent. The admission is relatively high. He demands good projection. In fact he wants the best there is, and he is quite a critic too, but it is a literal BATTLE to get even the most necessary things from him. My partner is a good man, and we both try to deliver the goods, but just the same we woudl dread to have you witness the performance sometimes—due wholly and entirely to our lack of proper things to do with.

Now, Rich, my reason for this letter is two fold. First, I want to say to you that you have many warm friends in this city. Some of your friends—men whom I know to be your very real friends—have cussed you long, loud and deep, at the same time admitting, when pinned down, that there were just grounds for your roasts of Chicago. I want to ask you to adopt different tactics, with regard to Chicago at least. Your sledge-hammer method may, and does bust off some of the corners, but at the same time it really does, I think, more harm than good, because of the fact that it makes men you could, in the long run, do a lot with through other methods, so d——d mad that they just won't listen to reason, or have anything whatsoever to do with the man who spanked them—knowing full well that the spanking was deserved, mind you.

Sugar Vs. Vinegar

I ask you to try speaking kindly of our fair city and getting on friendly terms with all of us, which I am sure you can do.

The second reason for this letter is to ask you what is a man to do under the conditions I have described? I could quit—sure, but some one must hold the position, and, aside from the idotic penuriousness of the manager, the job is a mighty comfortable one. Would you consider the projectionist to blame if you found a poor show—unk projection—and knew it was due to the conditions I "enjoy" here?

Managers Must Be "Sold"

No! It is not the fault of the projectionist, brother, BUT your inquiry brings up the thing which I have held to be the one great BIG job of the projectionist. Possibly it is a thing which would be impossible of accomplishment in this case—possibly it would not. I don't know! I would be much interested in knowing exactly how you have tackled the problem of this case of MANAGERIAL INCOMPETENCY. Also I don't know how susceptible this man may or may not be to argument. Were I in your place, if a new part were needed, I would make it my business to talk to the man, in a friendly way, explaining to him that the lack of such part renewal would operate to the injury of the show, or possibly sooner or later cause its entire stoppage; that in any event any injury to the beauty of the screen image must inevitably, in the end, react upon the box office and cause loss, I would stress the fact that whereas the renewal part would cost just a few dollars, the loss at the box office may extend over many days, and run into possibly a dozen times the cost of the part. This would accomplish nothing, probably, until it had been carried on faithfully and diplomatically for quite some time.

I have not the space to expand in explanation of all the details of this phase of matters, but the really BIG job of many projectionists is by persistent, continuous, intelligently directed effort, to sell the proposition to the exhibitor or manager that GOOD PROJECTION PAYS, and that HIGH GRADE PROJECTION IS AN UTTER IMPOSSIBILTY UNLESS THE PROJECTION EQUIPMENT BE ITSELF HIGH GRADE, AND KEPT IN FIRST CLASS CONDITION.

Always Friendly

As to being friendly with Chicago, why, Dear Boy, I have NEVER WANTED TO BE ANYTHING ELSE. Do you suppose I criticised Local Union 110, and some of its members, because I wanted to? I certainly did NOT. To suppose that would be to presume that I enjoy making powerful enemies, which I don't. On the occasions you refer to I saw things which common honesty and respect for the profession compelled me to do what I did. I regretted the necessity far more than you could possibly resent the publication.

A year or so ago I wrote Tom Malloy a friendly letter. I even made an offer which would have inconvenienced me a great deal. I received just exactly no reply at all. I wrote again. Still no answer. I then wrote a letter which he did reply to; courteously enough, in a way, but nevertheless to the effect that conditions in Chicago wree no one's business but Chicago's; also if Local 110 ever thought it could benefit by anything I could offer, I would doubtless be notified.

In other words I had held out the olive branch, and its leaves quickly were withered by the hot wind of scorn Brother Malloy breathed upon it.

Oh well, I managed to live through it; also I believe I, being for the moment provoked, answered somewhat sharply, for which I was afterward regretful, because of what use to dignify such foolishness by notice. Had Malloy replied to my first letter, informing me that it had been received and tabled, that would have been entirely allright, but when even Local 110, or one of its officials, undertakes to ignore Richardson—well, I will undertake the contract of illustrating to her that it is one of those things that just can't be done.

Malloy is, I believe, an able executive. Local 110 is a large, powerful organization, but there is this difference: Brother Malloy is a big man in projection affairs—in Chicago. Local 110 is a power—in Chicago. That is well. So long as that power is used wisely and well, I am mighty glad it exists. However, and I make this statement, NOT to boast, but just as a plain, every-day statement of FACT: Richardson has a very real power or influence, in many, many cities and thousands of towns. That influence extends literally all over the earth, where the English language is spoken and motion pictures are projected. That is just plain FACT, and you can't laugh it off, either.

When Local 110 gets ready to be friends, if ever she does, I shall be glad, BUT never in this wide world will I relinquish the right to make just, deserved criticism, though you are perhaps right to the extent that sledge-hammer criticism has served its purpose, and may now better be discarded.

I. P. A. Has A Big Blowout

THE International Projection Association feeds itself and has a dance in Hotel de Swell.

Last Saturday, at an hour when sensible folk crawl up on the roost and go bye bye to Slumberland, the Editor and his daughter, responding to an invitation from the International Projection Association, arrived at the Hotel Astor, to be greeted by a chorus of "Hello 'Rich'" emanating from something like two hundred and fifty fair men and brave women there assembled.

The occasion was the eighth annual affair held by the organization, of which Alex Polin is, was and probably always will be President—also President Polin is Business Agent of Local Union 306, I.A.T.S.E. & M.P. M.O., Motion Picture Projectionists of New York City—by no means a piker's job in itself.

The doings consisted of sociability, a dinner, banquet or whatever you wish to call it, with dancing afterward, the said "afterward" lasting until the roosters, if there were any near Times Square, would be hunting that early worm who would not have been eaten had he, or she had sense enough to have remained in bed until a decent hour.

The affair was a distinct success. It was one of the most enjoyable of the many projectionist dinners I have ever attended in New York City. Everybody was sociable, and happy too if appearances may be trusted, which was, I think—those planning dinners this winter please take note—mainly because the coffee served was not too strong. Plenty of it, but mild. A damned good idea; stick to it.

At the guest table were: Alex Polin and wife, Will C. Smith, who acted as Toastmaster (There was no speaking at all, which was wise. Trying to speak at one of those affairs is like attempting to play a harp in a good, lively boiler shop); William Canavan and Harry Sherman, respectively International President and Assistant International President of the I.A.T.S.E. and M.P.M.O. of the United States and Canada. F. H. Richardson and Daughter. "Mike" Campbell, Supervisor of Projection for Marcus Loew, and his Wife. Robert Greene, of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity of the City of New York, whose hard and thankless task is to examine applicants for license to project motion pictures, and refuse about ninety five percent of the almost hundred percent of incompetents who apply, passing only those who at least know a little something about the business of projection, aside from how to thread a projector and strike an arc. William Rabell, President Independent Movie Supply Company, Jack Hanley, Chief Projectionist Keith Circuit. John Loughrin, Chief Clerk Department Water Supply, Gas and Electricity. Joe Hornstein, President and General Manager Howell Cine Equipment Company, and "Billy" Glick of the same concern, Edward Byrne, Chief Examiner Local Union 306, New York City Motion Picture Projectionists, whose job is to keep the union politicians pacified, and at the same time not admit too much too-punk material to the union—a darned hard job, if you ask me.

During the evening Toastmaster Smith presented to Alex Polin a beautiful platinum watch and chain, which friend Polin, I observed, did NOT refuse. It was a really splendid tribute of friendship.

After dinner Mrs. Harry Levine raised her lovely voice in song, and for once the assembled multitude grew silent. Mrs. Louis Weinberger also rendered a beautiful vocal selection.

Among the two hundred and forty-six present I made note of the following: The Misses Lillian, Irving and Redilla Polin, charming daughters of President Polin. Mr. A. Horowitz, Recording Secretary L. U. 306 and his wife. Mr. Jack Wolheim, Executive Board L. U. 306, and his wife. Mr. Louis Weinberger, Projectionist Embassy Theatre and his wife. Jack Tillman and Harry Tillman, Projectionists, Colony Theatre and their wives. Max Feinberg, Treasurer L. U. 306, and his wife. James Le Fante, Brooklyn Business Agent L. U. 306. Dave Engel, Financial Secretary L. U. 306, and his wife. Herbert Griffin, General Sales Agent, P. M. MacGuire, General Advertising Manager and Joseph Abrams, Equipment Installer of the Nicholas Power Company. David Garden, Projectionist Astor Theatre, and his wife. Joe Kelban, Projectionist Embassy Theatre, and his wife. Morris Bernard, Chief Projectionist DeForest Phono Films, and his wife. Wm. Guth and wife. J. Vandallie and wife. Simon Terr and wife. Otto Kafka, President American Projection Society, and Mrs. Kafka. "Jimmie" Daisey. Tony DeMott, Chief Projectionist Gotham Theatre, and Mrs. De Mott. Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Lynch. Mr. and Mrs. P. Woolenberger. Mr. and Mrs. D. Krup. John Monahan. Sam Slakey and Ben Norton.

Question No. 422—This is a poser. It is proposed by John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut. If you ask me, I think he is after the goats of all of us. See how many of you can make the grade with this one. The East and West coast have many times rather prided themselves that they had the best men. I'm going to watch, and with some interest, which sends in the most correct answers to this one, compared to a rough estimate of the numbers of men in the east and in the west, taking the Mississippi river as a dividing line. Here is Griffith's question:

"Conditions are, a screen area of 18x13½ feet, even distribution of light thereon and level projection. Photometer test shows a total of 4,860 lumens of light on the screen surface as a whole. Test plate of photometer same kind of surface as screen No. 1, table 12, page 260 of Bluebook. Assume floor to be level. Ignore difference between height of eyes of different persons and center of screen.

"What would be the brilliancy of center of screen, in candle power, to the persons walking down a side aisle which runs parallel to the center line of the screen, and is forty feet from it, as the following angles to the center of the screen: 20, 30, 40, 50, 60 and 70 degrees, provided a 27 screen surface be used for the experiment?"

For your information I will say that a No. 27 surface is an Idealite, Grade 2, screen, the data concerning which may be had from tables 12 and 14, pages 260 and 263 of the Bluebook.

I shall certainly expect Brother Griffith to present his own answer to this question, and it is tough enough that I shall present no other questions this week, except one, Viz:

Question No. 423—What is a "lumen." What is the meaning of the term? What does it represent?

I challenge members of the New York City, Washington and Pittsburgh chapters of the American Projection Society to present correct answers to Brother Griffith's question—a friendly challenge, of course.

Question No. 397—Of what does every electric circuit consist, insofar as concerns electrical action?

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Rodney S. Clark, Lincoln, Maine; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; Allan R. Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana; Chas. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, answered correctly. By the way, where is that old stand-by Al. Fell, Collingswood, N. J.?

Brother Doe, I think, best sets the matter forth for publication. He says

An electric circuit, viewed electrically, consists of a positive and a negative electric energy, though I am not certain this is exactly correct. Perhaps it might be more nearly correct to say it consists of a positive energy under tension, or pressure, seekng to reduce its tension or pressure by reaching a negative conductor which will convey it back to the power source.

Viewed electrically and mechanically, an electric circuit consists of (a) a source of electric power, which may be a generator or an electrical storage source. (b) A means by or through which positive electrical energy may reach the negative side. The "circuit" may be long and complicated, or may be merely a few inches in length, reaching from one pole of the power source to the other.

Put in still another way, an electric circuit consists of an electric power source, which always has a positive and a negative side, and a conductor or conductors by means of which a controlled amount of electric energy may pass from positive to negative.

I would like you to give me your comments on this reply. It seems to me that Brother Doe has put the matter just about as it is. What do you think? Thoreau and Clark also put it very well, thus:

An electric circuit consists of a positive and a negative, an energy producer—generator, alternator or battery — conductors, usually copper wires, and resistance in the form of lamps, motors, heaters and electrical friction in the circuit itself.

Question No. 398—Describe a 2-wire system and give the points of difference between it and a 3-wire system.

All those named, plus George Cronin, New York City, and M. J. Mackenzie, St. Louis, Missouri, answered this one acceptably. Hanover says:

Every electric circuit, with the single exception of the series arc system, consists of two electrical conductors, namely a positive and a negative, insofar as has to do with electrical action. Were a single wire only one foot long attached, through an incandescent lamp, from positive to negative of a D. C. generator, this would, in effect, still be true, because up to the lamp the wire would be positive and beyond the lamp it would be negative. It would also be true were the power source an alternator, but I have named a D. C. machine because put that way it is the more easily understood.

A circuit may appear to have more than two wires, as with 3-wire, the single, two and three phase, four-wire two-phase and six-wire three-phase circuits, but considered from the viewpoint of electrical action, these extra wires merely serve to form extra additional complete circuits.

Brother Bennewitz also, replied in essentially the same form, and largely in almost exactly the same words.

Question No. 399—Upon what basic principle does the 3-wire system operate?

Every one came through, but Bennewitz, Thoreau and Clark have done exceptionally well. Bennewitz says:

The basic principle upon which the 3-wire system operates is that if two electrical energy delivery devices which have the same characteristics and E. M. F., be electrically so connected that they are, in effect, one device —the positive of one device connected to the negative of the other device—and a conductor (neutral) be connected to this latter connection, then the voltage across the neutral and either the conductor connected to the positive or negative of the combination not already connected to the neutral, would be half that as measured across the two outer conductors, which latter are the true positive and the true negative of the combination.

Not so bad, brother—not so bad.

Thoreau and Clark put it this way:

The basic principle of the 3-wire system is that it employs two generators joined in series, with an electrical conductor, called the "neutral," connected where the two machines are connected to each other, so that the potential difference as between the outer terminals of the machines so connected will be double that of either machine taken separately.

A drawing is also supplied, but that is, I think, unnecessary.

Gengenbeck puts it thus:

The basic principle upon which the 3-wire system operates is that the higher the voltage employed, the less the amperage necessary to supply a given horsepower, hence with high voltage more power may be conveyed on wires of given size. The 3-wire system, which is in effect two electric generators coupled in series, with a wire from each outer terminal and a single wire from the central connection where the positive of one machine is joined to the negative of the other, called the neutral, so that the voltage of one (either) machine may be used, or the combined series voltage (double that of either machine separately) may be used. The effect is that of two complete 2-wire systems, with one of the wires entirely eliminated, hence construction and maintenance cost reduced to that extent.

By golly, I guess, after all, friend Gengenbeck wins the sapphire studded crown (try and get it!) on this one. Did not realize how really good his answer was until I wrote it out. Budge and Clark did very well also.

Question No. 400—Explain what the neutral wire is, and how it operates.

Budge says:

In a 3-wire system when we wish to use the voltage and current of and from a separate power producing unit of the system, the neutral wire must form one side of the circuit. The neutral wire may be either the positive or negative of the circuit we shall use, since it is connected to the positive of one of the power units of the system, and to the negative of the other.

Bennewitz answers thus:

The neutral is what might be called the "balance wire" of the system. When the load on either side of the system is equally balanced, the neutral carries no current at all between the generators and the first power using unit, and the system is, in effect, a straight 220 volt (usually the voltage of the system is 110 and 220 volts, though it may be more or less, and sometimes is 220 and 440) system.

Perfect balance seldom, if ever, obtains in practice, however, and when the balance is not perfect, the neutral wire carries current equal to the amperage difference in the load on the two sides. Hence the real purpose of the third wire (neutral) is to protect the electrical energy consuming devices designed for half the voltage of the outside wires from having excessive current forced through them by the higher voltage of the outside conductors, thus enabling us to connect lamps, motors, etc., which operate at half the voltage of the true positive and negative of the system to either "side" of the system, with assurance that they will operate successfully, and without harm on what amounts to 220 volts pressure.

Good enough, Brother Bennewitz. I would add a remark of Doe to this. He set forth in effect, what you have said, and then added:

If the lamps, motors or other power consuming devices were connected in series without the protection of the third, neutral wire, then if some of them were shut off on one side and not on the other, those remaining on the low load side would have the amperage used by those cut off forced through them, in addition to their own normal amperage, and would, if the overload be too great, be quickly burned out.

Bennewitz's answer, together with Doe's addition, seems to be about as complete as we could wish, so that's that. Thoreau and Clark also did well, but used a diagram to illustrate, and while their answer is good, still it is no more enlightening that Bennewitz's reply, with which no cut is required.

Question No. 401—Is it practical to operate a projection arc lamp from a series arc lighting system?

Hanover says:

No, and the projectionist foolish enough to try it would probably put entire system temporarily out of business, besides running a large juicy chance of getting himself severely shocked or possibly killed, for the series arc system carries about fifty volts for each lamp connected to it. In effect one wire leaves the generator positive terminal, makes a loop, long or short, and connects to the negative of the generator. Into this single wire all lamps are connected, in series with each other of course, and whatever amperage one lamp carries is pumped through them all, one after the other, by the generator, which naturally must supply additional voltage for each lamp so connected sufficient to overcome the resistance of that lamp.

If we have twenty lamps, each requiring fifty volts to overcome its resistnace, and put say 25 amperes through it, then there must be a total of twenty amperes of current, and 1,000 volts for the twenty lamps, since 50 x 20 = 1,000, and when the attempt is made to connect a projection lamp into that particular combination—well, I think you can see the probable results, without wasting time and space in speculation.

The answer is "It can't be done, to which I would add, out of charity for my brother projectionists, don't try it until you are all ready to take up (A) Harp playing, or (B) entreing upon an existence which is said to be very tropical, and your entrance therein would probably be quite reasonably warm—1,000 volts? : c ' ? ! , ending in * * * galore!

"Road to Yesterday" Is Road to Success

By William J. Reilly

CECIL B. DE MILLE has roped and thrown a bucking, plunging thought. In the celluloid coils of "The Road to Yesterday" he has firmly caught the idea of RE-INCARNATION. It is one thing to corral an idea with WORDS. Quite another to lasso it with PICTURES.

There is hardly a man or woman in the world who has not, at one time or another, held the thought that in the dim yesterday he or she lived and loved under ANOTHER GARB and under ANOTHER PERSONALITY.

For that reason ALONE "The Road to Yesterday" will make picture audiences talk. It has every quality of GREATNESS:—the real de Mille directing, story, acting, action, a big PUNCH, heart interest, a PORTABLE, TALKABLE idea.

Trains have been wrecked in feature pictures before. In "The Road to Yesterday" a freight train TELESCOPES the Pullman train carrying a highly DRAMATIC passenger cargo. The audience last Friday at the Embassy midnight showing, most of whom had come to the picture from other theatres, SHOUTED its approval when the freight engine in a HEAD-ON shot, wormed in THROUGH the sleeping car. WRECKAGE that BUILDS.

The picture takes a group of people caught in the grip of a powerful set of MODERN circumstances; develops the action to a climax on the terrific train wreck; and then cuts back to the YESTERDAY when the same characters mixed ale and swordplay, lordly arrogance and gypsy love.

Beulah Marie Dix who wrote the ORIGINAL play with E. G. Sutherland collaborated with Jeanie Macpherson on the film adaptation. The story is IDEAL screen material. We understand that it was long de Mille's AIM to make "The Road to Yesterday" into a picture but that litigation tied up the screen rights. HAPPILY, the story was available in time for his FIRST personally supervised production for Producers Distributing Corporation. You will like Joseph Schildkraut, Jetta Goudal, William Boyd, Vera Reynolds, Casson Ferguson and Trixie Friganza. So will your audiences. Even their feet ACT.

And it is "The Road to Success" for P. D. C. and the exhibitors who have allied themselves with this AGGRESSIVE organization.

EXHIBITORS DAILY REVIEW
Tuesday, November 10, 1925
WILLARD C. HOWE, Editor

De Mille and the Box Office

HOWEVER doubtful we may be as to the selling power of brands and trade-marks applied to pictures, there can't be any doubting the pulling power, with the whole public, of the name of a man who is everywhere identified, in the popular consciousness, with most unusual pictures. Tie to any series such a name; say to the public, "these pictures were made by and supervised by this man who, as you know, is a master in the making of screen entertainment" and you have a selling leverage of tremendous magnitude.

In all the history of motion pictures there have been few such names to conjure with. Of the few, Cecil B. De Mille ranks top.

This is important to all exhibitors. Because De Mille is getting into his stride. He has a happy lineup. He is in position to exercise his genius without hindrance. He is in position to make pictures that can carry his name without apology.

Under such circumstances, the De Mille name should be capitalized to the limit by every theatre playing the product. Taken alone, it will prove the most effective sort of exploitation. The public will respond, because the public associates De Mille with pictures it enjoys.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS
By William A. Johnston
November 21, 1925

Speaking Editorially

WE sat in the crowded Embassy Theatre the other night and saw Cecil B. De Mille's first independently produced picture, "The Road to Yesterday." The hour was very late—in fact it was midnight when proceedings began and quite a little distance into the morning when they ended. But the picture held—every foot of the way.

All the De Mille magic was present. For thrills, there is a sensational train wreck,—quite the best the screen has ever seen. There is a love story, which gains through transition back to "Yesterday" and again back to modern times; it is well-acted, elaborately staged; compelling; highly interesting. Everything in this picture has been done well. It hits the mark—artistically, dramatically, and box-office wise. A fine picture, a great picture, a credit to De Mille and a golden thing for P. D. C. and the exhibitors who will play it.

SPEAKS-

MOTION PICTURES

De Mille the Tremendous

CECIL DE MILLE announces on the screen in the introduction to "The Road to Yesterday" that the production is his first as an independent producer. Evidently Mr. de Mille has not joined the ranks of those who like to consider independence as a new name for applesauce. He's proud of his independence and the independent movement is justly proud of Cecil de Mille.

"The Road to Yesterday" is in many respects the greatest box office picture ever produced. It has size, importance, power and thrill—absolutely smashing thrill. It is lavishly made and one tried and true thing is done so much bigger and so much better than ever it was done before, that it proves the greatness of the man who did it. This is a railroad wreck that brings the spectators to their feet and sets them applauding in sheer astonishment and admiration.

An engine telescopes a coach and for all practical purposes the audience is in that coach.

Joseph Schildkraut mars a brilliant performance by an atmosphere of bursting conceit, and, in contrast, William Boyd just walks away with the honors.

Vera Reynolds rises to the highest peaks of excellence as the story unfolds and in the role will climb higher in public estimation.

The cast is large and well chosen and in the transposition from the modern to the feudal periods the characters, in new garb grow in the power of their performances.

It is our opinion that the religious dashes in the picture, while dangerous material, will not serve to lessen its popularity.

Taken in its entirety it is an amazing production and Producers Distributing Corporation may be assured that they have a tremendous attraction to offer their customers.

De MILLE

By DANNY

His first big one for Producers Distributing: "The Road to Yesterday," magnificent, typically a DeMille in production a bit too long, but showing the finest, most sensational train wreck ever put on the screen, and photography that is little short of amazing. Plus a splendid cast.

This, in a nutshell, is the first reaction of "The Road to Yesterday." DeMille has turned out a picture which for sheer lavishness easily ranks way on top. Every setting is gorgeous; every opportunity to "dress" the picture is taken advantage of, and DeMille has regarded box office to a material extent in his first for his new alignment.

The train wreck is a triumph. When the big locomotive comes crashing through the screen you feel it is going to plough right down into the audience. On the front, crushed among timber and steel, are two of the cast, and the remainder fight their way through the wreck to safety. But it is a great thrill; a tremendous thrill.

When the story gets into the costume period it slows a bit; there is too much of it; but it finishes to a whirlwind clinch. William Boyd easily is the outstanding member of the cast, although excellent performances are given by practically all of them; Jetta Goudal, Vera Reynolds, and Joseph Schildkraut. But Boyd stands out as a he-man; not a typical movie star, and the women will tumble for him. That's sure. From a production viewpoint DeMille shows all of his former tricks. Each set is beautiful; the costumes are little short of gorgeous, and the photography is marvelous.

"Immense", Says Exhibitor

"After many protests 'Our Sweetheart' has abandoned the laces and velvets and come back to us as our Mary of old (but still young) and I want to say Mary is immense. 'Annie Rooney' drew great, and I had the biggest matinees in years. When Mary comes back in the good graces of Young America you can bet she's IN again! Thanks, Mary, and more power to you, and please be 'America's Sweetheart' some more." —Joe Hewitt, the Strand Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

THIS MAN MAKES BIG HITS!

Great news.

More Hobart Henley hits.

He's signed a new contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

When you talk about directors who are wise to what it's all about, mention Hobart Henley.

"Sinners in Silk" and "So This is Marriage" are Henley's idea of how to bring 'em in.

"A Slave of Fashion" and "Exchange of Wives" are two of his current money-getters.

And watch for "His Secretary," Henley's latest production, starring Norma Shearer with Lew Cody.

Behind Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's great product are great directors.

They know show business.

There's less fancy theory and more practical theatre sense on the M-G-M studio lot than in all Hollywood put together.

It's the kind that keeps the list of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exhibitors growing.

Gird Up Your Loins for 1926!

THE business of selling motion pictures becomes more highly INTENSIFIED every year. The picture market has been a particularly STRONG one this season. GOOD pictures, BIG pictures have crowded on each others' heels from every quarter.

The big picture, big in ENTERTAINMENT value and BOX OFFICE power, has become the rule instead of the exception.

Competition grows KEENER day by day. The Twentieth Century and the Broadway Limited have become COMMUTING trains. Executives are moving out on ALL film fronts, knowing that the production-sales battle is on and growing fiercer all the time.

Look over the drives that today are SUPPORTING Picture Product. They are highly ORGANIZED, highly SPECIALIZED. They are loaded with dynamite for the EXHIBITOR and for his PATRONAGE.

Any company which is not putting on production pressure and sales pressure right NOW will be out of luck in 1926. Any leaning toward the WEAK-SISTERHOOD will be fatal.

1926 is going to be a film WHIRLWIND. The unusually good pictures of 1925 have made millions of NEW friends for the screen. The already myriad movie customer is MULTIPLYING.

There will be MUCH more cash in the theatre till in 1926 than ever before.

EVERY producing organization in the business has a bigger RESPONSIBILITY to trade, to public, and to itself in 1926 than it has yet faced. On every side production, advertising, exploitation and publicity executives are girding up their loins for the fight. BATTLE is in the air.

And, MR. EXHIBITOR, you will be, in 1926 a more vital POINT OF CONTACT than you ever were in your life. Get ready to be SOLD and sold HARD. Get ready to SELL and sell HARD.

Keep POSTED. Gird up YOUR loins and your box-office. No seasonal TWILIGHT for your box-office in 1926. You are in for a FULL picture year and a BIG one.

Something That Is Constructive—By Bill Reilly

Make Your Bow, F & R

WE have just read a fine tribute to motion picture exhibitors of the MODERN school, in GENERAL, and to Finkelstein & Ruben, in PARTICULAR. The tribute comes from Walter B. Brown, publisher of the Tribune-Herald of Chisholm, Minn., one of the smaller communities in which Finkelstein & Ruben operate.

We are lifting Mr. Brown's article BODILY from "F & R Family Close-Ups," the monthly house organ edited by Ben Ferriss, the General Advertising Director of the F & R interests.

We cannot agree with what Mr. Brown says about the SMALL-TOWN theatre under individual management.

His article, which follows, is indicative of the modern trend in picture exhibition country-wide. It shows also the reaction of the PRESENT DAY newspaper publisher toward the motion picture, a most RADICAL change from the newspaper attitude of several years ago.

When your WORK brings forth comment like the following from a newspaper publisher you are doing something CONSTRUCTIVE with your theatre investment in your community. Here is Mr. Brown's story:-

"Among the many rank outsiders who, like the rest of the horde of critics, are a source of agony to the average motion picture house manager, the small-town newspaper editor is no exception. But the newspaperman, while blest with no more faculties of perception than is the average citizen is more cognizant of the general business trials and tribulations of the theatre and hence is more fair, or more charitable if you choose, in his criticism.

"Taking a slant at a film from the angle of a theatre patron, the newspaper man finds many films far more in meaning and magnitude than the language of the press agent has been able to convey to the public. And on the other hand, films are found, only too frequently, that are sufficient excuse for drawing and quartering the press agent who paraded their virtues in such flowery language as to arouse advance interest in the hearts of the unsuspecting public.

"It is the average theatregoer, who is disappointed in the film he has just viewed, who condemns the theatre management for such presentations. The newspaper man knows criticism of films is misplaced when showered upon the theatre manager. It is the producer's neck that needs wringing, not the theatre manager, for the latter combs the market for the best he can get and like he who heads any line of business must take a little bitter with the sweet.

"The small-town motion picture theatres under individual management, have been, since the picture industry was first launched, a sort of come-if-you-please-and-take-what you-can-get proposition. Under such indifference the public has naturally responded with anything but hearty support. The theatre proprietor has seen his profits shrink to such proportions that his greatest ambition in his business was to first make a living, and those who should be his patrons ambled off to the larger cities to see the pictures worthwhile that perhaps they would never be able to view in their home town.

"With the advent of the chain theatre idea, and I am speaking principally of the Finkelstein & Ruben Theatrical Enterprises, the theatre question in the smaller towns has radically changed from an agony to just what the theatre should be—a recreation, an amusement, a pleasure.

"Chisholm labored long under the yoke of indifferent theatre management but today enjoys, through Finkelstein & Ruben theatres, a presentation of fresh, new, up-to-date films and in such surroundings and under such pleasant conditions that the big city theatre no longer carries attractions, which were once sought after by the country cousin.

"Hampered as they are with small-town practices, requests for benefit showings, percentage attraction presentations, donations, free passes, and above all the well meaning but inconsiderate benevolent organization which invariably insists on showing some cheap films of no material interest whatsoever in their own hall on the same night that the theatre presents one of its big, widely advertised attractions, the country newspaper editor just wonders why and how the F & R theatre management keeps on smiling and extending such exceptional courtesy.

"Patrons of city theatres are very fortunate indeed, surrounded as they are with wonderful and lavishly equipped theatres, and the pick of the latest attractions in filmdom but where the Finkelstein & Ruben attractions are located, no matter how small the town, there can be found just as much courtesy, just as much comfort and the equal in class and quality of films and up-to-dateness of presentations."

Make your bow, F & R.

IN PRESENTATION and PROLOGUE SERVICE

TEN months ago, March, 1925, MOVING PICTURE WORLD was FIRST to give its readers a regular weekly department service on PRESENTATIONS and PROLOGUES.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD was FIRST among the motion picture trade papers to recognize the importance of such a service to its readers and FIRST TO GIVE IT TO THEM.

Colby Harriman, who conducts this department, makes it more than a MARKET PLACE for the exchange of presentation and prologue ideas, including musical scores. In addition, he supplies drawings, sketches, lists materials, and tells in detail just how to secure a certain effect or just how to make a certain stage set. And he tells how much it should cost and how it can be done economically.

This is MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S conception of PRACTICAL service.

IT IS A SERVICE OF PRIME IMPORTANCE TO ALL FIRST RUN THEATRES, and one that is attracting more and more attention from the ambitious smaller theatres.

It takes its place with the many other practical, constructive, exclusive features which make MOVING PICTURE WORLD FIRST IN PROVEN READER PREFERENCE.

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

"Young Mr. Bowen"

IF every debutante timidly stepping into our ice cream freezer society had one-tenth of the charm of Fernande Faulkner in W. B. Maxwell's novel "Young Mr. Bowen" which has been running for the past few weeks in Liberty, matrimonially speaking, 1925-26 would be a banner year.

This story will make a whacking good picture because the people are real—no sickening cream puff heroine, grabbing everything in sight for herself, no Arrow Collar lad feathering his nest with broken pieces of a woman's heart. Quite the contrary.

Young Mr. Bowen, with a tremendously earnest flair for literature, comes up to London and gets himself a job on the Mayfair Gazette. Cyril Faulkner, the editor, takes a liking to this decent, handsome, intelligent boy and asks him to come home to dinner and "meet my old woman."

Eric Bowen is dumbstruck when he sees the beautiful, brilliant and tragic Fernande. Despite the fact that he learns that she is not Cyril's wife; that she is married to a hopeless drunkard from whom Cyril rescued her; that she has had a most unhappy past, Eric falls in love with her and she returns it with a tornado passion that makes most historic romances seem like one-half of one percent beer.

Fernande does everything for Eric—except the thing he wants. He's her one fine reason for continuing to live and she clings to the beauty and purity of her love like a stricken mother to the body of her dead child.

Thanks to Fernande's superior intelligence and positive unselfishness, Eric rises. He becomes the right hand man of John Cornish, owner of the Gazette and many other enterprises. He is constantly thrown with Ruth, Cornish's young and amazingly gifted daughter.

Fernande has refused to see him and although he is overpoweringly in love with her, the hopelessness of it all pushes him nearer and nearer Ruth. One day Cornish tells Eric that Ruth loves him, and he would be glad to see them married, provided he breaks with Fernande. The quiet charm of Ruth has won Eric's heart and he goes to tell Fernande goodby.

He finds her ill, in dingy lodgings, deserted by Cyril who left her for a wealthy woman. When she learns that she is to lose Eric, her great will power and fineness of character momentarily desert her. She throws herself on his mercy and begs him to take her away. Eric realizes that he owes his entire success to her, so breaks with the Cornishes and goes with Fernande.

He has very little money left but decides to invest it in "The Metal Worker," a prosperous magazine for sale at a bargain. He learns, however, that Cyril has been discharged for dishonesty. To save him from jail, Eric gives his last cent to pay off Cyril's indebtedness. Meanwhile Fernande's drunkard husband dies, and Eric, the same night, asks her to marry him.

"Say, it again, Eric. Let me hear it once more.. . . The answer is No, Eric—oh, such a whooping, tremendous No. . . . Why couldn't I have met you earlier? What a wife I would have been to you then! I would have lifted you, lifted, lifted you, my darling. No man could have had a better, truer woman than the woman I was meant to be . . . But it's too late."

Cyril sails for Buenos Aires and Fernande goes with him, leaving this letter: "It's for your sake, my beloved, not for his. Somebody had to be sacrificed and it must be me, not you."

Somehow, as the boat pulls out and Eric leaves for London to marry Ruth, you sort of wish that fortune's favorite hadn't won the race.

"We Must March"

THE epic of America's pioneer days will not be complete until Honore Willsie Morrow's book "We Must March" reaches the screen. "We Must March" is published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company.

It is the saga of Narcissa Whitman who saved the state of Oregon from the British. But for the magnificent courage of this woman, our little newborn republic, weakened by partisan strife and controlled by ignorant backwoodsmen would have been beaten in its unequal battle with Great Britain, with her extraordinarily adroit diplomacy and naval supremacy. Oregon would today be flying the Union Jack and not the Stars and Stripes.

Narcissa with her golden, braided hair and lyric soprano voice was intended at birth for a great opera singer, but she was deflected by fate and a stern father from her natural artistic career to a loveless marriage with the great fighting Christian, Dr. Marcus Whitman, missionary to the Cayuse Indians in Oregon.

From her New York home to her husbands mission Waii-lat-pu, on the Columbia River, Oregon, Narcissa went her hungry, thirsty, weary, uncomplaining road—the first white woman to go west of Fort Hall, the first white woman to give birth to a child in that treacherous Indian country. Discouraged on every side by British agents who claimed no white woman could cross that trail unless raped and scalped by the Indians, Narcissa followed her bitter path.

She washed, ironed, swept, and taught, surrounded by filthy Indian children, covered with scabs, bloody scales, bruises and lice. Her beloved three year old daughter falls into the creek and drowns. One night while her husband is away attending a sick squaw, she is attacked by a naked, evil-smelling Indian, around whose neck are four human fingers strung on a piece of gut. Only God-given strength saves her. Her missionary colleagues jealously lie about her. The great Sir George Simpson, representative of Great Britain and Governor of Rupert's Land, falls in love with her and her heart flares back in return. But her loyalty and affection stay her at her stone-deaf husband's side and this beautiful, nobly formed woman, created to enthrall the distinguished musical world, goes the thorn filled way of the cross.

The British headed by Sir George and the Hudson Bay Company decide that Oregon must become a British Colony. All that stands between them and their desires is this missionary couple. Daniel Webster and President Tyler down at Washington, isolated, uninformed of the true facts, are about to sign over Oregon to the English. To increase the Whitman's distress, they learned that the American Board of Missions has ordered the Waii-lat-pu mission closed—an acknowledged failure.

To win the love of his wife and the State of Oregon for the Union, Marcus decides to strike a last superhuman blow. In the heart of winter, through snow covered impassable trails, Dr. Whitman starts his Odyssey from Columbia River, Oregon to Washington, D. C. After one hundred and five days of frozen riding, raging blizzards, hostile Indians and starvation rations, he reaches St. Louis and then by stage coach to Washington. His interview with Daniel Webster proves hopeless. He speaks unsuccessfully with President Tyler and the Secretary of War, Porter. But Senator Linn of Missouri tells him there is a way to save Oregon: "The administration is carrying on secret negotiations with Great Britain that will continue for another year. If Oregon is to be saved we must do it. Move American citizens out there till they outnumber the British three to one.

In two months' time, Whitman, half dead with malaria, starts back for Oregon with one thousand recruited emigrants, covered wagons, milch cows and farm implements.

This unearthly feat would have ended in failure had it not been for Narcissa. As Marcus' caravan is on its last lap, she learns that at Fort Hall the English will use very inducement to persuade the emigrants to turn south to California; failing, however, they will be massacred by the Indians so that not even one baby will be left to be carried across the Blue Mountains into Oregon. Narcissa's diplomacy averts this. Once more, when all the settlers are about to reach the promised land, she wins a bloodless victory for America by pleading with the wives of the newcomers not to follow one of their leaders, Jesse Applegate, in his mad venture against the Hudson Bay Company which would have caused another war between England and America. Again, she begs Lieutenant Peel, son of the great British statesman, to go back and suggest that his father compromise with President Tyler, accepting the forty-ninth parallel as the northern boundary of these United States. And so he did. And so it is today.

Nor does the curtain fall until Narcissa flings her arms around her husband's neck and in her newly-awakened love whispers: "Marcus—oh my dear, my dear! How shall I show you what I've grown to feel for you?"

PURCHASED FOR THE SCREEN

William Fox has added another John Golden play, "The Holy Terror," to his list of stage productions to be presented next season. The other three Golden plays on the list are "Pigs," "Going Crooked" and "Seventh Heaven.'

"Whispering Wires" and Clyde Fitch's last play "The City" have also been bought by Fox Films.

OF the Screen, BY the Screen, And FOR the Screen

The second of a series of articles on Hrolf Wisby's new Plan of production technique.

By William J. Reilly

TO take up where we left off last week: Milt Gross would say of the Hrolf Wisby Cinema-Regie, "Is diss a system?" It most decidedly is a system. It is a new and completely organized picture production technique worked out on practical lines. Nothing enters the system which is not OF the screen, BY the screen and FOR the screen.

A good many people in this business have heard of Hrolf Wisby and his Plan, to which he has given the formidable title of Cinema-Regie. The Wisby Plan is a pretty stiff jolt of production MEDICINE. It may be hard to take. But is a good medicine.

The royal and state theatres of Europe have fostered, during the past two CENTURIES a science of dramatic representation technically known as the REGIE of production. This dramatic science is to the art of the theatre what the science of medicine is to the art of the physician.

Wisby has brought this artistic science to the screen.

The term "FILM DOCTOR" is a familiar one. Hrolf Wisby is a "film doctor." He differs from the film surgeon as we know the latter, in this fundamental and highly important essential: Wisby is called in BEFORE the picture is made, not AFTER.

It's a long jump from REGISSEUR to DOCTOR. But that's a quick way of looking at the Wisby Plan.

Hrolf Wisby has perfected a technique of picture production along lines of well defined, for their purpose, as any science known today. It is not to be understood from this that it is Wisby's idea to make pictures just as bricks, SAUSAGES, or hair pins are turned out. Quite to the contrary, there is no "standard of production" under the Wisby Plan. A standard of technique is specially adapted for EACH picture and that particular standard will not be used again for any succeeding production. This means that no scene, no sequence, however SUCCESSFUL and effective, will EVER be repeated.

A building which will cost a half million dollars is thoroughly BLUE PRINTED before the steam shovel first starts to bite out the foundation. Wisby's plan charts production values. Exhibitors Ask Affiliation with Hays

By Sumner Smith

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Buffalo and Albany zones, have requested an affiliation with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., of which Will H. Hays is president, and Mr. Hays assures William A. Dillon, exhibitor president making the request, that "there is no doubt that the application will be accepted by the directors at their December meeting." Both the Dillon and the Hays letters are reproduced on these pages.

As soon as the application for affiliation has been formally accepted, Mr. Hays, it is understood, will confer with Mr. Dillon, Jules Michael, chairman of the Buffalo zone; Louis Buettner, chairman of the Albany zone, Charles Hayman and other officials of the exhibitor organization, to "work out plans so that the affiliation may be of the utmost benefit to all branches of the motion picture industry."

The announcement of this proposed affiliation has raised a storm in exhibitor circles. In the absence of National President R. F. Woodhull at the Ohio convention, Business Manager Joseph M. Seider has issued a strong statement, charging that "the basic status of the Independent exhibitor is so remote from that of the producer and the producer-owned theatre that he cannot have a legitimate place in a producer-controlled organization."

These new developments bring about a complicated situation in the industry's politics and policies. Earlier in the week, as described elsewhere in this issue, producers, distributors and exhibitors got together around the table at the Jubilee Banquet in New Haven and exchanged expressions of good will and esteem for each other. Now storm clouds loom again.

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS
STATE OF NEW YORK-BUFFALO ZONE
EXECUTIVE OFFICE, 71 ROOT BUILDING
70 WEST CHIPPEWA STREET
BUFFALO, N. Y.

SENECA 7042 November 25th, 1925.

Mr. Will H.Hays, President,
M.P.Producers & Distributors of Amer., Inc.,
469 Fifth Ave.,
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Hays:-

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State - Buffalo and Albany Zones - are interested as an Organization in promoting all things that are of benefit to the motion picture industry. We have studied from all angles and at great length various propositions submitted at different times, to the end that we might assist in building up an Organization strong enough to promote things that would advance the best interest of all connected with the industry.

We have concluded that this can be accomplished by yet closer cooperation of the Exhibitor Organizations with the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., of which you are the President. Such closer cooperation with your Organization will tend to more satisfactorily adjust all problems that constantly arise affecting all branches of the business.

No more forceful reason for our conclusion can be cited than the successful operation of the Arbitration Boards which have proved to be the means of determining the many disputes between exhibitors and distributors and effecting a saving of millions of dollars to the industry. In this connection we take pride in claiming that a very large part of the success of the system of arbitration in our industry was brought about by the earnest and unselfish efforts of our Exhibitor Organizations.

We have carefully reviewed your communication to the exhibitors of Michigan at their convention in Grand Rapids. To us it is a masterful inspiration for guidance and we commit ourselves to its purposes and will fight for its successes.

We admire your spirit of fairness and have confidence in your sincere endeavors. We believe the Industry has now reached a point where the closest cooperation of the producers, distributors and exhibitors is essential. Accordingly we herewith make formal application to the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., to become affiliated with it, under classification (E) as provided in your Certificate of Incorporation and By-Laws, for purposes common to all those engaged in the motion picture industry, knowing of course that the identity of our Organization as such and its freedom of action as a body representative of exhibitors will not be affected.

Awaiting your reply, we are

Very truly yours,

William A. Dillon

PRESIDENT.
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS
STATE OF NEW YORK
BUFFALO AND ALBANY
ZONES.

WAD:G
3-

The Buffalo-Albany territory embraces about 800 theatres. Dillon's organization is not affiliated with the national exhibitor organization, but many of its individual members are, it is claimed. This renders the situation still more confusing.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York City, put the organization on record as unalterably opposed. He said:

"We have sent telegrams to William A. Dillon, president of the Buffalo and Albany zones, asking him to send a request to Mr. Hays that consideration of their application be postponed by that body for ten days, in order to give the T. O. C. C. sufficient opportunity to confer with the upstate units on the matter.

"A telegram was also sent Mr. Hays, protesting against his acceptance of the upstate proposal and requesting that they withhold action for about ten days. We believe that Mr. Hays' reiterated protestations of real co-operation with exhibitors are sincere and that he will readily accede to our request for a postponment of action."

Seider's statement follows:

"Mr. William A. Dillon, as the president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Buffalo and Albany zones, has applied to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America for affiliation with them under Article 4 of the Constitution of the producers' organization, with which article we have just become familiar.

"The basic status of the Independent exhibitor is so remote from that of the producer and the producr-owned theatre that he cannot have a legitimate place in a producer controlled organization.

"The fact that two organizations are necessary is no reason, however, why they should not work together in harmony and settle the differences of their members by conciliation.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are in favor of co-operation with Mr. Hays and his producer members. It, however, cannot affiliate itself with them. It cannot turn over to them its membership.

"Mr. Hays' response to Mr. Dillon is amazing, especially in view of his statements to our Administrative Committee, which statements he later confirmed in his letter to us.

"If it is the purpose of the producers and distributors who are enrolled in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to cause dissension within our ranks, and to prevent our organizing completely through the setting up of another organization, we pray that they continue to do so, as nothing will awaken the sleeping theatre owner to his danger as will this latest move. The only barrier that the producers have had and now have to complete control in the motion picture industry is the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. With the absorption of theatre owner organization, likewise will the individual theatre owner be absorbed by the very same producers.

"Mr. Dillon seems to be well acquainted with the producers organization's constitution. He knows also the contents of the Certificate of Incorporation of that body. He states the specific classification under which he 'requests' affiliation. He cites as one reason for the desirability of affiliation

Woodhull and Seider Protest Move

'The successful operation of Arbitration Boards.' Successful? Yes, for the distributor. Theatre owners must not be acclimated to a false atmosphere of security. The contract now in use deprives them of the rights they are justly entitled to. Further, it is confiscatory. A fair contract has been promised. We are working hard toward that end. We believe it will materialize, but it has not yet arrived.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have a vast direct membership in the State of New York. The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce represents Greater New York and a part of Westchester. Mr. Dillon's organization does not represent theatre owners who are members of these organizations and who in numbers comprise substantially more than 50 per cent of the theatre owners in the State of New York, and yet he makes a request for affiliation in the name of the 'Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York,' which infers that Buffalo and Albany zones are parts of the New York State organization.

"Perhaps, after all, we are taking this matter too seriously. Perhaps it is but an effort to publicise a skeleton organization—that is, an organization without a large membership.

"One thing is certain: Whether or not the so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York—Buffalo and Albany zones—formerely was a legitimate theatre owners' association, by this request for affiliation it has read itself out of the ranks of true Independent exhibitor organization. The theatre owners in the Buffalo and Albany zones who refuse to be delivered by Messrs. Dillon and Michaels can and will find protection in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America."

Hays' "Golden Rule"

Mr. Hays' views on the relations between all elements of the industry were described in detail to the Ohio convention.

"The Golden Rule should be written in red at the top of every contract, and it would be the most valuable clause in it," he said in a message delivered by Jerome Beatty at the convention banquet in Columbus on December 8.

"It is a clause that must be obeyed. It is non-cancellable. It is the law of justice and humanity as well as the greatest of economic laws. You can't evade it. You can't appeal it. You obey it or you suffer. To live and let live is not enough—We must live and help live."

Mr. Hays declared that contracts must be equitable—that the only contract worthwhile is one that gives profit to both parties. He said that never before had there been such friendliness between distributor and exhibitor and that "we can bring 100 per cent. confidence and co-operation between exhibitor and distributor by practicing continually the policy of "Do unto others as you would have other do unto you." Mr. Hays' message follows:

"There is one method for bringing about complete confidence and co-operation between all the branches of the motion picture industry that will not fail. It is called The Golden Rule. It is a straight, direct method that goes back to the beginning of things. The law was laid down when the Great Teachers brought order out of chaos and gave us rules for conducting our lives so that all of us should have the right to live and to work and to prosper according to our ability.

"Propaganda, speeches, publicity, meetings, committees, statements mean nothing unless every action is based upon fair play. But

Ohio Against Associate Membership

BEFORE adjourning their two-day convention, Ohio unanimously endorsed the following resolution presented by J. J. Harwood, a vice-president of Cleveland:

"Resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio go on record as being heartily in accord with the movement on that part of the national organization in its endeavors to seek harmony and co-operation with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and be it further resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio await the result of these endeavors before considering any associate membership other than that set forth by the national organization."

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. William A. Dillon,
President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners,
State of New York, Buffalo and Albany Zones,
Buffalo, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Dillon:

I have read with interest and appreciation your letter of November 25th expressing the desire of your organization to become affiliated with this association. It is a definite and responsible evidence of the trend of present constructive exhibitor thought and activity.

Your application will be presented to the Board of Directors at the next meeting, with my recommendation for its approval. Under our charter such an affiliation of such an organization is possible.

We will welcome you and we shall further work together in the fullest harmony for the good of the entire industry. Much of our efforts are now devoted toward aiding exhibitors and it is gratifying to know that through your affiliation we shall be able to extend and intensify these efforts among the members of your organization. You may reassure them that if any member of your Association has a real grievance against any of the producers or distributors who are members of this Association and which you will call to my attention, that the good offices of this Association will be immediately and sympathetically used to bring about such conferences and consideration of such real grievance by the parties interested that a fair solution may be quickly sought.

Your comments upon the work of our Association are noted and appreciated.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes always, I am

Sincerely yours,

Will H. Hays

TEXT OF THE HAYS LETTER

Europe Panic-Stricken Over Visit Of American Picture Men to Berlin

Paramount and Other Companies Seen as Trying to Acquire More Theatres—"Cash in Any Amount" Ads Whet Alarm

By W. Stephen Bush

Rome, Italy, Nov. 25.

FILM circles in Europe, from Scandinavia to Sicily and from Lisbon to the Ural Mountains, are still busy devising means and ways of meeting the dreaded competition from across the water. The latest magic formula for driving the foreign invader out of the European field is a complete and carefully organized union of all European film interests with an edge of uncompromising opposition to the Yankee films. French film interests, represented by capable spokesmen, are to combine with the Germans. Thus will be formed the keystone of the great arch of triumph for the new European film industries. There is some doubt expressed in the course of forming the preliminary plans what part Great Britain is to play in this new movement. The value of financial assistance from the British Isles is freely recognized but several of the promoters of "the new Locarno in the world of films" are afraid that the British in their mentality and their tastes lean more toward America and might spoil the new enterprise from the beginning.

I am convinced that the fear of the American competition is becoming a nightmare to every European interested in the producing, distributing or exhibiting of motion pictures. .The terror has been increased lately by the arrival in Berlin of several American film men, all of them connected with the biggest companies. The visit of Herman Webber and Counselor Elek Ludvigh of Paramount has been signaled to every film concern of any size in Europe, for Europe, in its chronic state of alarm, has its sentinels in every great film centre on the Continent.

The rumors that Paramount and other great companies want to buy more theatres in every part of Europe have been revived and are causing no little worry and anxiety. .Advertisements in the larger trade papers offering "cash in any amount" for first-class picture theatres in populous centres have helped to convince many that the great process of Americanization has set in and that there is no more hope. There are voices to the effect that Europe is getting tired of the American film and that there is no longer any real danger of absorption, but they are growing feeble and cheering or deceiving nobody.

All this is very curious and quite incomprehensible to one who, like the writer, has seen and is seeing American and European films day after day and watch the reactions of the public to these films—reactions which can always be judged best by a look into the box office. European writers seem to be convinced that there is some trick or witchcraft about our films; that they have cast a mysterious spell on harmless and unsuspecting people and that the charm could easily be broken if only the European would unite "against the common foe."

No Secret At All

All this, of course, is nonsense. The only secret is the better quality of our films, their message of hope, their exuberant natural humor, their technical superiority and, above all things, their finely calculated entertainment value for the great masses of the people. To go deeper into the subject would require far more space than I have at my command, but the few facts here stated are beyond all dispute to one who has enjoyed facilities of observation in Europe.

Time and again I have seen a delightful theme or a strong subject or uncommon dramatic values simply ruined by incompetent direction in European studios. The average European film has a touch of coarseness, of heaviness, often of vulgarity that creeps into the celluloid like a pestiferous germ. Also there is a lack of vim and life and a perfect vacuum as far as real humor is concerned. Pessimism and various forms of dramatic melancholia, utterly out of place in an entertainment dependent upon the plain people, infest the European film apparently beyond remedy. The European film industry may be on the eve of a great revival, it may eventually overshadow the American productions, but before the coming of that time the European directors especially will have to spend a long time in unlearning what they know now and in learning what will really help them in the future.

It is only fair to add that our resources have something to do with our successes in the film world. Some of the European countries are poor, desperately poor. Thus the salaries paid to artists in Italy, for example, beggar belief. The average actor gets about $40 a month in American money and most of the time he is not even worth that much. The great Novelli, who died recently, a star of the first magnitude, drew 6,000 lire (a little over $200) a month. Financial conditions are much better, indeed about the same, as with us in such countries as France, Germany and Great Britain. In the mean time the difference between the average European and American director may well be compared to the distance that separates a first-class sign painter from Rafaelle.

The Russian Situation

While Russia under present conditions makes the import of foreign films practically impossible, she is most anxious to improve her own methods of production and to buy the most modern even if the most expensive lighting equipment for her studios. The film industry in Soviet Russia is a state monopoly jealously watched and controlled by the government. It is now and for many years has been in charge of an experienced film man named M. Aleinikoff, who is now in Paris after spending a week or so in Berlin. He is in search of the best technical equipment both for studio and theatre and ready to pay in gold. His next station will be New York City, which, if my information is correct, he will reach not long after this letter has been read by the readers of Moving Picture World.

Only 8,007 Theatres

At present Russia has only about 800 theatres which we would call all around entertainment houses. There are 2,000 halls of workingmen's clubs and 500 traveling picture shows, but these are run at a constant loss and are supported by the government. Regular admissions are only paid at the doors of the 800 so-called "commercial" or quasi independent houses. The workingmen's clubs pay only about $3 a night for their program and the traveling shows only half that amount. As there are no trained projectionists in these clubs one copy lasts about through half a dozen performances.

Mr. Aleinikoff realizes the great handicaps ahead of him but firmly believes that he will conquer them all. He hopes to return not only with the most modern improvements for studio and theatre but with a corps of capable directors, which he thinks he will be able to find in the U. S. A. He is much encouraged by the fact that the manager of the Moscow Artists Theatre, Stanislawsky, who recently made a tour with his company in the States, has consented to devote himself to the development of the Russian film industry.

PHILADELPHIANS WARNED

Fire Marshal Mulhern has warned Philadelphia exhibitors that their licenses will be revoked if they continue to ignore the necessity of a permit when singers, "pluggers" or acts are used. The vaudeville license fee is $500, but a state law prohibits vaudeville acts in a theatre not designed especially for them.

Krellberg Leaves Chadwick To Head Excellent Pictures

S. S. Krellberg has resigned as general manager of Chadwick Pictures Corporation to assume the duties of president of his recently incorporated Excellent Pictures Corporation. Mr. Krellberg, who has been associated with Chadwick for eighteen months, is well known in the motion picture industry as both a sales and production executive.

Mr. Krellberg's plans, which will be announced in further detail later, call for the production of ten feature pictures during the coming season. It is understood that two well known stars, one man and one woman, are now under contract to his new company.

WARNER BROS. PROMOTIONS

Several important changes in the Warner Bros. field organization were announced this week by Sam E. Morris, general manager in charge of distribution.

D. Farquhar, who has been branch manager at Vancouver, B. C., has been promoted to the management of the Winnipeg branch, a larger field. R. W. Wilson, who has been a member of the Winnipeg sales staff, succeeds Farquhar in charge of the Vancouver office. E. L. Alperson, who also has been a successful salesman, has been named branch manager at S. Louis, and Austin Interrante has taken over the management of the Albany office.

Joseph M. Seider Reads Notable Document at Connecticut Gathering—C. C. Pettijohn Praises Business Manager

A DOCUMENT signed by Will H. Hays pledging the future co-operation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is described by Business Manager Joseph M. Seider as a justification of his belief in the sincerity of the "square table" now maintained for the entire industry in the Hays office on Fifth avenue, Manhattan.

The document, obtained after a series of conferences between Mr. Hays and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America officials, signifies the first definite and concrete basis for the unanimous co-operation of all forces in the industry.

The reading of this letter was the climax of one of the most dramatic evenings ever recorded in the history of filmdom. That was conceded by the 500 assembled in the ballroom of the Hotel Taft, New Haven, Conn., on the night of December 2.

Producers, distributors and exhibitors were intermingling, shaking hands, agreeing, pledging. This electrified members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, who had assembled with their wives to pay tribute to their president, Joseph Walsh, and celebrate their victory over the tax measure, acknowledged to be one of the darkest clouds which not only overshadowed their own state but the theatres in the other forty-seven states.

When the gathering adjourned to the ballroom and Attorney C. C. Pettijohn, representing the Hays organization of which he is general counsel, ascended the speakers' dais with National President Woodhull, Business Manager Seider, Sydney S. Cohen, L. M. Sagal and other exhibitor leaders, a wave of the greatest intensity manifested itself even on the faces of the wives of exhibitors.

Mayor David Fitzgerald of New Haven declared it a unique sight to gaze along the speakers' table and see there at an exhibitor banquet representatives of all branches of the industry. "If you can satisfy one another sufficiently to assemble here then you should find no trouble in getting together for a common cause," he said.

National President R. F. Woodhull was next to make an observation which to a certain extent was a substantiation of the mayor's remark. "Producers, distributors and exhibitors are all here this evening," he declared. "There is a good hope that what the mayor observes is now actually going to happen. We are moving along at a rate which indicates that such genuine harmony, resplendent with true sincerity, is very near. In fact, it is so near that I can almost touch it."

Joseph M. Seider then gave a resume of the struggle of the independent theatre owner to maintain his independence and safeguard his investment. He described the administrative committee meetings and the efforts to find a solution of the major problems confronting the theatre owners at the present time, which problems he enumerated.

"We sat in the chairs around the square table that Mr. Hays provided at his offices on Fifth avenue," he said, "with great confidence but a solution seemed almost impossible. Yesterday we held a session around this same square table, and in addition to Mr. Hays, who represented Universal, Fox and Warner, there sat Nicholas Schenck, representing Metro-Goldwyn; Sidney Kent, representing Famous Players-Lasky, and John C. Flinn, representing Producers Distributing Corporation.

"A Bill of Rights"

"As a result of this session there was delivered by Mr. Hays to us a document which is the magna charta of the motion picture industry—a bill of rights. It has not been a bloodless revolution. The theatre paths are strewn with theatre owners who have been put out of business. Those men, who as pioneers have provided producers with capital that pictures could be produced, have been eliminated by those very same producers who, when their financial resources became stronger, entered into the exhibiting branch of this business and eliminated those very men who had made it possible for them to succeed. Yet it has all not been in vain if this document spells the emancipation of the independent or small theatre owner."

Mr. Seider then read the following letter addressed to the Administrative Committee, officers and Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A. by Will H. Hays:

"Following further the matter of co-operation and referring to discussions we have had recently in regard thereto:

"This letter is by way of reassurance of the continuing purpose of this association and my own personal determination to do everything possible to further that co-operation. I call your attention again to the fact that the purpose of this association is to promote the common interests of all those engaged in the motion picture business and that our efforts are directed quite as much for the ultimate welfare of the exhibitor as for the interests of the producer and distributor.

"As a further declaration of purpose more definitely to this end, I assure you that if any member of your organization anywhere

In and Out of Town

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O., in charge of production, left on December 4 for a trip to the West Coast studios. With Production Manager B. P. Fineman he will line up the 1926-27 program of the company.

Nathan Burkan, counsel for Charles Chaplin and a director of United Artists, and Harry D. Buckley, who represents the Pickford-Fairbanks interests in New York, have returned from the West where they participated in the merger conferences. Burkan said that Charlie is learning how to walk the tight-rope.

Claude Ezell, district sales director of Associated Exhibitors in the Southwest, is here.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, president of Davis Distributing Division, has returned from Hollywood where he has been supervising production plans.

Lupino Lane, the comedian, is in New York. He will soon sail for London to appear in a legitimate production.

Ben Silvey, an assistant director, has gone to Hollywood to aid Maurice Tourneur with a First National picture.

Victor Potel, comedian, is in New York from the West Coast.

Charles Sonin, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer purchasing department, is visiting various exchanges to reorganize the poster departments and stimulate the sale of accessories.

Elek J. Ludvigh, general counsel for Famous Players, has returned from abroad.

J. H. Von Herberg is sick at the Hotel Roosevelt. He has a day and night nurse.

27 Chicago Houses Increase Realty Values $75,000,000

Twenty-seven of the larger Chicago picture theatres have increased realty values in their vicinities by $75,000,000, according to an estimate by leading realtors. In each instance property for two blocks around has soared. The average increase for the larger theatres totals approximately $3,000,000 each, or at an approximate rate of $1,000,000 for every 1,000 seats and more than 150 per cent. over the cost of the construction.

There are 308 theatres in the city showing only pictures. Twenty-nine more vary pictures with vaudeville. The number of seats approximates 350,000.

One of the larger theatres reports that it draws from 60,000 to 65,000 patrons a week.

MISS GOODMAN RESIGNS

Exhibitors in Central and Northern New York have not shown the expected interest in the Albany Zone headquarters to warrant the further retention of a stenographer. Miss Carolyn Goodman has resigned the position she has held since the headquarters were opened and it is understood that no one will be appointed in her place. Louis Buettner of Cohoes, chairman of the Zone, will look after the mail for the time being. When the Zone headquarters were opened a service was offered exhibitors, free of charge, that would have resulted in members of the Zone not being obliged to make frequent trips to Albany on matters that could be handled by Miss Goodman. The headquarters have been supported by contributions from exhibitors and will be retained. It is expected that something of a definite nature will be announced in the near future as to the plans of Mr. Buettner and his fellow officers.

Hays Pledges Co-operation

in the country has a real grievance against any of the producers or distributors who are members of this association, and if you will call my attention to such grievance, the good offices of this association will be immediately and sympathetically used to bring about such conferences and consideration of such real grievance between the parties interested that a fair solution threof may be quickly sought.

Hays' Offer

"The principle of arbitration is being successfully applied to all arbitral matters in dispute which may arise covered by the exhibition contract. This proposal is by way of further offering to use the good offices of the association to develop conferences for the settlement of matters not naturally included in difficulties arbitral under the exhibition contract. The whole purpose is to aid in the providing for any possible means of adjustment of every kind of real grievance that may arise, that thereby there may be developed complete fulfillment of the formula of confidence and co-operation as originally suggested and which is today the solution of our problems as certainly as when the formula was originally indicated."

"This letter and its significance in major detail is the first actual co-ordinated movement for the elimination of the building of unnecessary theatres in localities already well seated and well served," continued Mr. Seider.

"It spells the beginning of the end for the wrongful locking out of a producer's product by theatre combinations.

"It is a guillotine for the illegitimate transfer of theatres to avoid contractual responsibilities.

"It starts the dissembling of the purchase or acquisition of theatrical properties or interest therein by unfair or coercive methods.

"It provides for the allocation of product wrongfully and unfairly withheld by producer-exhibitor or chain theatre competitors."

Square Table an Actuality

With a bang that caused the entire audience to jump in their chairs and which nearly splintered the glasses on the speakers' table, Business Manager Seider brought down his fist and roared:

"Mr. Hays' square table is square. This is a statement signed by Will H. Hays which justifies the sincerity of the presence of the square table now prominently placed in the headquarters of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

"What does this statement mean? It means that the motion picture industry will face the future with a solid front. It means that the square table with its chairs has become an actuality; that producer, distributor and exhibitor may now pull up chairs around that square table and squarely discuss, adjust or arbitrate their problems to the satisfaction of all.

"It means that the life savings of a theatre owner invested in his chosen field of endeavor will not be taken from him. It is a manifestation of the sincerity, the foresightedness and the fairness of Mr. Hays."

Pettijohn Praises Seider

Attorney Pettijohn, who preceded Mr. Seider and the reading of the Hays' letter, was warm in his praise of the business manager.

"I want to speak for Seider," he declared with such force of sincerity that the eyes of the audience reverted for a moment to the business manager. "Mr. Seider has undertaken a big job. He is deserving of your utmost co-operation and confidence. I, personally, will be at his command any time he may have need of my services."

Sydney S. Cohen, as the toastmaster of the evening had lightly introduced Attorney Pettijohn as the representative of those "unpopular producers." In reply to this Pettijohn made a statement which was one of the many deeply significant points recorded during the evening, as follows:

"On behalf of those 'unpopular producers and distributors' I want to tell you all in real seriousness that they are just as alive to the public as you exhibitors. They are all realizing that there cannot be two roads in this respect. Now they are joining you and we are all sitting down at a table like men and arriving at a definite agreement. You make take my word for it that we producers and distributors may be counted on to do our part in anything in this state or in the industry as a whole."

A Tribute to Pettijohn

One of the most dramatic moments of the evening occurred when Business Manager Seider, following the declaration of co-operation by the Hays' official, reached over and placed his hand on Attorney Pettijohn's shoulder, saying:

"Charlie Pettijohn—I want to pay my respects to you. Indiana should learn politics from Connecticut. They seated us together and while waiting to be called we have practically settled the contract and arbitration problem. Your manifestation of sincerity in your very actions this evening speaks even volumes more than your words."

The business manager concluded his address by stressing the importance of every exhibitor becoming active in the fight being waged from national headquarters against the proposed amendments to the copyright law affecting the music tax. He said that a special attorney has been retained to conduct the legal angle of this campaign, a detail story of which appears in the first issue of the Official Bulletin. He concluded by paying a tribute to the Connecticut organization, stating that although it is second in size it is second to none of the other forty-seven states in loyalty.

Walsh Optimistic

Joseph Walsh, head of the Connecticut organization, stated that his organization had just emerged victorious from one of the darkest periods in its history. He lauded the work of the national organization and of the Hays' office, particularly Mr. Pettijohn in this respect, for their co-operation with the state organization in reducing to but 10 per cent. the seriousness of the tax measure. He emphasized the point that this victory was not the outcome of any "shady deal" but that of "honest adjustment."

A novel insight into the way officials of the state regarded the Durant Bill which became a law in a period of less than twenty-four hours was given by Lieutenant-Governor Brainard.

"No one realized for a moment what that bill was when it was signed and passed," he said. "No one had given it any serious consideration. We don't want the money. We don't need it. We are one of the richest states in the Union."

Woodhull Demands National Crusade Against Too Zealous Press-Agentry

Grange to Star

"RED" GRANGE, football sensation, has signed a $300,000 contract to make one picture for Arrow Pictures Corporation. Further pictures will depend upon the success of the initial attempt. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, handed him the check in the presence of a crowd of newspapermen at the Hotel Astor on December 7.

Then came a rush of advertising men seeking permission to use his name. From a sweater company he got $12,000 for donning a sweater and being photographed. A football doll concern forked over $10,000, a cap concern $2,500, a shoe company $5,000 and a tobacco company $1,000, though the redhead doesn't smoke. All in all, it was a great day for Grange.

The scenario of the Grange "movie" hasn't yet been written, Mr. Shallenberger says. It will be done by a famous scenario writer before "Red" becomes available for picture work, about the middle of February.

Charles C. Pyle of Champaign, Ill., is Red's manager. It is said that he receives 50 per cent. on all of the football player's earnings.

Charges that the $300,000 is an "absured dream" were answered by Mr. Pyle.

"The certified check we got was real enough," he said. It's in the registered mail now on the way to the bank where we deposit, and that's only a starter. Grange is to get a percentage on all over a certain sum grossed by the picture."

Mr. Shallenberger remarked that sixty people were present when the certified check was handed Grange.

NEW CAPETOWN THEATRES

African Theatres, Ltd., has announced intention to build three large cinema theatres in Capetown, each capable of seating 2,500 and embodying all the latest fetaures of up-to-date English and American theatres, states a recent report to the Department of Commerce from P. J. Stevenson, American Trade Commissioner in Johannesburg, South Africa. The management of the African Theatres, Ltd., stated that although the present "movie" going public of Capetown is not sufficiently large to justify this program of construction, they are looking to the future with confidence.

MORRIS WITH TELEGRAM

George Morris has left Warner Brothers to join S. J. Kaufman of the Evening Telegram as associate. He also is handling considerable free lance publicity work, including representation of the Casa Lopez.

Criticizes Signing of "Red" Grange at Ohio Convention and Questions Salary Quoted—James Re-elected

A NATIONAL crusade against "overzealous press agentry" materialized this week at the convention in Columbus of the Moving Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio when the 150 exhibitors of this state unit completed their work by unanimously endorsing a resolution presented by R. F. Woodhull president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The resolution calls for immediate action to be taken to enlist the Hays organization in the fight, which President Woodhull termed the "greatest menace in the industry today and one for which the death knell must be sounded by all forces in the motion picture field."

"Foisting" upon the public star athletes as film stars, when such was done at the sacrifice of artistry and solely for the selfish purpose on the part of a producer of capitalizing on the publicity already acquired, was the second clause which President Woodhull emphasized in his resolution and which will be brought to the attention of members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

"Over-zealous press agents are doing more harm to our industry than anything in it today," the national president declared in his address at the banquet on the night of December 8. "Their changing of decimal points is mainly responsible for this. It is a dangerous thing to get these fake figures before your legislators and before your public—a lot of figures that are nothing more than a mass of junk. We go to Washington appealing for sympathy. They are scornful of us because they have read about million-dollar-a-year salaries being paid to children—a hundred thousand a year to a dog; a fortune to a prize fighter to essay the role of a Robert Mantell. The children to whom I refer are Baby Peggy and Jackie Coogan. The prize fighter is Jack Dempsey. Now, today, the papers are flooded with a lot of junk about Red Grange, the football star, being signed to star in a picture at a salary of $300,000. I am not criticizing Dempsey or Grange as athletes. Far from it. But it would be just as ridiculous if the Yale football team were to sign up Ben Turpin to play fullback."

Joseph M. Seider, business manager of the M. P. T. O. A., has written the Associated Press a request that it organize a committee to, in conjunction with the exhibitor body, investigate the truth of the alleged payment of $300,000 in advance by certified check to "Red" Grange by the Arrow Pictures Corporation.

"While we have no definite reason to doubt the genuineness of the statement that the sum of $300,000 by certified check has already been paid to Mr. Grange," he wrote, "we feel that the interests of all will be served by the definite establishment of this fact."

A highlight of the national president's letter to Ohio was his reiteration about a "square table" for the industry in the Hays office, as told by Business Manager Joseph M. Seider at the convention of Connecticut Theatre Owners in New Haven last week. The fact that negotiations between the two organizations are closer to a successful understanding than ever before was the point he made with the Ohioans. This was greeted by prolonged applause.

The desire for a united front and a consistent harmony among all forces within the industry was again made clear by the Hays organization through Jerome Beatty, its representative, at Columbus. Mr. Beatty read a personal message from Mr. Hays in which the producers' leader stated that observation by all of the Golden Rule and its fairplay prerogatives, would be the quickest and most lasting way. This is printed in full on page 633.

A. Julian Brylawski, chairman of the Administrative Committee of the M. P. T. O. A., was one of the leading speakers at the opening business session. He gave a meaty resume of the national organization, emphasizing that "this organization has at times been referred to as a one-man organization.

No One-Man Organization

"The M. P. T. O. A. is not and never was a one-man organization. So far as national organization progress is concerned," Mr. Brylawski stated, "More has been accomplished during the past three months than in the past three years. With Joseph M. Seider as business manager the conferences have been conducted between the Administrative Committee and the Hays offices with a proximity to excellent fruition."

That the new contract is practically being printed, so far has its status towards finality progressed, and that the smaller exhibitors especially should feel indebted to the Administrative Committee for this progress, was another point made by Mr. Brylawski.

On Federal legislative matters the speaker said that he believed Federal censorship would intensify and not alleviate local censorship conditions.

"Of particular menace in this respect," he declared, "is the proposed amendment to the Copyright Law which would mean absolute bondage for every theatre owner in the United States."

The amendments would be responsible for this because, he said, they would make almost limitless the sources which could reap revenue from music taxes far greater than the one now derived under the present law by the American Society of Authors and Composers. He advised the Ohio men against being "hoodwinked" by any overture on the part of the latter society, saying that only 10 per cent. of the $700,000 it collected in taxes last year went to its members. Mr. Brylawski and his committee were given a rising vote of thanks in recognition by the Ohio unit of the work they are accomplishing nationally.

Harmony was the final keynote also of the Ohio organization, whose members conceded that it had developed into one of the most satisfactory conventions, from the standpoint of business and pleasure, ever held by the organization.

At first parliamentary procedure took on a threatening aspect. There was evidenced a suggestion of a rift between men from Cleveland and those from other parts of the state. It was contended that the bylaws of the organization had never been officially authorized by the unit as a whole. This developed when it came to electing a president, one side claiming that bylaws provided that this was the duty of the directorate, while the others contended the election of the chieftain should be made on the floor. Matters resolved themselves into a special committee going into caucus, taking with them the bylaws which were amended in respect to the president. Therefore, by unanimous endorsement, a nominating committee was appointed and the best of good will prevailed.

J. J. Harwood of Cleveland at the banquet that night officially recorded state harmony when he declared: "Cleveland delegates and Northern Ohio are down here for harmony. That was our fight, and that is our success which is the success of all. We will follow Mr. James for another term if he is willing to accept."

"W. N. James of Columbus, president of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio, was first presented with a gold watch and the following day was unanimously re-elected.

The other officers are: J. J. Harwood, Cleveland, vice-president at large; H. T. Palmer, Fairport Harbor, first vice-president; J. A. Ackerman, Cincinnati, second vice-president; Henry Bieberson, Jr., Delaware, third vice-president; Sam Lind, Zanesville, treasurer; George Fenberg, Newark, secretary; P. J. Wood, Columbus, business manager; Executive Committee, all officers and F. A. Kelly, Massillon; M. B. Horiwitz, Cleveland; A. C. Himmelein, Sandusky; John Schwalm, Hamilton; J. A. Damm, Wadsworth; C. W. Miller, Youngstown.

NO FIRE HAZARD FOUND

Loew in Conn.

LOEW, INC., New York, Theatrical Company, will invade Connecticut for the first time, it became known this week, announcement being made of the signing of a contract for the purchase of a theatre site in Stamford costing $500,000. The property consists of the westerly half of the Spelke Building on Main Street. It fronts 51 feet and is 200 feet deep. It is purchased from the Connecticut Title and Guaranty Company of Hartford, of which Abram Spelke is president.

The new theatre, work on which will start as soon as the title has been passed, probably early next month, will cost between $300,000 and $400,000 and will seat between 2,500 and 3,000. Definite plans for the building have not yet been formulated.

Marguerite Marsh Dies at New York Home; Sister of May

MARGUERITE MARSH, 33 years old, sister of Mae Marsh and herself a well known actress, died on December 8 at the home of her mother, Mrs. Mae Marsh, 221 West Eighty-second Street, New York City, of bronchial pneumonia. About a month ago nervous breakdown necessitated her return from St. Louis, where she was making personal appearances.

As Marguerite Loveridge, Miss Marsh made a name for herself before engaging in picture work. D. W. Griffith spotted her sister Mae when Mae called on Marguerite at the studio and engaged the younger sister. Later Marguerite changed her professional name back to Marsh. She starred with Lionel Barrymore in "Boomerang Bill," with Wyndham standing in "The Lion's Mouse," and with Maxine Elliott and Martha Mansfield in a number of productions. Funeral services were held at 2:30 p. m. at the parlors of W. J. Dargeon, 954 Amsterdam Avenue

The Bulletin

THE first number of the Official Bulletin of the M. P. T. O. A., to be issued semi-monthly, is in the mails. This is a new and valuable service for exhibitors instituted by Business Manager Joseph M. Seider. The first number is an eight-page one and replete with newsy departments.

In the selection of Tom Waller as editor of the Official Bulletin, Mr. Seider has obtained a man ideally capable of making it an outstanding success. That is obvious to Moving Picture World readers, who are well acquainted with Waller through his previous connection with this publication.

Kansas City Showmen Learn to Distrust African Golf

COMEDY, pathos and scandal intermingled on Kansas City's Film Row this week when, amid open mouths and astonished faces, a raiding squad of policemen backed the "wagon" in front of "Hollywood," the town mecca for exhibtors, film salesmen and others either directly or indirectly connected with the industry.

An ordinary raid would provoke little more than the blink of an eye from Film Row, but for exhibitors and exchange representatives to learn that according to the police, copper wires, four storage batteries and a Ford starter had a very direct, as well as effecting and demoralizing, connection with the "little green table" upon which mystic ivory cubes were wont to scamper—well, it simply was too much of a shock. Upon investigation the police found a magnet in a very innocent looking humidor. When the "juice" was turned on the dice "froze," they said.

As Mike Curran, keeper of the game par excellence, was "booked in" at police headquarters he gave the name "Mike Curran," but in making his own $50 bond for appearance in court he signed the name J. W. Flynn. That's something else to guess at.

Defends Pictures

AMERICAN motion pictures stimulate the populace and awaken a necessary ambition, according to Dr. Toulouse, a French sociologist, in a forceful counter-attack to aspersions cast on films. Visions of brighter, healthier lives make people ambitious and stimulate them to exertions, he finds.

Any tendency of the screen to encourage lives of crime the doctor believes insignificant, affecting only the viciously inclined and the weakminded.

"I could never see anything particularily moral about making believe that poverty is dignified, or that anybody ought to be satisfied with less than the best he can get," he said, continuing to emphasize that all poverty is unhealthful and the creator of anemia and tuberculosis.

The greater the inducement, the better the work, he says.

"It is the policy on which the wealth and industry of the United States have been built up," he said. "It is the lesson all Europe has to learn from her sooner or later, and in the movies it is taught in the most concrete and comprehensible form, in which it can reach everybody."

German Production Falls Off; Contingent System a Failure

THE following report received in the Department of Commerce from Douglas Miller, Assistant Commercial Attache in Berlin, gives the most recent facts and figures illustrating the workings of the German contingent system:

In spite of the dissatisfaction expressed abroad that the German film contingent system is limiting the market for foreign pictures, says the report, in German film production circles there is a growing complaint that the contingent system still fails to give German producers the share of the market that they expected. According to recent figures of films passing the censorship it is evident that German productions are steadily falling behind.

For example, the following are the figures for October: German 122, American 104, other foreign 43, making the total number of films 269. Of these 62 were dramas, 21 being German, 28 American and 13 other foreign. In length of film 100,838 meters were German, 83,394 meters were American and 37,789 other foreign, making a total of 222,021 meters.

Of the German films passing the censorship in October, 29 were prohibited to be shown to children under eighteen; 42 of the American films and 13 of the other foreign pictures were also prohibited. Accordingly, about three-quarters of the German pictures could be shown to children, while only three-fifths of the American pictures were allowed the same privilege.

Of the total number of educational films censored in October the German share was 45 per cent., compared with 63 per cent. the month before. In the number of meters shown the German share was 45 per cent., compared with 54 per cent. in September.

Of film dramas 21 German pictures were censored, compared with 41 foreign. The respective figures in September were 30 German, against 43 foreign and in August 28, as compared with 20 foreign. Accordingly the German share in film dramas censored was 34 per cent. in October as compared with 41 per cent. in September and 58 per cent. in August.

OF the Screen BY the Screen and FOR the Screen

form possible, and affixed to scene or sequence to which they apply. The Master Scenario is a concention of the production values of the picture, COMPLETELY ORGANIZED from EVERY picture angle.

The man who says today, "You cannot blue print PICTURES or production values in pictures" is the man who tomorrow very definitely CHARTS the mother love theme or the Western theme or the society theme. Wisby goes farther than that—much farther. Under his Plan, for instance, the main sequences are blocked out, studied from the dramatic angle, the photography angle, the scenic angle and VISUALIZED a series of panels, preliminary to actual production. These panels, in turn, are studied, checked over, revised as tangible production GUIDES.

Here is production INSURANCE. Here is production ECONOMY. Here is SCREEN IMAGINATION going to work—actually going to work—BEFORE the camera starts to run.

Give Wisby a picture to make. He would put more time in preliminary effort than is being done today. But we are certain that for every DAY he worked in advance of actual "shooting," he would cut off TWO days in the studio.

He would save money, too, in settings. And at the same time give to the screen something different in SCENIC INVESTITURE. Accompanying this story is a reproduction of a cathedral interior, done by Wisby along lines of creative interpretation. It is a stylistic cathedral. No particular church. Yet the ecclesiastic note is definitely and lastingly sounded. A cathedral has been shown by NOT showing it. And at a production cost far lower the building of a replica of any particular monument to prayer.

We asked Mr. Wisby how he would "interpret" a common object, like a farm house.

"By NOT showing it," Wisby replied. We would interpret it CINEMATICALLY—by deleting the things about the house that do not mean anything and assembling the things that mean something around a central motif. That motif will express a MOVING PICTUE ideal and at the same time interpret the meaning of that house to the scene as played. The meaning may be purely decorative or it may serve as a background for emphasizing the mood of a sequence—sinister or pleasing, dramatic or droll, as the script may direct. Whatever is done or not done, the motif chosen, and the interpretation of it, must be original on MOVING PICTURE lines."

Is Wisby qualified to put his Plan to work? Look over this brief record of his career and see if he is not amply qualified, in a personal way to amplify what has already been done in the way of organized screen technique:

A Danish nobleman by birth, Wisby gave up his title of Baron Dewitz, and Grand Ducal Chamberlain to become an American citizen;

He has spent some sixteen years in exploration and travel, studying as he went;

An officer in the Royal Danish Navy, he circumnavigated the globe with Prince Valdemar, nephew of the late Queen Mother of England;

He was the boyhood chum of Prince Karl of Denmark, now King Haakon VII of Norway;

Inventor, with R. E. Scott, United States Army captain, of the aerial torpedo and the battle-aeroplane;

Author of "War's New Weapons," prefaced by Hudson Maxim, and considered by him the most valuable technical book of the war.

The New York Tribune said this of Wisby's book: "He possesses the rare gift of 'popularization.' He writes and explains remarkably well;"

Headed a Regie in Denmark and another in Belgium;

Made, in record time, "Diana," a three-reel picture with amateurs. His first film effort, and a box office success;

Supervised Olga Petrova's "Daughter of Destiny;"

Toured the United States in 1904, introducing efficiency systems into a number of organizations;

During the past seven years has re-studied the arts and sciences to find what they can contribute to the screen, in a screen manner.

Yes, Mr. Wisby is qualified. Prepared to properly rear this PICTURE child on which he has spent a lot of time, money and brains.

(The third chapter of "OF the Screen, BY the Screen, and FOR the Screen" will appear in Moving Picture World next week.)

MONTGOMERY, MO., TURNING BLUE

Montgomery, Mo., is threatened with Blue Sundays. The religious intolerants of that community have been bringing pressure to bear on Prosecuting Attorney Glover E. Dowell to enforce the dead Sunday closing laws. He has stated that he has about decided to do so.

CAN'T PLAY "HOOKEY"

A drastic city ordinance proposed for Tulsa, Okla., forbids children from 8 to 10 years of age from attending any place of amusement in Tulsa from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays. The offending theatre will be penalized in the sum of $100 for allowing such attendance of children.

Wyrobeck Killed

LEO WYROBECK, 23 years old, Southern Illinois salesman for Universal Pictures and a bride-groom of less than a week, was killed on Wednesday night, December 2, when his automobile plunged into a stalled auto truck on the hard road near Windsor, Ill.

Wyrobeck was alone in his sedan at the time and he was never able to explain the mishap. The presumption is that he was blinded by the bright head lights of another machine and saw the truck too late to prevent a collision.

The tragic end of the popular salesman was a shock to the St. Louis film colony, which had not finished extending its congratulations to Wyrobeck and his bride, who was Miss Selma Hess. Their wedding took place in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Thanksgiving Day. They returned to St. Louis on Sunday, November 29, and Wyrobeck departed the next day on a business trip through his territory.

Many Protests When Exhibitors Seek to Join Hays

if you are playing fair, all the opposition in the world will do you no permanent harm.

"There is one way for exhibitor and distributor to get together and strive shoulder to shoulder for the common good. Each must play fair with the other.

"A satisfied exhibitor is a friend of the producer. An exhibitor who is buying pictures at fair prices, who is receiving product that makes his theatre an honorable and substantial institution in his community has no just complaint against the man upon whom he is dependent for his product.

"A distributor who is receiving fair treatment from exhibitors, who has a satisfactory outlet for his product, who is not suffering from unfair practices, has no quarrel with exhibitors.

"The motion picture business in all its branches prospers when there is fair play between buyer and seller. In this it is no different from any other business.

"It is just as much to the advantage of the distributor as it is to the advantage of the exhibitor to work for general satisfaction between buyer and seller. The only contract worth while is one that gives profit to both parties. Contracts must be equitable. Both sides have been offenders.

Attaining Co-operation

"Never, however, has there been such general friendliness in the industry between distributor and exhibitor as there is at this time. Distributors and exhibitors are natural friends. Influences which would make them otherwise are bad influences. We have not yet reached the maximum co-operation, but we will. We can bring 100 per cent. confidence and co-operation between exhibitor and distributor by practicing continually the policy of 'Do unto others as you would have others do unto you.'

"That's all there is to our business—that is all there is to any successful business. The Golden Rule should be written in red at the top of every contract, and it would be the most valuable clause in it. It's a clause that must be obeyed. It is non-cancellable. It is the law of justice and humanity as well as the greatest of all economic laws. You can't evade it. You can't appeal it. You obey it, or you suffer. To live and let live is not enough—we must live and help live.

"You may say for me as you did in Michigan that the determination on our part to do everything possible for exhibitors and to promote to the fullest extent the plan of co-operation, goes to the extent of assuring them that if any exhibitor in Ohio or anywhere in the country has a real grievance against any of the producers or distributors who are members of this asociation and will call my attention to such grievance, that the good offices of the association will be immediately and sympathetically used to bring about such conferences and consideration of such real grievance by the parties interested, that a fair solution may be quickly sought. It is our purpose to do everything possible to bring about an adjustment of every real grievance wherever and whenever any such exists. - I know that the exhibitors of Ohio will appreciate the value both to exhibitors and distributors of this possibility."

Theatre Acquisition Contest Hotter; Smaller Exhibitors Are Combining

A Puzzle

A PERPLEXING question confronts the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri in the admission of managers of producer-owned theatres into the organization as active members.

The majority of the M. P. T. O. K. M. directors favor lifting bars to manager of producer-owned houses, but the by-laws of the organization say "no," and it takes more than a meeting of the directors to amend the constitution. At a regular convention only can the constitution be amended and the next convention will not be until spring, the usual semi-annual fall convention having been called for.

"All we can do is sit and wait," said R. R. Biechele, president of the exhibitor body. "There can be no doubt about the sentiment towards such a move, but we cannot throw our by-laws to the winds."

Incidentally, in connection with producer-owned houses, virtually all doubt concerning Metro-Goldwyn and the proposed new $3,000,000 Midland Theatre of Kansas City have been removed. Metro-Goldwyn will control the booking of the 4,000-seat house. That much is a certainty, as has been admitted by officials of the Midland Theatre Company, which is constructing the house, but final details have not been disposed of yet.

Capitol, Co., Flint, Mich., Names Butterfield President

The Capitol Theatre Company of Flint, Mich., has been reorganized with W. S. Butterfield as president, according to announcement from the Butterfield offices in Detroit. Mr. Butterfield has been instructed to proceed with the erection of a new theatre to cost approximately $1,000,000. The Butterfield Circuit will erect three new theatres in the state during the coming year, one in Bay City, one in Ann Arbor and the other in Flint. These will represent approximately $2,000,000 in property and buildings.

W. S. Butterfield, accompanied by Mrs. Butterfield, left recently for Florida on a motor trip. They expect to be gone about three weeks, returning here in time for Christmas.

MUSICIANS WANT INCREASE

The musicians of St. Louis have let it be known they will ask a uniform increase of $5 a man a week when their present contract expires next summer. The local exhibitors have appointed a special committee to consider the question. At present the musicians average about $48.50 a week with $10 extra for the leader.

Gottesman and Kutinsky Seek Control of Jersey City—Kansas City Suburban Chain Foreseen—New Illinois Co.

By Sumner Smith

AS the days go by, the struggle for domination in the motion picture industry and for a bare existence waxes increasingly hotter. "Buy theatres," is the battle cry. The big circuits have men constantly investigating possible acquisitions; distributors and producers seek good theatre investments. Theatre companies are formed to protect a distributor from being shut out of the market. And the exhibitors are combining within their own ranks to control their local situation.

This undoubtedly is a new crisis in the affairs of an industry not unused to crises. Better pictures than ever are being made, but of what use is it to make better pictures if a competing firm dominates a key city and can prevent them from being shown first-run? So the scramble for theatres goes on unremittingly; appearances indicate that it will continue for months to come. Everybody is trying to safeguard investments.

It seems certain that the situation will result in more and more competing exhibitors coming to an agreement and an alignment of strength—that is, the smaller exhibitors, for the bigger ones have already consolidated their position. Control of the theatre situation in Jersey City evidently is the ambition of Alfred Gottesman and Morris Kutinsky, who have merged their properties into one organization. Gottesman's houses are the Strand, now building at Fairmount and Bergen, and three others to be built, as follows: The Cameo at Decatur and Ocean, seating 2,000; the Downtown at 71 Newark avenue, to seat 1,500, and a house as yet unnamed at Communipaw and West Side avenues, to set 1,600. Gottesman also owns the State at Washington, Pa. The Kutinsky theatres are the Tivoli at Four Corners, seating 1,400; Monticello on Monticello avenue, seating 1,000; Eureka in Hackensack, seating 1,400, and the Playhouse at Bound Brook, seating 800.

Kansas City

A string of Kansas City suburban houses probably will be controlled by a new syndicate, now in the process of organization, with Adolph Eisner, former president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas City, as the probable head of the chain.

Plans at present merely are in the embryo and it is not known what theatres will be included in the string, which will be operated as chain houses. With the majority of down town first-run houses in Kansas City producer-controlled, the suburban houses rapidly are becoming parts of chains.

"The day of the old fashioned exhibitor who used to point a menacing finger at syndicates and chain houses has passed," said Mr. Eisner. "Today most of the big exhibiting end of the industry is done in two types of theatres—those operated by a syndicate and producer-owned houses. I have devoted most of my life to operating privately-owned theatres, but I am convinced that the strongest voice can be heard in the wilderness today is that of the chain theatre. Its the only logical solution of many of our inter-industrial troubles and I predict that a few years hence will find the majority of the theatres of America either affiliated with a chain or producer-controlled."

Illinois

According to news from Bloomington, Ill., the four leading movie houses in that city have been organized into a new holding company to be known as the Bloomington Theatres, Inc. The houses in the new organization are the Castle, Ilini, Majestic and Irwin. Guy W. Martin has been made managing director of the Ilini, Irwin and Castle theatres at Bloomington and Jack Spicer will manage the Majestic in the same city.

Rapp & Rapp are preparing plans for a new theatre to go up at Cicero avenue and Belmont, Chicago, for the Lubliner-Trinz-Balaban-Katz combination. The house will seat 2,500 and cost about $1,500,000.

Polka Brothers have added another house, the Fargo, at Sycamore, Ill., seating 800, which opened last month. This modern movie house will show pictures and presentations. The Polka circuit has theatres in Geneva, Maywood, Melrose Park and Des Plaines, Ill., and other houses may be added in the near future.

The new Milo Theatre at 18th Place and Blue Island avenue, Chicago, was opened last Thursday to a capacity house. J. D. Zoumzakis, owner of the new house, put on a heavy opening bill that the big crowds appreciated. The new theatre seats 1,500 and has a fine orchestra and a Barton organ. Screen novelties, feature photo plays and vaudeville will be the policy. Other houses in the Zoumzakis circuit are the Stadium and the 18th Street.

Incorporations

Four companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York State during the past week. While this does not indicate any great activity from the standpoint of companies incorporating in the business, the amount of capitalization of at least three of the companies was for substantial amounts. The companies chartered by the secretary of state were: Publix Theatres Corporation, 1,000 shares of no par value stock, with Harold B. Franklin, of New Rochelle; Sam Katz, Chicago, Ill., and Felix E. Kahn, of New York City; Merit Play Productions, Inc., $30,000, Charles K. Feldman, H. H. Feldstein, William Rothschild, New York; R. S. P. Amusement Co., Inc., $15,000, Elsa Alper, Goldie Schwartz, Estelle Wagner, Brooklyn; Rohde Rathjen and Wallace, Inc., Cold Spring, $7,500, H. T. Immerman, Israel Isenberg, M. I. Garvey, New York City.

The Trio Theatres Company, Toledo, Ohio, is among the recent Ohio incorporations, with Howard Feigley, Nathan B. Charnis, Samuel Harris and others. The Casto Theatre Company, Ashtabula, Ohio, has also been incorporated by Maurice A. Shea, Leo T. Losen, Chnrey S. Sheldon and Howard M. Nazor.

Chicago Asks Relief From Old Fire Ordinance

THEATRE owners and managers in Chicago are behind the movement to amend the fire prevention ordinance passed over twenty years ago at the time of the Iroquois Theatre fire, so that people will be permitted to wait in the lobbies of the theatres while the houses are full of patrons. It also is planned to ask the council to change the ordinance on fireproof drapes, as the new houses are practically fireproof and have plenty of exits.

A conference was held last week between Fire Commissioner Joseph F. Connery and a committee from the Chicago Exhibitors Association headed by Business Manager Jack Miller, Barney Balaban, Harry Ascher, Emil Stern and representatives from the other circuits. The fire chief said that his hands are tied, as he would have to enforce the present fire prevention ordinances. The only way to obtain relief is to have the city council amend the laws.

MISSING USHER SURRENDERS

Walter G. Fritchie, former head usher of the Grand Riviera Theatre, Detroit, Mich., which was robbed of $10,000 in week-end receipts two weeks ago, returned to Detroit last week and gave himself to the police. He brought with him approximately one-half of the receipts and told the usual story of how two boys, seeking a chance to see the world, ran away with the money.

HATTYE KOERPEL DIES

Hattye Koerpel, wife of J. A. Koerpel, First National's European Director General, died last week at her home in Chicago after a short illness contracted while living abroad. Mrs. Koerpel leaves many friends in the industry who will be deeply grieved at her passing. She was buried in Ottawa, Ill.

Theatre Acquisition General

Sass. He has also added the Oakley Theatre near Oakley and Chicago avenue. This will give him four houses on Chicago avenue. The other two are the Alvin and Hub theatres. Langdon's booking headquarters are at 30 East 8th street. He also looks after the Avon Theatre on Fullerton avenue for the Lynch circuit.

Work will start after the first of the year on the huge new 5,000-seat theatre that the Balaban-Katz-Lubliner-Trinz combination will build at Crawford avenue and Washington Boulevard. This makes three new theatres for that district for the coming year. The new house will be named the Washington, and it is claimed, will be the largest theatre on the West Side.

It is reported that Fox's theatre chain will build a new movie theatre on the Washington street, Chicago, site near State street they acquired from the Ascher circuit some time ago. The site is 100 feet on Washington street by a depth of 180 feet, can easily take care of a 3,500-seat house.

Balaban & Katz report the work on the new Chicago theatre that is going up on Randolph street in the new Masonic Temple building is so far advanced that they are planning for the opening early in March. The house will seat 3,500 and has been named the Masonic Temple Theatre. It is the second largest house in seating capacity in the Loop. The house is being built along East Indian lines.

Detroit

The Miles and Regent theatres, Detroit, Mich., long the property of Charles H. Miles, will soon be in the hands of the Fox Film Corporation, according to a seemingly well-founded rumor current in the Detroit trade. William Fox made a quiet visit to Detroit one day last week and is said to have conferred with Miles relative to a deal. Miles later went to New York. The Fox-Washington Theatre will need a new home shortly because of the coming expiration of the lease on the present house, and either the Regent or Miles would be a fitting substitute for a first-run. Miles recently closed his Ferry Field Theatre after an unsuccessful venture with stock and the house is now up for sale.

Northern New York

Albert and Nate Robbins of Syracuse, N. Y., were in Ithaca the other day with Architect R. C. Merrick looking over the site on which an option has been obtained for a proposed new house, financing for which will soon be completed. Albert Robbins has signed a contract for a ten-week lease of the Little Theatre in Ithaca, beginning January 4. Mr. Robbins will offer pictures and professional recitals. Patrick Conway will direct the ten-piece union orchestra.

The Shea Amusement Company will lease the theatre which the Bickford Realty Company is to build at Bailey and Kensington avenues, Buffalo, N. Y., for a term of twenty years. The house will seat 1,500 and cost $500,000. It will be named Shea's Kensington. A Wurlitzer unit orchestra organ will be installed. The house will be ready by September, 1926.

Reports received in Indianapolis from Evansville, Ind., indicate that a deal is pending in the latter city whereby the Victory Theatre building is to become the property of Universal Pictures Corporation for a consideration of approximately $1,000,000. Julius Singer, personal representative of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has been in Evansville conferring with officials of the Standard Evansville Realty Company, owner of the theatre building, which includes the Sonntag Hotel.

St. Louis

The Lyric, Sixth and Pine, and the Virginia Theatre, 5117 Virginia avenue, are now with the St. Louis Amusement Company's chain of second-run houses. All their pictures in the future will be booked through that company.

Los Angeles

West Coast Theatres, Inc., expects to have its new theatre in the Moneta-Manchester district of Los Angeles, costing $350,000, completed January 1, according to a statement issued by Michael Gore, president of the organization. The new theatre will seat 1,500 persons. Another new Los Angeles theatre will cost $100,000 and be erected at Main Street and Griffin Avenue by L. A. Smith. A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., stated that its new uptown theatre would be formally opened December 26. It will cost approximately $250,000.

Fred Miller, president of the Far West Theatres Corporation and former owner of the California and Miller's Main Street House, announces that a new theatre seating 2,500 and costing over $500,000 will be built on Hollywood Boulevard at Vermont. The building will be in charge of Ralph R. Lloyd with the architecture being executed by William Allen. Lew Bard, formerly of the Bard Theatre Syndicate, is vice-president and treasurer of the organization.

Another theatre to seat 900 will be built at 39th and Southwestern Avenue by W. E. Johansen. This will cost $35,000.

West Coast Theatres is planning the construction of a house to seat 2,000 and cost $200,000 to be built in the exclusive Wilshire district.

Nebraska

Right on the heels of the announcement that Universal Pictures Corporation is to build a $250,000 picture theatre at Grand Island, Neb., comes the news that the Cooper interests are to build a $310,000 theatre building in that city and lease it to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

THEATRE ROBBERS DRIVEN OFF

Arthur Black, manager of the Lincoln Square Theatre, Detroit, Mich., trapped two robbers in the basement of his theatre, last Saturday night, called the police and a shooting affray ensued that brought hundreds of people to the neighborhood. The robbers fired their way out of the building and escaped after an exchange of more than fifty shots. Black was counting the receipts upstairs when he heard a noise below. Investigating quietly, he found the robbers at work and skipped next door to call the police on the telephone.

Let's Look Back at the Old Days And See How Goldman Started

Titanic Disaster Assured His Success

By David F. Barrett

FIFTEEN years ago a gentleman of finance made a flying trip in one of the city's then few automobiles to prevent another gent from collecting an assortment of electric lights from an abandoned airdrome at Prairie and St. Louis avenues. Which explains why William Goldman, owner of the Kings Theatre on Kingshighway boulevard, was holding a fifteenth anniversary party at his theatre last week. For out of the argument that resulted from this encounter with the light collector was Goldman's career as an exhibitor launched.

They had a mutual interest. Both were in the red because of their relations with a mutual acquaintance and both were seeking to protect their own. One had advanced coin and the other labor towards an airdome venture that didn't work out just right.

The gent astride a twenty-foot ladder gave Goldman some sage advice about finance and pictures and ended with a recommendation that instead of permitting the airdome to be dismantled Goldman should put in a tent show on the site. Then to prove that he knew what he was talking about, he took Goldman on a tour of the city to see other tent shows that were making big money. Their first call was the tent at Fifteenth and Montgomery streets that was the foundation on which Harry Koplar, vice-president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, and his brothers built their fortunes.

A Poor Start

What he saw was convincing, and on November 21, 1910, Goldman launched his first show, his big black tent with some 1,200 seats filling the big lot at Prairie and St. Louis avenues.

His start was not auspicious. A $15 gate was an event and $3 about the average receipts. For 5 cents four one-reel pictures were shown on the screen. In those days Selig, Biograph, Vitagraph and Essanay were the big producers, while the General Film Company distributed the film for all of them.

For weeks and weeks Goldman struggled along trying to win the populace to his tent. It seemed that he was facing disaster, but it was a disaster that put him on his feet as an exhibitor.

His Big Chance

The majestic Titanic was speeding across the Atlantic on its maiden trip when an iceberg got in the path. The disaster that resulted shocked the entire world. The papers for weeks were filled with it, and in the very midst of it all Goldman one day found in his mail a letter in which a film man down in New York City offered to sell him actual pictures of the sinking of the Titanic for $6. There were twenty slides in the set.

He was new in the business then and snapped up the offer. He didn't have time to figure out how the New Yorker got the "actual" pictures.

Goldman was all pepped up with his prize and for days he figured out ways to properly advertise the pictures. He sent out a ballyhoo wagon to travel the streets in the vicinity of the tent show and also organized a boys' choir of six voices to give the proper atmosphere.

It probably was the first attempt anywhere to put over an atmospheric prologue for a feature picture. As one of the slides showed a ship dipping its nose into the briny Atlantic, the boys sang "Nearer My God to Thee" while the audience cried.

Crowds flocked to the tent. All were so anxious to see the Titanic pictures that some couldn't wait their turn at the box office and cut their way into the show. The next morning the big tent's sides were slashed in many places where knives had opened ways to choice seats. The audiences, like Goldman, actually believed the pictures were real. No one questioned their authenticity at the time.

Classy Trimmings

Prior to the big event many residents in that vicinity were antagonistic to the tent. Its outside appearance was against it, but inside it was fitted up in classy style. Instead of the bare earth, wooden aisles were provided and there were individual baseball grandstand seats for each patron instead of the long hard wooden benches customary in other tent shows. The interior was also nicely decorated with lights and lanterns, bunting and drapes. It was kept clean.

From then on patrons were assured and Goldman grew more ambitious. He originated "Circus Nights" that rivaled the big shows then touring the country under canvas. On one occasion he brought on a big elephant act that had played the New York Hippodrome in the heydey of its career.

High divers of international repute did their stuff—one with fatal results. Horses plunged into tanks from dizzy heights, bicycle riders rode across wires strung across Prairie avenue as the spotlight played on them.

On his country store nights Goldman gave away more hams and bacons than the average neighborhood butcher sold in a month. In fact, he was one of the biggest buyers of such products in St. Louis. For blocks around could be heard the cackling of prize chickens, turkeys and geese.

Fooled Police Sergeant

Some of his "stunts" were so dazzling that on occasions the precinct sergeant found it necessary to interpose an official objection. One of these was a hair-raising slippery pole climbing contest for boys. The pole towered some 100 feet into the air and the police officer had visions of several casualties. To give the proper atmosphere Goldman had a placarded ambulance and nurses on hand for "an emergency." And when an employe did fall a fake M. D. rushed forth to give medical assistance. It was then the sergeant learned he had been hoaxed.

From his tent Goldman started to expand. He took over the Maffitt Theatre, Vanderventer avenue and Maffit street, in 1912 and the New Lindell Theatre in 1915. It was about that time that Director of Public Safety McKelvey issued the order that sounded the death knell of tent shows. A few years later Goldman completed the Grand-Florissant Theatre.

In 1919 he went to the Kings for the first time. At that time that house with the Pershing was operated by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation. The following year that company purchased all of Goldman's houses with the string of neighborhood theatres owned by Harry Koplar.

Became Operating Head

Goldman was made general manager for the company. During his regime the Delmonte and Missouri Theatres were opened by the Paramount interests. The Delmonte opened on Labor Day, 1920, and the Missouri on November 6, the same year. He continued in charge of the Missouri until 1923.

For a few months he was out of the picture business, but in May, 1924, again took charge of the Kings Theatre and Garden. Later he added the Queens and Rivoli.

Several weeks ago an agreement was filed with Recorder of Deeds Tamme whereby he and Skouras Brothers are to form a company to operate the Kings, Grand Central and West End Lyric when the Ambassador Theatre is completed by Skouras Brothers. Goldman will have 45 per cent. of the stock of the new operating company and Skouras Brothers 55 per cent., according to the agreement.

In recent weeks Goldman has taken over the Woodland and Kingsland Theatres on Gravois avenue and has announced plans for new theatres at St. Louis and Union avenues, Hodiamont avenue near Easton avenue and at Eighteenth and Park avenues. He will also build a 1,500-seat airdome adjoining the Kingsland Theatre. Among his assets he lists a lease on the Union Theatre property to take effect in 1927 and a half interest in the Congress Theatre.

VANGUARD'S NEW YORK ADDRESS

Vanguard Motion Pictures, Inc., incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware, filed papers with the secretary of state in Albany during the past week stating that its New York State office address would be at 152 West 42nd street, New York City. The papers were signed by Samuel A. Bloch as president of the company and reveal the capitalization of the company to consist of 2,000 shares of preferred stock of $50 par value, and 4,000 shares of common stock having no par value. The filing of the papers gives the company the right to bring any necessary court action in the courts of New York State.

WITHDRAW COMPLAINT

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has withdrawn its complaint against Henry Tammen of the Moon Theatre, Yankton, S. D., whom they had charged with breach of contract. The complaint involved the sum of $1,740.

Laemmle Off to Sign with Ufa; Names Stars to Be "Swapped"

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, sailed for Europe on the Leviathan on December 5. Accompanying him were Sigmund Moos, leasing manager at Universal City, California; Hans Winter, inventor; Henry Henigson, business manager at Universal City, and formerly supervising manager of Universal's exchanges in Europe; J. H. Ross, Mr. Laemmle's secretary; Carl Laemmle, Jr., Miss Rosabelle Laemmle and her friend, Miss Estelle Cohen.

Laemmle is going abroad to consummate a big international deal whereby through the loan of $3,600,000 to Ufa, the greatest of the producing, releasing and exhibiting companies of Germany he secures for Universal the entree to their 600 theatres, not only for Universal pictures but for nearly 100 other American-made productions. These are to be chosen by a committee composed of Ufa and Universal officials. The productions of all of the best American manufacturers are now eligible for entry into Germany through Laemmle's deal, whereas, before, 90 per cent. of them were excluded by the German government import law known as Kontingent.

Through this same arrangement, Laemmle intends to exchange not only productions with Ufa, whose biggest pictures will be released through Universal in the future, but stars and directors as well. It is quite possible that Mary Philbin, Reginald Denny, Lon Chaney, Norman Kerry, Laura LaPlante, Virginia Valli, Louise Dresser and Jean Hersholt will make individual trips to the Ufa studios, and that stars like Emil Jannings, Werner Krauss, Lya de Putti, Zenia Desni, Lil Dagovar and Conrad Zeidt will be brought to Universal City, Cal., for Universal productions.

Mae Murray sailed on the Majestic the same day to discuss the terms of her own contract with Ufa, which takes on an entirely new significance since the Ufa pictures are to be released by Universal in America. Miss Murray was formerly a Universal star.

Laemmle has also just consummated a tremendous theatre deal in this country whereby he has turned over the Universal theatres to the Universal Chain Theatres Corporation, which is just announcing a $7,000,000 issue of 8 per cent. preferred stock.

The Universal chief will be abroad for eight or ten weeks.

MASTBAUM REALTY COMPANY

A $10,000,000 realty corporation has been organized by Jules E. Mastbaum, chartered as the Elrae Corporation but operating in Atlantic City as the Stanley Atlantic Realty Company. The company has already bought Atlantic City real estate worth over $3,000,000.

Tracy Laughs at Locomotives

MIKE TRACY, owner of the Princess Theatre, Storm Lake, Ia., has been confined to his bed following a smash-up when a train struck his automobile, demolished it and rolled him around in the gravel and cinders. His friends consider him one of the most fortunate men in the world to be alive, as he actually appeared to be under the train a part of the time.

The accident occurred just before his house was to have its formal opening at Storm Lake. Friendly exchange representatives took charge of the opening and put it across in good shape. Mr. Tracy will be in bed for some time nursing a broken hip and numerous bruises.

First National Announces Big Exploitation Contest for January

ONE of the big features of First National Month, January, 1926, announced by First National Pictures, Inc., is an exploitation contest that promises substantial rewards for exhibitors conducting theatres of all sizes.

In addition to the cash prizes totalling $2,000, exhibitors whose work is of conspicuous merit will receive recognition through an Honor Roll on which their names will be inscribed. This honor roll will be given prominence in the national trade publications and every exhibitor who is included will receive a parchment testimonial carrying the name of the manager and his theatre and signed by the contest judges and officials of First National.

The contest is open to all. It is designed as an incentive to effective showmanship and as a means of bringing recognition to those directly responsible for fine achievements in this important department of the motion picture business. It is believed that scattered all over the country are many exhibitors who are carrying out original ideas which should be brought to the attention of their fellow workers in other communities. One essential purpose of the contest is to give credit where credit is due and to reveal the leading showman in the country.

Reputation counts for nothing. Accomplishment is all that will be considered. The exhibitor whose name has never been heard beyond the boundaries of his home town has just as good a chance as the managers of the largest theatres in the country. The most famous exhibitors in the United States gained their first experience in small towns.

The judges of the contest, editors of the leading national trade papers, are, from long experience and an intimate study of the subject, ideally qualified to select the best of the exhibits submitted. The judges are: William A. Johnston, editor, Motion Picture News; Joseph Dannenberg, editor, Film Daily; Martin J. Quigley, editor, Exhibitors Herald; Willard C. Howe, editor, Exhibitors Trade Review; William T. Reilly, editor, Moving Picture World, and George E. Bradley, editor, Morning Telegraph.

In drawing up the rules governing the contest, which are printed in full on this page, the judges determined upon a classification of theatres that would give every exhibitor an equal opportunity. The classifications are based on seating capacity and take into consideration the variety in methods of exploitation needed for large city theatres, neighborhood houses and theatres in small towns. The prizes to be awarded exhibitors in the No. 3 classification (houses seating less than 1,000) are the same as those designated for the No. 1 class (houses seating over 1,500) and the No. 2 class (houses of from 1,000 to 1,499 capacity).

All exhibitors are considered of equal importance in the development of the motion picture business.

In the distribution of the $2,000 in prizes donated by First National, an effort was made to cover all branches of advertising, publicity and exploitation, the largest prizes in all three classes being awarded for a complete campaign on First National Month and the productions shown during that period.

The complete campaign covers newspaper advertising, exploitation stunts, free publicity, lobby displays, everything, in fact, that contributes to the arousing of public interest in First National Month. The cumulative value of the campaign covering the weeks of January will be considered in reaching a decision.

While the three biggest prizes naturally go to the exhibitors in each class presenting the best complete campaigns, it is realized that some single feature of an exhibitor's exploitation, advertising or publicity may warrant special notice. In view of this, prizes of $50 are offered in each class for the best newspaper advertising, the most original exploitation stunt and the finest lobby display. Also, there is a prize of $50 open to all for the most effective newspaper publicity.

The advertising department of First National Pictures has prepared a complete line of special free accessories, including paper, banners, colored heralds, etc., to assist exhibitors in putting over First National Month in a big way. Also, an eight-page press sheet filled with original ideas, has been prepared on the campaign and will be mailed to exhibitors next week.

The contest is open throughout January. It is important that exhibits showing in as complete detail as possible just how exhibitors conducted their campaigns, shall be mailed to the Exploitation Contest Committe, First National Pictures, 383 Madison avenue, New York City, as early as possible. In order to be eligible for the contest, all contributions must be received by the committee not later than February 21, 1926.

Gotham Announces Staff for Next Release "Speed Limit"

Advice received from Hollywood this week states that the entire production unit that recently made "One of the Bravest," will be used intact for the ninth and next Gotham Production which is definitely titled "The Speed Limit."

This story is an original by Jas. J. Tynan who also wrote "The Overland Limited" and "One of the Bravest" two very successful Gotham's this season and relates of the exciting time gone through by one young man in trying to put a new auto tire on the market. The big punch comes in an automobile race which is said to be photographed in an entirely new manner.

Frank O'Connor will handle the megaphone and his production manager and assistant director will be Glenn Belt.

Terms Covering Exploitation Contest

THE contest is open to all exhibitors. Cash prizes totalling $2,000 will be given for the best campaigns conducted on First National Month, January, 1926.

2. Theatres of from 1,000 to 1,499 seating capacity.

In addition, one prize of $50 will be awarded for the most effective newspaper stunt used by any theatre in any classification	50
TOTAL OF PRIZES	$2,000

All exhibits must be received by the Contest Editor, First National Pictures, Inc., 383 Madison Avenue, New York City, not later than midnight, February 21st, 1926.

In the event of two or more contributions being deemed of equal merit by the judges, the prize tied for will be awarded to each entrant.

The complete campaigns will be judged on the basis of the best newspaper advertising, publicity stories, stunts, program matter, lobby displays, ballyhoos, presentations and their contribution to the success of First National Month. Effectiveness of display, originality, attractiveness and ingenuity of design, and the showmanship revealed in each effort will be the chief considerations in determining the best. The judges should receive photos of stunts and other data properly captioned, together with a complete story of the exhibitor's exploitation efforts throughout First National Month.

Announcement of prize-winners will be made in the trade-papers March 12th, 1926.

WHEN ARTHUR BRISBANE recently visited Paramount's West Coast studio Mary Brian (of "Peter Pan" fame) had to tell the glorious story of the little boy who did not want to grow up. Three interested listeners were the Brisbane kiddies.

M.-G.-M.'s "Trackless Train" Arrives Again in Los Angeles

METRO - GOLDWYN - MAYER'S Trackless Train is back home in Los Angeles, having completed an exceedingly successful trip from Seattle, Wash., without mishap and having thereby considerably added to the immense prestige which it already holds up and down the Coast and throughout the country as the most effective ballyhoo ever known to the industry.

The special made its first trip from Indianapolis, where it was manufactured, to New York, and then toured New England. It then returned to New York, and set out on its trip across the continent. This historic journey it accomplished with immense success, being greeted everywhere with unexampled enthusiasm. Its arrival in Los Angeles on completing its cross-country trip from New York was celebrated by an immense ovation. It was then shipped by boat to Seattle, and has now made its return trip in less than two weeks, meeting with tremendous demonstrations at every stop, particularly in Olympia, capital of Washington, where the Governor of the state welcomed it officially, and in Portland, Ore.

Ovations were accorded the train by the California towns of Sacramento, Lodi, Stockton, Modesta, Turlock, Merced, Madera, Fresno, Hanford, Visalia, Exeter, Lindsay, Porterville, Delana, Bakersfield, San Bernardino and Culver City. Most of these towns turned out almost their entire populations to greet the special, and at most of these stops the train was greeted officially by the committees including the Mayor, city officials, exhibitors and representatives of the press.

In Hollywood the train has been parked before Grauman's Theatre bearing a sign exploiting King Vidor's "The Big Parade." Its daily trips and long stops before the theatre are attracting thousands daily.

Chaplin in "The Gold Rush" Goes Over Big in France

CHARLIE CHAPLIN in "The Gold Rush" has become a sensation at the Marivaux Theatre, Paris, France. Parisian daily newspapers seldom review motion pictures, but in the case of the Chaplin production they devoted much space to lengthy criticisms of high praise for the star and appreciation of the picture.

"'The Gold Rush' is a complete entertainment," said Le Journal. "There is drama, comedy, the most delightful satire —all is there and harmoniously blended without a single false note."

"Chaplin's film is to the screen what the plays of Moliere represent to the stage," said the Paris Soir, which is about the highest praise a Frenchman could give to any production.

Le Petit Journal thought that "The Gold Rush" should be seen not only by Chaplin's myriads of admirers, but by every one who will not fail to pay homage and to recognize in Chaplin "the one great artist who best appreciates the art of the motion picture."

"Charlie Chaplin is his old familiar self," said L'Intransigeant, "but he plays in 'The Gold Rush' with such infinitely fine art that he makes the picture a masterpiece in which nothing is lacking."

"Charlie Chaplin's greatest picture," said Paris-Midi.

Los Angeles Exchange Manager Heads Fox West Coast Publicity

With the appointment of R. M. Yost as head of its west coast publicity department, Fox Films now has two publicity chiefs well experienced in exhibitors' problems. Mr. Yost, who achieved considerable distinction as publicity representative of Oliver Morosco when the latter was producing "Peg o' My Heart" and other hits, has been serving as manager of the Los Angeles exchange. Gerald K. Rudulph, publicity manager at the Fox home office in New York, was formerly manager of the Buffalo exchange.

The appointment of Mr. Yost was announced by James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, who has been visiting Hollywood on his current tour of the United States.

Aged Character Man Is Signed by Columbia

Thomas Ricketts, who made such an outstanding hit in the Columbia production 'Steppin' Out," has been signed by this producing organization to play character roles. Ricketts' contract extends over a long period.

Thomas Ricketts is one of the oldest character men in the motion picture industry, having passed his seventy-eighth birthday. Prior to entering pictures this comedian was well known on the legitimate stage.

Ricketts has played comedy roles in many Columbia pictures, the latest of which is "Fate of a Flirt," in which Dorothy Revier and Forrest Stanley are featured, the splendid cast also includes Harlan Tucker, Phillip Smalley, Clarissa Selwynne and others.

Crone Cutting "Nutcracker," First Hutchinson Production

With shooting completed under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, "The Nutcracker," first of the Hutchinson Film Corporation pictures personally supervised by Samuel S. Hutchinson for Associated Exhibitors release, has been sent to the cutting room, where George Crone, conceded to be one of the best cutting experts in the business, has been delgated to cut and edit the production.

Mr. Crone, who has handled all the Douglas MacLean pictures, among the many which he has been associated with in the past, believes that in "The Nutcracker" Mr. Hutchinson has one of the outstanding comedies of the season; and this is no slight praise from such a source. Edward Everett Horton and Mae Busch took the leading roles, with the stage and screen star cast as a humble broker's clerk who "gets out of the rut" in a spectacular manner and poses through most of the production as the wealthy "Mr. Peters of Peru," with uproarious comedy results.

Branch Heads Please Exhibitors

Associated Exhibitors Sales Head Receives Congratulatory Letters on Field Appointments

Some idea of the standing in the field of the men being rallied under Associated Exhibitors' banner by Sales Manager E. J. Smith might be gleaned from the shower of congratulatory telegrams and letters that poured into the Associated home offices last week. From all over the country came messages regarding the reorganization of the Associated sales force in general, and in particular with reference to the appointments as District Sales Directors of Dan B. Lederman, Lester Theuerkauf and Lew Thompson, not to mention the appointments to branch managerships of J. S. Mednokow, Al Blofson, Raleigh T. Good and others.

A sample of the tenor of the messages is contained in the telegrams sent to Mr. Smith by Phil L. Ryan, of Capitol Enterprises, Kansas City, anent the selection of Mr. Lederman as District Sales Director covering the Associated offices in Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Denver and Winnipeg, which reads:

"Myself and other exhibitors this territory welcome our western comrade Dan Lederman back. Congratulate you on your selection. Undoubtedly will have hearty approval of Southwestern Exhibitors."

Julian Eltinge Planning Another Personal Tour

In compliance with a number of exhibitors' requests, Julian Eltinge featured in the Al. Christie feature "Madam Behave" is preparing to make a series of personal appearances with the picture, under arrangements made through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Just prior to playing the title role in "Madam Behave," Eltinge concluded a personal appearance tour on which he broke the house records of some twenty-five motion picture theatres. On that tour he was unaccompanied by any picture. His reputation as a big time vaudeville entertainer served as the only drawing force. On the tour he is now planning, his appearance on the screen in "Madam Behave," as well as in person, will be a double-barrelled attraction that should bring down the prevailing record at every theatre where he appears.

Gets Many Big Bookings

Richard Barthelmess In "Just Suppose" One Of First National's Big Releases

"Just Suppose," the Inspiration-First National picture starring Richard Barthelmess, will be one of the big productions released during First National Month. The release date set is January 17, and simultaneous bookings are being secured in the leading theatres in key cities. Special advertising on "Just Suppose" has been placed in national magazines and other mediums and it is planned to give this latest Barthelmess production the strongest sort of exploitation.

The story was taken from a play by A. E. Thomas and narrates the experiences of the young son of the king of a small principality of southern Europe. The Prince visits America and becomes involved in an interesting chain of unusual circumstances.

Kenneth Webb directed and the cast includes among others, Lois Moran, Geoffrey Kerr and Bijou Fernandez.

ON GUARD—Strong feeling in this moment between Milton Sills and Charles Beyer in First National's "The Unguarded Hour."

Olive Borden Signs Long Contract with Fox Films

OLIVE BORDEN played the role of the fiery little Manuelita with Tom Mix in "The Yankee Senor" with such skill that she has been engaged under a five year contract to appear exclusively in William Fox productions, according to an announcement from the Fox studios.

At present she is appearing as the heroine in "3 Bad Men," an epic romance of the American frontier being filmed by John Ford. George O'Brien plays the leading role, J. Farrell MacDonald, Frank Campeau and big Tom Santschi are the "3 Bad Men" and Lou Tellegen is the villain of the piece.

Miss Borden, a slender, little black-haired girl who measures only one inch over five feet, was born in Norfolk, Virginia, just nineteen years ago. Her father, Harry Borden, scion of the old Boston family, died when she was only fourteen months old. So Olive and her mother, the former Sibbie Shield, returned to the old Shield plantation in Virginia.

From the time she was a little girl, Miss Borden was ambitious to become a great actress. She appeared in amateur theatricals with considerable success. Despite the conservative tradition of her family and her training in Mount Saint Agnes Academy, an exclusive convent school in Baltimore, she persisted in her dramatic activities. Finally she persuaded her mother to accompany her to Hollywood.

Her first job there was in the Screen Writer's Revue. Later she acted in comedies on the Fine Arts and Hal Roach lots, usually in siren roles. Then came her big chance as Tom Mix' leading lady in "The Yankee Senor." When that was completed John Ford, director of "The Iron Horse," secured her services as the leading lady in his company making "3 Bad Men."

Her five year contract with Fox Films marks the zenith of her meteoric rise.

Eleanor Boardman to Play in Metro's "Auction Block"

ELEANOR BOARDMAN has won the much coveted role of Lorelei Knight, heroine of "The Auction Block," and will appear opposite Charles Ray in that production, according to an announcement made by Hunt Stromberg, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executive.

During her career as a leading woman at the M-G-M studio, Miss Boardman has played leading roles in such productions as: "Exchange of Wives," "The Way of a Girl," "So This Is Marriage," "Wife of the Centaur," "The Circle," and "The Only Thing."

Henley has started "The Auction Block" making the sceond Rex Beach story now in production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, the other being "The Barrier," under the direction of George Hill with Norman Kerry, Lionel Barrymore, Henry B. Walthall, Marceline Day and Marion Carillo in the featured roles.

As Lorelei Knight, Miss Boardman will have the part of the winner of a beauty contest.

"THE CLASH OF THE WOLVES" is the current Warner Bros.' release, starring Rin-Tin-Tin, the famous dog actor; but among the charming human actors in the picture will be found June Marlowe, who, when not being chosen by great artists as a prize beauty, enhances the Warner Bros.' features with her charm and talent.

Thalberg Back at Studio Following Weeks of Illness

IRVING G. THALBERG, associate executive at the Metro-Goldwn-Mayer studios, has returned to his work after an illness of several weeks. Mr. Thalberg has been active in the production of numerous successes for the Culver City organization, and has been sorely missed at the studios. It was under his supervision that King Vidor produced "The Big Parade," the Laurence Stallings story starring John Gilbert and adapted to the screen by Harry Behn. Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow" starring Mae Murray and John Gilbert and based on the Lehar-Leon-Stein operetta as produced on the stage by Henry W. Savage and adapted by Director von Stroheim and Benjamin Glazer, is also a Thalberg production.

Forthcoming productions of which Mr. Thalberg has charge include King Vidor's "La Boheme," starring Lillian Gish and based on the Henri Murger classic, "The Latin Quarter," adapted by Mme. Fred Degresac and scenarized by Harry Behn; "Brown of Harvard," directed by Jack Conway from the Rida Johnson Young stage success adapted to the screen by Dorothy Farnum and continuitized by A. P. Younger; Rafael Sabatini's "Bardelys the Magnificent," starring John Gilbert and directed by King Vidor, and "The Temptress," by Blasco Ibanez, a Cosmopolitan production for M-G-M adapted to the screen by Dorothy Farnum, who is also scenarizing "Bardelys the Magnificent."

Among recent M-G-M successes made under Thalberg's supervision are Tod Browning's "The Unholy Three," a Tod Robbins story scenarized by Waldemar Young and featuring Lon Chaney and Mae Busch; "Lights of Old Broadway," the Cosmopolitan production for M-G-M starring Marion Davies and based on "Merry Wives of Gotham," the Laurence Eyre stage success adapted to the screen by Carey Wilson, and Victor Seastrom's "The Tower of Lies," starring Norma Shearer and Lon Chaney. Agnes Christine Johnston adapted the latter production to the screen from the Selma Lagerlof novel "The Emperor of Portugallia."

Marion Davis Begins Work On "Beverly of Graustark"

MARION DAVIES has begun work on "Beverly of Graustark," her new starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the Culver City studios under the direction of Sydney Franklin with one of the best casts assembled for any production this year.

George K. Arthur, famous M-G-M comedian, is playing Prince Oscar in the well known George Barr McCutcheon story, which has been adapted to the screen by Agnes Christine Johnston.

Roy D'Arcy, who crashed into the public eye with his portrayal of the Crown Prince in Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow," the Lehar-Leon-Stein operetta starring John Gilbert and Mae Murray and adapted to the screen by Director von Stroheim and Benjamin Glazer, has the role of the General in Miss Davies' new film.

As previously announced, Antonio Moreno has the leading male role opposite the star. Moreno has recently returned from abroad, where he played opposite Alice Terry in "Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea), the Rex Ingram production for Metro-Goldwyn of the Blasco Ibanez novel adapted to the screen by Willis Goldbeck.

Lavish settings and magnificent costumes are going into the filming of "Beverly of Graustark." This romantic story deals with intrigue and love among figures residing in a mythical European kingdom.

Director Sydney Franklin has been loaned to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for this special production by Joseph H. Schenck.

Strong Cast is Recruited For Warner's "Bride of Storm"

AN uncommonly interesting and well-selected cast has been recruited for "Bride of the Storm," formerly entitled "Maryland, My Maryland," which J. Stuart Blackton is making for Warner Bros. The roster is, in fact, almost an honor roll of players whose past performances have been many and noteworthy.

Dolores Costello and John Harron are starred, Miss Costello appearing as Faith Fitzhugh, shipwrecked orphan who is raised by a Dutch lighthouse keeper off the coast of China, and Harron as Dick, an officer from a United States battleship.

Tyrone Power, Shakespearian actor who played the king in John Barrymore's production of "Hamlet," masterfully creates the character of Jacob Kroon, the gruff old lighthouse keeper.

Sheldon Lewis, who, besides extensive engagements in Shakesperian roles and on the modern stage, is known for his many screen successes, portrays the brutal son, Piet Kroon. Otto Matiesen, an exceedingly versatile player with a long list of distinguished performances to his credit, plays Hans Kroon, Piet's motherless son; Julia Swayne Gordon appears in a short prologue scene as little Faith's mother, and adorable Evon Pelletier impersonates Faith at the age of eight.

Others in the cast include Ira McFadden as "Heinie" Krutz, Tutor Owen as "Funeral" Harry, Fred Scott as "Spike" Mulligan, Don Stewart as Angus McLain, Walter Tennyson as Ensign Clinton and Larry Steers as commander of the war ship.

Charles Chaplin to Make Genuine Circus Pictures

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the Charlie Chaplin studio that he is getting ready to make a circus picture as his next offering to the motion picture screen.

The picture will go into production under the title "The Circus," and it is reported that the Chaplin studios at Hollywood now closely resemble the permanent headquarters for a big circus. The 'big top' and the 'blues' are up, the sawdust and tanbark rings are in place, while the performers and the animals face a busy winter season. The interior stage has been transformed into a circus gymnasium, where Chaplin and his co-workers daily go through a routine of trick stunts.

The circus story for the forthcoming picture, conceived by Chaplin, is woven about a series of ludicrous situations. Built for laughter it is Chaplin's intention to turn out a low-brow comedy for the highbrow, and a picture that will satisfy the most exacting critic, as well as the entire movie public. While the film may contain a few whimsical ingredients, as well as a dash of love interest, the story will be entirely devoid of either extreme pathos or tragedy.

In no way, it is stated, will "The Circus" resemble the story of "The Clown," of which previous mention has been made by Mr. Chaplin and others from time to time; and, while the action will center around the "big tops," Chaplin will not appear in the usual garb of the circus funny man, or the usual clown of the sawdust ring, but will be seen again in his own peculiar and well known habiliments—the baggy trousers, the trick hat and cane, the big shoes and the little mustache.

Actual camera work on "The Circus" has not been started as yet, but tests have been made, and it is expected that within a few days all will be in readniess to begin shooting. Rollie Totheroh and Jack Wilson, who have been the Chaplin cameramen for the last ten years, will again be chief photographers.

Georgia Hale, the Girl in the current Chaplin release, "The Gold Rush," is cast in a similar role in "The Circus" and will be seen as a dancer and equestrienne. Henry Bergman will again be seen in the cast of "The Circus" in the role of the ring master. In addition to his normal permanent staff Chaplin has for this forthcoming picture Harry Crocker and Milt Gross, who will aid in the creation of comedy situations.

No Production Slump At Metropolitan Studio

THE slump in production activity that usually strikes the West coast studios about this time of the year, will not be felt at the Metropolitan Studio this season.

The Metropolitan Studio is working at top speed at the present time, and the production schedule is so heavy that a new covered stage and various studio improvements are under way in order to keep step with the demand for "shooting" pace.

Filming on "Rocking Moon" is nearing completion. The George Melford company is making interior scenes at the studio to add to the colorful sequences secured during their five-weeks location trip to Sitka, Alaska. Barrett Willoughby, the author of "Rocking Moon," is now at the studio conferring with Melford. Lilyyan Tashman, John Bowers, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Laska Winter, Luke Cosgrave and Eugene Pallette have the leading roles in "Rocking Moon."

Director Scott Sidney is using his comedy experience to inject an undercurrent of broad humor into "The Million Dollar Handicap," the race track thriller with a new twist, in which Vera Reynolds, Edmund Burns, Ralph Lewis, Clarence Burton, Ward Crane and Tom Wilson have leading parts.

"The Danger Girl," Priscilla Dean's initial Metropolitan picture, is now well under way, with Edward Dillon at the megaphone. This is an adaptation of the play, "The Bride," in which Peggy Wood starred on Broadway. The supporting cast includes John Bowers, Cissy Fitzgerald, Arthur Hoy, Gustave Von Seyffertitz and Clarence Burton.

To Exhibit "Ben Hur" Chariots In Connection with Production

THE twelve chariots used in the great race scene of the Antioch Circus sequence of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Ben Hur," are to be shown to the public throughout the United States and Canada.

These examples of ancient art and workmanship are the result of vast study and research. Men scoured libraries, ruins and museums in Italy, Egypt, Palestine and elsewhere to make sure these replicas would be as near exact and historically correct as possible.

The carved figures on each represent matters of historic import and the design of each vehicle is as near the right period and national aspect as it was possible to make them.

The twelve chariots in the great "Ben Hur" race are representative of a dozen distinct and different nationalities, as the race of Antioch, according to the best authorities was the really notable international affair of the time.

The harness for the horses of each char is different.

HEART THROBS AND TENSE MOMENTS predominate in the current Universal-Jewel release, "The Storm Breaker," in which House Peters, one of the greatest of screen stars, is capably supported by Ruth Clifford, herself a star of the first magnitude.

Paramount Announces Thirty Features on Schedule for First Half of New Year

A GROUP of showman's pictures, produced in the belief that Spring and Summer demand just as big pictures as the winter season, will be offered exhibitors by Paramount during the first half of 1926, according to the company's announcement of its new season's schedule.

There will be 30 attractions in this group. Each will be made, says the announcement, on a scale unprecedented in the production of Spring and Summer output. The group will represent an expenditure in excess of the cost of any Fall and Winter program.

Paramount, in planning and producing these forthcoming pictures, has been guided by the conviction that it is a poor policy to minimize box offiec power in pictures scheduled for Spring and Summer release. To put less of money-making value in Spring and Summer pictures than in product schedules for Fall and Winter is a procedure that belongs to the past, says the company.

"In the motion picture business today," says the announcement, "there can be no seasonal division of production effort. Program pictures will not do the trick. The public wants big stuff and wants it all the time."

New Idea in Vogue

Paramount's aim in the planning and production of these offerings has been twofold. First, pictures must be made which will encourage a steady attendance on the part of a theatre's regular clientele. Second, these same attractions must contain the elements which make a direct appeal to the potential patrons. Paramount believes that its new season's product has universal appeal, a condition essential to increased patronage.

"The selection of stories, of new ideas, of casts, of directors for this group," says the announcement, "is being followed up by the most elaborate and painstaking production work in the history of motion pictures. The slogan is, 'Make it bigger, make it better and forget the season of the year.'"

"Exhibitors will do well to analyze this product, to study the box office names in Paramount's stock company, to check up the history of actual delivery of promises that characterizes Paramount above all others."

Already the advertising and publicity on this group are reaching millions daily, assuring exhibitors of a ready-made audience.

Included in the new season's product are outstanding specials, pictures whose qualities entitle them to exceptional exploitation. They are: Harold Lloyd's First Paramount picture, "For Heaven's Sake," "The Vanishing American," "The Wanderer," "Sea Horses," "The Rainmaker," "Fresh Paint," "It's the Old Army Game," "The Song and Dance Man," "Dancing Mothers," "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," and "The Blind Goddess."

In "For Heaven's Sake," Harold Lloyd will have as many laughs as "The Freshman," and may be more. Sam Taylor is directing. In addition to Lloyd and Taylor, authors and gag men on the picture are Ted Wilde, Tim Whelan, Clyde Bruckman and John Grey. Jobyna Ralston will again be the star's leading woman. This is a March 1 release.

SIDNEY R. KENT
A considerable amount of detail work attaching to the selection, production and distribution of the "1926-Thirty" rested upon the "high tension" General Manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"The Vanishing American" is Paramount's screen version of Zane Grey's epic romance of the Indian. This picture, which George B. Seitz directed, with Richard Dix, Lois Wilson and Noah Beery in principal roles, has met with glowing success in all its prerelease showings in different sections of the country. Released February 15.

"The Wanderer"

"The Wanderer" is a spectacular production of the Biblical episode of the Prodigal Son. Critics have heralded this Raoul Walsh attraction as greater than "The Ten Commandments." Special praise has been accorded the work of Ernest Torrence, Gretna Nissen, William Collier, Jr., Kathlyn Williams and Tyrone Power. This is a February 1 release, the first release of the new season.

"Sea Horses" is an adaptation of the great magazine serial written by Francis Brett Young. Allan Dwan is now producing it with Jack Holt, Florence Vidor and Geo. Bancroft in the leading parts. One of the most spectacular tornadoes in pictures and a shipwreck are among the highlights of this picture. Theatres will get this production on March 15.

"The Rainmaker" is Gerald Beaumont's red-blooded love drama of the race track which ran serially in Red Book Magazine under the title, "Heaven Bound." This story, which Allan Dwan will direct, is one of the most unusual ever written. Bessie Love has been chosen for the leading feminine role. It is a May 3 release.

"Fresh Paint" is another of Raymond Griffith's laugh provoking comedies. This will be a typical Griffith story and production—humor, gags, romance, fast action and original treatment. April 26 is the release date.

W. C. Fields is Starred

"It's the Old Army Game" will bring W. C. Fields to the screen as a Paramount star. The star has won millions of followers through his exceptional portrayals in "Sally of the Sawdust" and "That Royle Girl." On the screen, Fields is funnier—if that is possible—than on the stage. Clara Bow will support the star in this picture which will be released on May 10.

"The Song and Dance Man" is a George M. Cohan comedy with laughs and tears galore. Herbert Brenon, who has produced such successes as "A Kiss for Cinderella," "The Street of Forgotten Men" and others, directed this picture, which has in its cast such noted players as Tom Moore, Bessie Love and Harrison Ford. The background of this picture is back stage Broadway. It will be released February 8.

"Dancing Mothers" is now in production at the Long Island studio under the direction of Herbert Brenon. This successful stage play, with its contrasting scenes of heart interest and colorful depiction of gay life, was written by Edgar Selwyn and Edmund Goulding. Box office names in the cast include Conway Tearle, Alice Joyce, Clara Bow and Donald Keith. March 8 has been selected for release.

"The Grand Duchess and the Waiter" is another adaptation of a successful stage play—the charming and original comedy by Alfred Savoir. Malcolm St. Clair, whose subtle handling of situations has carried him to the forefront among directors, handled the megaphone on this fast, gorgeously dressed comedy. Adolphe Menjou and Florence Vidor are featured. It will be released on February 8.

"The Blind Goddess" is the story by Arthur Train which ran in the Designer and cost that magazine $50,000. It will be published in book form this winter by Scribners. Victor Fleming will direct. Thus far only Dolores Costello and Tully Marshall have been chosen for the cast. "The Blind Goddess" is a strong drama of the "Manslaughter" type, although it is much bigger in scope and power. It will be released March 1.

Nineteen pictures compose the balance of the group of 30 showman's pictures. Each of these has in it elements that combine to make box office success. They are: "Behind the Front," "Moana," "The Peacock Parade," "Miss Brewster's Millions," "A Florida Romance," (tentative title), "Cross my Heart," "Untamed," "Wild Geese," "I'll See You Tonight," "That's My Baby," Desert Gold," "Volcano," "The Palm Beach Girl," "The Secret Spring," "Take a Chance," "Crossroads of the World," "The Deer Drive," "Grass" and "The Lucky Lady."

"Moana" was produced in the South Sea Island by Robert Flaherty, maker of "Nanook of the North." It is a true romance of the real South Seas and to produce it Flaherty lived the life of the natives for 20 months. It has been hailed by critics as the greatest contribution to the screen. The release has been set for February 22.

"The Peacock Parade" is a timely pre-Easter release, with Pola Negri, a big supporting cast, 100 beautiful girls and many gorgeous gowns. The picture will be a gay, sophisticated society comedy directed by Raoul Walsh. It will go to the theatres March 15.

"Miss Brewster's Millions," with Bebe Daniels and Ford Sterling, is a fast funny society comedy—a George Barr McCutcheon comedy idea in reverse English. Clarence Badger will handle the megaphone. Released March 22.

"A Florida Romance" (tentative title) will have for its background the real estate boom in Florida and a baseball training camp. Thomas Meighan will star in the attraction, the story for which has been written by Ring Lardner, noted humorist. Lila Lee will have the leading feminine role. This will be released March 22, just when the public is beginning to turn its attention toward baseball.

"Cross My Heart" will be a screen adaptation of H. A. Dusouchet's famous stage farce, "The Man from Mexico." Richard Dix will star in this fast moving comedy with Lois Wilson playing opposite him. Gregory LaCava, director of Dix's "Woman-handled," will handle the megaphone.

"Untamed" brings Gloria Swanson to the screen in a modern version of "The Taming of the Shrew." Fannie Hurst has written the story and production is now under way at the Long Island studio under the direction of Frank Tuttle. Lawrence Gray will again be the star's leading man.

Prize Novel to be Screened

"Wild Geese" (tentative title) is the novel by Martha Ostenso which won the $13,500 prize awarded by Pictorial Review, Dodd Mead & Company and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the best American novel of the year. It will be produced on a spectacular scale by Wiliam de Mille. April 5 will be the release date.

An April 12 release.

"Desert Gold" is another Zane Grey Western melodrama which will be directed by George Seitz, the man who made "The Vanishing American." Lucien Hubbard will supervise production. In the cast will be Jack Holt, Billie Dove and Noah Beery. It will be released April 19.

It is a murder mystery melodrama tempered with romance. Leonce Perret directed it. It will be released May 24.

W. C. FIELDS
This talented stage star knocked screen fans for a "fare-ye-well" in D. W. Griffith's "Sally of the Sawdust" and "That Royle Girl," and, now advanced to stardom, he will be seen in "It's the Old Army Game" some time in May.

ADOLPHE MENJOU
This fascinating Paramount star scored a clean, decisive hit in "The King on Main Street." He works best in fields of his own. "I'll See You Tonight" is his contribution to the Paramount program for April.

"Take a Chance" offers to the exhibitors a great opportunity for exploitation. Taka Chance week have become universally popular and here is the ideal picture for that special occasion. Sherwood, editor of Life, and Bertram Bloch. The settings will approach those of "The Wanderer" in lavishness. June 28 will be the release date.

Schenck Stars Planning to Picturize Famous Stage Successes During Winter

PICTURIZATION of three New York stage hits may be the Joseph W. Schenck organization's contribution to the winter production schedule in Hollywood.

In the meantime, Blanche Merrill, noted Eastern playwright, recently signed by the Schenck organization, is preparing a story to be picturized following "Kiki," Norma Talmadge's next starring vehicle for First National release.

Miss Talmadge expects to begin work within a very short time on the world-known Belasco play, while negotiations have been opened by Mr. Schenck to secure the screen rights of a current Broadway success for Constance and the services of a famous director to do the picture.

Plans of the Constance Talmadge company to start work on a new picture will be only slightly delayed as a result of Mr. Schenck's decision to postpone production on "East of the Setting Sun." Under the Schenck contract with First National, Constance will make three more features for the releasing organization.

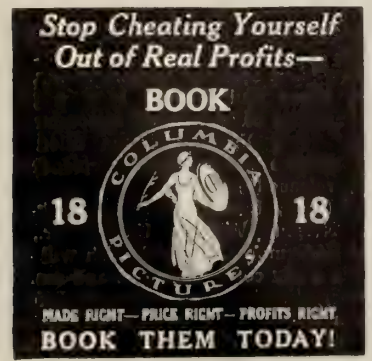
Another new development on the United lot is the signing of a two-year contract by George Marion, Jr., as title writer for the Talmadge productions.

Critics throughout the country have praised Marion's titles in Constance's latest picture, "Her Sister From Paris" and "The Eagle," starring Rudolph Valentino.

Mr. Schenck's recent acquisition of famous stage writers for screen work gives him what is recognized as one of the greatest staffs in Hollywood. Edward Clark, a playwright with a number of successful stage plays to his credit, has moved his family from New York and intends to make Hollywood his permanent home. He and Miss Merrill were placed under contract as a result of the producer's recent visit to New York. They will augment the writing stars already in the Schenck organization such as Hans Kraly, who is putting the finishing touches on the adaption of "Kiki," a picture that many of Norma Talmadge's admirers believe will surpass triumphs like "Smilin' Through," "Secrets" and "Graustark," her newest success.

Norma and her director, Clarence Brown, who was responsible for Valentino's "Eagle," are ready to begin work on "Kiki" as soon as the cast is completed. Ronald Colman again has been loaned to the Schenck organization by Samuel Goldwyn to play the lead opposite the star. Colman was leading man in "Her Sister From Paris."

Even the minor roles in "Kiki" will be filled by eminent players, carrying out David Belasco's stipulation when he sold the screen rights to Mr. Schenck for a new record price, that only Norma Talmadge should have the title role and that the rest of the cast reflect the high standards set before the footlights. Miss Talmadge has completed her lavish wardrobe called for in the script, and many of the elaborate "Kiki" sets are ready for the cameras. Definite announcement of Constance's next vehicle and director is expected to be made soon.



Metropolitan Pictures by World-Famous Writers

WHAT may be taken as an indication that the screen is looking toward the recognized authors of books, serialized stories and successful stage plays as the source of the bulk of the material for coming pictures is seen in the fact that all of the pictures now in preparation for the year's production of Metropolitan Pictures are from well known story material.

Metropolitan's production most recently released is "Simon the Jester" which was one of William J. Locke's most famous novels. This was produced as the first production supervised by Frances Marion, who is herself the most famous woman writer of the screen.

"Without Mercy" was filmed from the novel by John Goodwin and was secured by Metropolitan from the Stoll Picture Productions, Ltd., of England.

"Steel Preferred," which has just been completed with Vera Reynolds, William Boyd, Hobart Bosworth and Charlie Murray featured, was filmed from the Herschel S. Hall short stories published in the Saturday Evening Post, a series of stories dealing with the adventures of "Wally Gay" in the steel mills.

Barrett Willoughby's novel "Rocking Moon" which has been filmed in Alaska, was popularized even before its publishing in book form when it ran serially in the American magazine.

"The Million Dollar Handicap" is from the W. A. Fraser novel "Thoroughbreds" which was published in book form by the A. L. Burt Company.

"The Danger Girl," the current starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean was a stage play called "The Bride" by Stewart Olivier and George Middleton, the latter being also co-author of "Adam and Eve," and "Polly with a Past," which were popular hits on the stage.

Coming Metropolitan Productions will include two other highly successful novels and another stage play. "The Last Frontier" is from the popular novel by Courtney Ryley Cooper, a story of Empire building in the early days of the Middle West. This will be one of the year's big specials, it is said, to be produced this spring. It will be remembered that "The Last Frontier" was to have been a Thomas H. Ince production, many stirring scenes of a gigantic buffalo drive having been filmed by the Ince organization some time before the death of the famous producer.

Frances Marion's second production for Metropolitan, "Paris at Midnight," is to be based on the famous Balzac novel "Pere Goriot."

Begins Production of "The Torrent"

Monta Bell has begun production of "The Torrent," the well known Blasco Ibanez novel, with Ricardo Cortez and Greta Garbo in the featured roles. Cortez has been specially borrowed by the Culver City studios for this Cosmopolitan production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and in this photoplay Miss Garbo, who has achieved fame in films abroad, makes her first American screen appearance.

"The Torrent" is a romantic tale of the life and loves of a Spanish opera prima donna. A big cast appears in support of the featured players, including Gertrude Olmsted, Edward Connelly, Maurice Kains and Lucien Littlefield.

First National Issues Film Showing Leading Players

First National Pictures has shipped to all of its branch exchanges, an 800 foot reel showing the stars and leading players of the company as well as striking scenes from the more notable productions in which they have appeared.

This reel is designed as a special attraction for First National Month and it is believed will be welcomed by exhibitors who wish to give their audiences an intimate impression of their favorite players.

Norma Talmadge, Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess, Milton Sills, Johnny Hines, Harry Langdon and Leon Errol, all the First National stars, in fact, and featured players of prominence, have a part in this unusual film which was photographed, edited and titled with as much care as is expended on any regular production.

Alice Calhoun Loaned

Warner Bros. have lent Alice Calhoun to the Harry Langdon company to play the leading woman's role in "Nobody." Miss Calhoun appears to be transferring her affections from dramatic roles to those of comedy. She played her first comedy role with Syd Chaplin, in Warner Bros.' "The Man On The Box," released a few weeks ago, and made a decided hit in it.

When her work on the one picture with Langdon is finished, Miss Calhoun will return immediately to Warner Bros.

Circulation of Gene Stratton-Porter Big Factor in Sale of "Keeper of the Bees"

THE definite reaction of the theatre box-office to the factor of circulation has never been proved so conclusively as by the performance of "The Keeper of the Bees," picturized by F. B. O. from the story by Gene Stratton-Porter, according to an analysis compiled by officials of F. B. O.

They point to a consistent record of box-office results achieved by this picture during its first few weeks of release as conclusive evidence of the very certain relation of circulation and sales value.

On the basis of the picture's actual performance in test engagements, it has just been booked by the Stanley Company of Philadelphia to play its finest theatre, The Stanley; by Sig Samuels and Willard C. Patterson for an early engagement at the Metropolitan in Atlanta; by the Loew Enterprises for a run in the Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, and Loew's Regent, Harrisburg. These engagements are in addition to the score of big first run dates that have been previously announced.

In laying out the campaign of advertising and sales on "The Keeper of the Bees," F. B. O. proceeded on the theory that they had in the production an absolutely certain commercial value, and instead of rushing into promiscuous selling made no particular effort to close dates in the bigger key towns until they had a chance to prove that theory by the box-office test.

"An analysis of the circulation of Gene Stratton-Porter's books made in conjunction with her publishers, Doubleday, Page & Company, showed us so many remarkable facts that we decided to merchandise 'The Keeper of the Bees' along different lines," said Colvin W. Brown, vice-president in charge of distribution at F. B. O., in discussing the picture and its success.

"No writer of current fiction has maintained such a consistently high sale as Mrs. Porter, and the astounding figures of her publishers, multiplied as they were by the publication of her new story in McCall's Magazine, gave 'The Keeper of the Bees' a ready-made audience so far greater than the audience of the average best seller, that we were absolutely confident that the picture properly presented and properly advertised by the theatre to the public would be a sure-fire proposition.

"There has been so much bunk about popular books and their value to the box-office, that our first problem was to convince the exhibitor that 'The Keeper of the Bees' had real and not fictitious circulation, and our second problem was to drive home to the exhibitor the value of this real circulation. Therefore, the selling and advertising campaign on the picture was developed in the direction of first, establishing with the trade the proportions of Mrs. Porter's circulation; second, convincing the exhibitor that this circulation was not fictitious; and third, convincing the exhibitor that this circulation could be capitalized at the box-office automatically.

"Therefore, it was decided that the picture should have an actual test under normal conditions in a few theatres to establish beyond doubt the contentions which have been set forth as to the value of the circulation behind it. Almost unheralded, the first run test engagement was held in the American Theatre, Salt Lake City, with surprisingly big results. This engagement was followed almost immediately by test runs in the Strand Theatre, Canton, Ohio; the Capitol Theatre, Raleigh, North Carolina; and the Royal Theatre, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

"The result in these test engagements was the development of evidence of actual box-office results. The test was extended in widely scattered towns of varying population to a point where the drawing power of the picture was established beyond question in a variety of theatres under varying forms of presentation appealing to an assortment of classes, and under a widespread geographical territory.

"From that point, the selling was based entirely upon evidence of actual performance."

In addition to the circulation developed by magazine and book publication throughout the country generally, "The Keeper of the Bees" is currently being published in leading newspapers throughout the country, including such publications as the Kansas City Star, Philadelphia Bulletin, New Orleans Times Picayune, Hackensack Evening Record, Tacoma News Tribune, Newark Ledger, Dallas Farm and Ranch, Chicago Corn Belt Farm Daily, Kansas City Daily Drovers Telegram, Omaha Daily Journal Stockman, Daily Live Stock Reporter of Illinois, and the Winnipeg Tribune.

While "The Keeper of the Bees" has proven an outstanding production in point of box-office value, it is merely an example of the production policy adopted by F. B. O. of putting into its pictures ready-made showmanship—of delivering to the exhibitor productions which have definite sales value which the exhibitor can sell or which have already been sold to the public.

Associated's "The Highbinders" Features Champion Tennis Player

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC. has acquired for release from Worthy Pictures, Inc., "The Highbinders," which takes its place on the Associated schedule as one of that fast-stepping organization's "Triumphant Thirty." Principally featured with Marjorie Daw in "The Highbinders" is William Tilden, 2nd, better known as "Big Bill" Tilden, world's champion tennis player.

"The Highbinders" was directed by George Terwilliger, and the supporting cast includes such well-known players as Ben Alexander, George Hackathorne, Walter Long and George Marion.

Not only does "The Highbinders" mark the debut of "Big Bill" Tilden as a screen attraction, but it also brings him into the limelight as an author, the tennis champion having written the story on which "The Highbinders" is based. This factor is said to give a double kick to the publicity value in the Tilden name, for "Big Bill" has hogged the sporting pages (and often the front pages) of dailies throughout the country. Associated Exhibitors point out that this is an excellent opportunity for showmen to cash in on thousands of columns of unpurchaseable publicity.

Contrary to common belief, "Big Bill's" first screen offering is not based on tennis. It is a fast-moving story of the underworld and of society, rich in the color of the poorest and the richest cross-sections of a big city.

Cast for "Men of Steel"

Casting of principals for First National's big special, "Men of Steel," was completed this week with the addition of Evelyn Walsh Hall who was sent to Birmingham, Alabama, from New York, to take part in scenes now being filmed in and around the iron ore mines and steel mills of the United States Steel Corporation there.

The completed cast now includes Milton Sills, Doris Kenyon, Mae Allison, Victor McLaglen, George Fawcett, Frank Currier, John Philip Kolb, Evelyn Walsh Hall, Edward Lawrence, Taylor Graves, Harry Lee, Henry West and Nick Thompson. George Archainbaud is directing "Men of Steel," under the supervision of Earl Hudson.

"The Auction Block"

William Orlamond has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to play a role in Hobart Henley's production of "The Auction Block," by Rex Beach, which features Charles Ray and Eleanor Boardman. Arthur Smith is again holding down the job of assistant to Director Henley on this picture.

Picture Experts Applaud "Stella Dallas"

HOLLYWOOD stars, proucers and picture experts have taken Samuel Goldwyn's film version of "Stella Dallas" to their bosoms and many have sent messages of praise, appreciation and congratulation to Mr. Goldwyn on the production. This Henry King picture, Mr. Goldwyn's first for United Artists Corporation release, will have a New York presentation at the Apollo Theatre, beginning November 16th, and will stay there for an extended engagement.

Some of the comments on this picture from the leading film experts are as follows:

"I want to go on record. Few things have affected me as much in my life as did 'Stella Dallas.' It's a marvelous picture, and you should be very proud of your accomplishment."—DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS.

"'Stella Dallas' in my opinion is one of the few great screen achievements. No finer bit of artistry has ever been seen on the screen than Belle Bennett's performance of the mother. This is a picture that will appeal strongly to all classes and to all intellects."—CECIL B. DE MILLE.

"There has been nothing, to my mind, since 'Humoresque' and 'Over the Hill' which has had such intense appeal to the finer sentiments as 'Stella Dallas.' It is a story of a mother's love and sacrifice, and your story has been rendered with the greatest skill. This is a performance that will always be remembered—as it is witnessed—with laughter and with tears."—MARION DAVIES.

"You have taken a slice of life and transferred it to the screen in a highly entertaining, and at the same time artistic manner. I enjoyed every foot of the picture. The direction is superb and the acting masterful."—HAROLD LLOYD.

"It is a great pleasure to have the opportunity of recommending the picture, 'Stella Dallas.' In the words of one of my preview committee—'One of the best pictures ever produced.'"—MRS. ALFRED GRAHAM, California Federation of Women's Clubs.

"Have just seen 'Stella Dallas.' Think it is infinitely the finest picture I have ever seen by a very long way. The acting is magnificent and the directing I think is positively genius."—JOHN BARRYMORE.

"Must tell you how WONDERFUL I think 'Stella Dallas' is—so touching! It will wring every mother's heart."—ELINOR GLYN.

"You ought to be genuinely proud of 'Stella Dallas.' Unquestionably it is the dramatic picture of the year."—MONTAGUE GLASS.

"Must congratulate you on 'Stella Dallas.' It is a great triumph for you and also members of the cast. The direction is splendid and undoubtedly the finest thing Henry King has ever done."—CHARLIE CHAPLIN.

"'Stella Dallas' is one of the few very great pictures I have seen. Those who see this picture will always remember it—will talk to others about it."—HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY.

"The best moving picture I have ever seen. Best in its direction, acting, restraint, taste and appeal. I cried as I have hardly ever cried in a theatre and certainly as I have never cried at a picture."—ETHEL BARRYMORE.

De Mille Sees New Screen Favorities

THAT 1926 will see a great revival in the interest in individual motion picture personalities is the contention of Cecil De Mille, who says: "While the foundation of photoplay construction will always be novel, unusual, and interesting stories, the public must have individuals whom they can place on the pedestal of especial preference.

"We are entering an era when many new stars are about to be created and I prophesy that during 1926, more new outstanding personalities will be raised to stellar heights than at any time during the past five years.

"The reason for this is very simple. Since 1920 motion pictures have been in a period of transition. Many old stars have been desperately holding to their laurels, fighting at every point against the inroads of fresher, newer faces.

"These old timers have held on in many cases due to superior experience, but it is inevitable that they will be succeeded.

"The public demands youth, and it demands change and novelty in its screen personalities. 1926 will be a year during which many of the older screen idols will crash. In two years, I am willing to venture that the list of stars will contain a very small percentage of the names which are so prominent today.

"During 1926, we will continue to make excellent strides in technical fields. Color photography and stereoscopic photography have both advanced and in the months to come it will be easier than ever to place beauty accurately upon the silver sheet.

"New and vibrant young people now comparatively unknown will be a feature of the coming year. I don't say that we are due for a revival of the old time star system, but I do contend that new people and personalities will figure prominently in the progress and development of screen art during the next twelve months."

THIS WOULD BE GOOD IF—But when Monte Blue, armed with a chair, turns on a bluecoat and a bull, both armed with revolvers (presumably loaded gats), it looks good anyway. This is one of the gripping scenes in Warner Bros.' "Hogan's Alley," in which Patsy Ruth Miller is featured with Big Boy Blue.

Hogan and Withey Added to F. B. O. Directorial Staff

Two new directors have been added to the current F. B. O. production staff, according to an announcement by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president in charge of production.

James Hogan has been engaged to direct an all-star cast headed by Patsy Ruth Miller and Kenneth Harlan in a racing melodrama titled "The King of the Turf." It is by John C. Brownell and Louis Joseph Vance, the novelist.

Chet Withey has been signed to direct Evelyn Brent in "Queen of Diamonds," a melodrama of the New York show world, Fred Myton wrote the story and continuity. Theodore Von Eltz is appearing opposite the star.

"Soul Mates"

The title of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, by Elinor Glyn, formerly titled "The Reason Why," has been changed to "Soul Mates." Jack Conway directed. Aileen Pringle, Gertrude Olmstead, Edmund Lowe, Phillips Smalley, Edythe Chapman, Mary Hawes, Katherine Bennett, Lucien Littlefield and Ned Sparks make up the cast of principals.

EVEN YOUR "THRILLING" WESTERN MUST HAVE "HEART INTEREST" THESE DAYS, and Buck Jones, in "Durand of the Bad Lands," gives you lots of thrills and some tense, dramatic moments. In this William Fox production Buck has beautiful little Marian Nixon to play opposite to him. "Durand" was written by Mabelle Heikes Justice. Lynn Reynolds directed.

Wants "Heart Stuff" Sentiment, Says Lewis

"WHAT does the public want in motion pictures?" Ralph Lewis, well known character actor, says he knows, and to prove his case cites his own career of more than 30 years of stage and screen acting.

Lewis has just come to New York from Hollywood to play the role of John Ward in "Glorious Youth," the picture Sam Wood is directing with the Paramount Junior Stars in the leading roles.

"The public wants 'heart stuff', sentiment," he said.

"My own experience, I think, proves that sentiment is the most powerful emotion in motion pictures. I've played every kind of a stage role since I left Northwestern University in 1894 to join a traveling stock company. I've played every kind of a screen role since I went into pictures with the old Reliance-Majestic company in 1912.

"But, I'll admit—strange as it may seem coming from an actor—that I didn't make any great impression on the public with the characterizations I did. In the industry, to the casting directors, I was just another character actor.' Then several years ago, there was a change, which even I didn't realize at first.

"I began to get more calls for my services. Writers began to call me up for interviews. I began to get clippings from all over the country. It took me by surprise, and I sat down and tried to analyze it.

"My conclusion, which I think is a sound one, was easily arrived at: it was because just previously I had begun to do sentimental, human characterizations of the average American home, in pictures that were laid in the average American home. It was what the public wanted, and, as in the case of many other actors, a certain series of new characterizations had popularized an old actor.

"I had done harder work, probably, and more difficult roles in previous pictures, such as playing Stoneman, the carpet-beggar, in 'The Birth of A Nation,' and Pere Grandet in Rex Ingram's 'The Conquering Power,' but these characters, for the most part, had been unsympathetic. It was only when I consciously tried to direct my appeal to the heart rather than to the intellect of the public that I made my greatest success. Call it 'hokum' or what you will; the public wants sentiment, 'heart stuff' strikes home."

Mr. Lewis' work in such roles earned his starring roles in many recent pictures as a result, among them "Westbound Limited," "The Third Alarm," "In the Name of the Law," and "The Last Edition."

The picture, incidently, is interesting for Mr. Lewis aside from the importance of the role, for it is the second time in his 13 year screen career that he has acted in Paramount pictures. He played a character role in "The Valley of the Giants," a picture directed several years ago by James Cruze.

"Million Dollar Handicap"

Metropolitan Pictures have borrowed a bevy of the Christie Comedy beauties to add pictorial interest to "The Million Dollar Handicap," their picturization of the W. A. Fraser novel, "Thoroughbreds." "The Million Dollar Handicap" is a comedy melodrama and is being directed by Scott Sidney, who made "Charley's Aunt," "Madame Behave" and a number of other Al. Christie features released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Don't Miss This!

Two pages of Moving Picture World, issue of December 26, 1925, will be devoted to showmanship angles for NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH, set forth by Epes Winthrop Sargent, Exploitation Editor of Moving Picture World, in an interview written by Charles Edward Hastings, Editor of the Short Features Department.

"O-O-O! WHAT WAS THAT?" has Hoot Gibson wondering in Universal's "Spook Ranch."

"The Volga Boatman" has Thrills and Great Sets

A PAUL REVERE RIDE translated to Russia in the time of the recent revolution promises to be an interesting feature of Cecil De Mille's second personally directed, independent production "The Volga Boatman."

As an interlude in his story of the drama of Russia, De Mille brings in a rider, who goes from point to point through the country telling the people that a new regime is in control.

As Boston was the great British center during the American Revolution, so Yuroslav in Russia was the War capital of the Russian aristocrats. And De Mille plans one of his big spectacles in the taking of Yuroslav and the capture of hundreds of Russian aristocrats in the midst of elaborate social festivities.

The Russian village for "The Volga Boatman" will be one of the biggest technical achievements of the year, and on a par with the castles of "Robin Hood," the Egyptian city of "The Ten Commandments" and the Circus Maximus of "Ben Hur."

This village occupies over one quarter of the huge De Mille lot. Many of the houses are practical with four walls and so arranged that the walls can be lifted and scenes taken actually with in the houses, without the necessity of building separate sets.

Art Directors Mitchell Leisen, Anton Grot and Max Parker had the advantage of the advice of Dan Sayre Groesbeck and Theodore Kosloff in the designing of the sets. Mr. Groesbeck was a war cartoonist and a sergeant in the White army of Kolchak in Russia, while Mr. Kosloff, a native Russian wsa born in a town very similar to the one depicted in "The Volga Boatman."

"The Volga Boatman" originally inspired by the song of that name, is an original story by Konrad Bercovici. It was adapted for the screen by Lenore Coffee. The featured players include William Boyd, Elinor Fair, Julia Faye, Theodore Kosloff, Victor Varconi and Robert Edeson.

"Crystal Cup" Soon to Be Screened by First National

"The Crystal Cup," a novel by Gertrude Atherton, author of "Black Oxen," will be among the stories to be filmed in the near future by First Nationals Eastern production units. Sada Cowan, well known scenarist, has been engaged by Earl Hudson to write the adaptation of this novel and is now working on it in New York. Neither director nor star has been selected for this story as yet.

Changes Title of Book

Metropolitan Deviates From Original Title Policy

An unavoidable deviation from Metropolitan's policy of keeping original titles of books and plays has occurred in producing the well known book "Thoroughbreds," by William A. Fraser. Although under the title "Thoroughbreds" it is known as a classic of the race course, the name cannot be used for the coming film version. During the last few years a number of pictures have been released under titles which contained the word "thoroughbreds" and in order to avoid confusion the famous racing tale will reach the public as "The Million Dollar Handicap."

The picture will feature Vera Reynolds, Edmund Burns and Ralph Lewis with Ward Crane, Clarence Burton, Tom Wilson, Eddie Lyons and others prominent in the cast. Scott Sidney, well known Christie director, has been loaned to the Metropolitan company to handle the filming.

Changing of the title of Fraser's novel "Thoroughbreds" to "The Million Dollar Handicap" is Metropolitan's first deviation from its original title policy. Such pictures as "Without Mercy" from the John Goodwin novel; "Steel Preferred" by Herschel S. Hall which appeared in the Post, and "Simon the Jester," Wm. J. Locke's novel, are Metropolitan productions released under their original titles.

Metropolitan executives and scenario heads estimate that the box office value of a good title is in itself from 20 per cent. to 50 per cent. of the total value of a production.

"Little Annie Rooney" Breaking Many Records

"Little Annie Rooney," Mary Pickford's interpretation of a girl of the New York tenements and Lower East Side, is breaking motion picture theatre records east, west, north and south.

The picture won unanimous praise when it opened in the big cities, including New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, and similar sentiment is being evidenced everywhere by picture patrons. Former records for Mary Pickford production are being shattered in almost every city where "Little Annie Rooney" is being shown.

Howard Signs to Direct for Cecil B. De Mille

William K. Howard, recently resigned from Famous Players-Lasky for whom he directed "Volcano," "The Thundering Herd," "Light of Western Stars" and "The Border Legion," has been signed by Cecil B. DeMille under a long term contract.

Howard's first assignment for De Mille will be the direction of Rod La Rocque in "Red Dice," and adaptation of the Octavus Roy Cohen story "The Iron Chalice."

Jeanie Macpherson who adapted the story in collaboration with Douglas Doty, will be production editor of "Red Dice." Lillian Rich and Robert Edeson will be featured opposite Rod La Rocque, while Robert Ames, Snitz Edwards, Sally Rand, Clarence Burton and Helene Sullivan will appear.

Fairbank's and "The Thief of Bagdad" Go Big in the Far East

Reports received in New York from United Artists Corporation headquarters in the Far East state that Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad" opened simultaneously in two theatres in Tokyo for runs of four weeks, which had never been equalled by any other film production. Since then the picture has played in twenty-three other Tokyo houses, and the picture has had an equal successful booking all through Japan.

In China "The Thief of Bagdad" had three successive weeks in Pekin, also a record length run for China. In the Philippine Islands the film was shown first at Manila, and became an immediate success. Similar conditions obtained in Singapore, Straits Settlements and Siam, while in British India the success of this Fairbanks feature was even more sensational than in any other part of the Far East.

It had a fifteen weeks run in Bombay, whereas two weeks was the previous record run. In Calcutta the picture was taken off at the end of four weeks because of the Lenten season, but will be shown again this winter. Reports of record length runs come in from all parts of India.

Mary's "Scraps" Completed

Miss Pickford's Second Big Production of Year Finished—Will Soon Start Another

Mary Pickford's second big feature picture of the year has been completed. It is "Scraps," the story of a baby farm in the swamp country.

"Scraps" is a thrilling adventure story, with an abundance of the well known Mary Pickford comedy situations, and in it as in "Little Annie Rooney" Miss Pickford again is seen in that type of role which first endeared her to the millions and won her the title of "The World's Sweetheart." The story deals with the unusual experiences of a group of twelve children, guided by a ragged little girl of twelve, played by the star, through the most amazing incidents and adventures.

The picture gets its title—"Scraps"—from the "scraps of humanity" with which it has to deal, and is said to be in every way a worthy successor of "Little Annie Rooney," which has been meeting with the most enthusiastic audience and box-office reception wherever it has been shown.

Miss Pickford plans to spend several weeks in supervising the cutting and titling of "Scraps," after which she expects to start work on a third picture which is to be completed before she leaves for Europe with her husband, Douglas Fairbanks.

Thomson at Work on "The Tough Guy"

A one-time clergyman and boy scout commissioner in the role of a roughneck rancher! That's the conversion Fred Thomson, F. B. O.'s big western star, will undergo in his forthcoming feature "The Tough Guy," work on which has already begun at the F. B. O. Studios.

David Kirkland, who directed Thomson in his last Western feature "All Around Frying Pan," will again handle the megaphone. Lola Todd has been engaged to appear opposite Thomson and Robert M'Kim will be

Raoul Walsh to Begin Work for Fox Jan. 1st

WITHOUT waiting for the sensation created by the news that it was the successful bidder for the screen rights to "Is Zat So?" to subside, Fox Films today announces another startling bit of film news, the gist of which is that Raoul Walsh has been placed under contract to direct Fox pictures, beginning January 1.

This information was wired to the Fox home office in New York today by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of the Fox organization, from Hollywood. The addition of Mr. Walsh to the already strong Fox directorial staff is in line with the announced intentions of Mr. Sheehan to array, for the remainder of this season's productions and the 1926-27 output, material and talent that will asure nothing but the highest grade of box-office entertainments.

Mr. Walsh needs no introduction to fan or exhibitor. During his ten years as a director he has built for himself an enviable record and has to his credit some of the outstanding motion picture triumphs. He comes to Fox direct from Famous Players with the praise for his last production for that company, "The Wanderer," still being heard on all sides.

Mr. Walsh is a brother of George Walsh, the motion picture star. He is a product of New York City. He made his entry into the motion picture industry as an actor, playing the part of John Wilkes Booth in D. W. Griffith's tremendous drama, "The Birth of a Nation."

Mayer Signs New Contract; Henley Remains with Metro

LOUIS B. MAYER, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, announced at the Culver City studios of the organization last week that he had signed Director Hobart Henley to a new contract.

Incidentally, Henley was the first director to start production after the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer merger, and since then has become one of the leading and most popular directors in the business.

At the present time he is making his seventh production for M-G-M. It is the adaptation of the famous Rex Beach story. "The Auction Block," in which Charles Ray and Eleanor Boardman are featured.

The new contract between Hobart Henley and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer takes effect with the completion of his present production and is for a series of many pictures.

Among Henley's recent successes for M-G-M might be mentioned "Sinners in Silk," "So This Is Marriage?" "The Denial," "Slave of Fashion," Exchange of Wives" and "His Secretary," starring Norma Shearer which is to be presented at the Capitol Theatre, New York, next week.

Made Assistant to Le Baron

William Le Baron, associate producer in charge of production at the Paramount Long Island studio, announced that Claude H. Mitchell, who as principal of the Paramount Picture School, Inc., directed the first four months of the Junior Stars' training, has been appointed assistant to Mr. Le Baron.

Roosevelt's "Rough Riders" A Super-Epic by Famous

THE ROUGH RIDERS," the story of Theodore Roosevelt and his famous regiment of volunteers that fought in the Spanish-American War, is to be filmed as a super-epic by Paramount.

The announcement was made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, coincident with the arrival in Los Angeles from Europe of Lucien Hubbard, who will personally supervise the production. He and Hermann Hagedorn, official biographer of Roosevelt, will leave shortly for Cuba, where locations will be selected and the cooperation of the Cuban government enlisted. The story already has been completed by Hagedorn.

A nation-wide search began today for a player to portray the character of Roosevelt.

"No announcement of any picture has given me the pleasure that becomes mine in telling our plans for 'The Rough Riders,' a story of a very great American," said Mr Lasky. "I have been a deep admirer of Theodore Roosevelt for many years and I am very happy to have a part in the immortalizing of his character and achievements on the screen. It is our hope to make the picture as great as the man himself.

"This is the story of Roosevelt, the young man riding to greatness and fame and an immortal place in the hearts of all Americans, through his energy, loyalty, bravery and his zest in the great things of life, a zest which typifies the virile spirt of his country.

"'The Rough Riders' will be authentic in every detail. Hermann Hagedorn is Mr. Roosevelt's official biographer and is secretary of the Roosevelt Memorial Association. His story has been prepared with Mrs. Roosevelt's sanction."

Lucien Hubbard, who supervised "The Vanishing American," has cut short his vacation in Europe and has been taken off all other work in order to allow him to devote all his energies to this picture. Hubbard's technical staff will be augmented by several famous Rough Riders, who will bend every effort to make this picture historically accurate throughout. These men will be selected by Hagedorn.

"The Rough Riders," like that other epic of American life, "The Covered Wagon," and like "The Ten Commandments" will be a roadshow special. The picture will be produced on a lavish and impressive scale. It will be filmed in Hollywood with locations in Cuba and New York. It is hoped to enlist the aid of thousands of Cubans in the war sequences of the picture. Whoever is chosen to play the role of Roosevelt will be surrounded by a cast of brilliant names. The director has not as yet been selected, but the choice has narrowed down to three men who have outstanding directorial achievements to their credit.

De Mille Returns

Cecil B. De Mille and party of over a hundred players and technical attaches have returned to Los Angeles, after three weeks on location at Rio Vista, California, where Mr. De Mille took exterior scenes for his second personally directed independent picture, "The Volga Boatman."

Warner Goes to West Coast to Arrange 1926-27 Schedule

Harry M. Warner left New York Sunday for Los Angeles to arrange the company's 1926-27 production schedule, in company with organization's executive representatives there. He expects to be back in New York January 8th and break all records by announcing the next year's program at that time.

"The 1925-26 schedule was made public last June," said Mr. Warner, just before his departure. "Thirty of the forty productions on this program are already finished and several of those remaining are now at work and well advanced. This means the decks will soon be cleared for active, concerted work on next year's productions. We have had several well known stories under consideration for some time and while, of course, no announcement can be made yet, the 1926-27 program is bound to maintain the high standard already set."

Irene Rich, Warner Bros.' star, who was honro guest at the recent world premiere of "Lady Windermere's Fan" at the Casa Lopez, New York, will not return to California immediately. Warner Bros, have arranged for her an extensive tour in which she will appear as hostess at the opening of runs in several Warner theatres.

Miss Rich will visit the State Theatre, Pittsburgh, December 10th, 11th and 12th and the Metropolitan, Baltimore, December 14th, 15th and 16th, at the opening of runs of "Compromise." She will be at the Broadway, Charlotte, December 18th and 19th.

Miss Rich will spend Christmas in New York and will be present at the theatrical premiere of "Lady Windermere's Fan" at Warner's Theatre, December 26th, appearing there as hostess December 27th and 28th also. Her itinerary thenceforth is as follows:

Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., January 2nd; Dome, Youngstown, Ohio, January 4th, 5th and 6th; Chicago, January 18th, 19th and 20th. Miss Rich will then proceed to Seattle, reaching there in time for the opening of Warner's Egyptian Theatre, January 25th.

Warners Loan Harlan and Miller

Through a special arrangement with Warner Bros., Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller have been lent to F. B. O., and will play the featured leads in "King of the Turf," from the story by Louis Joseph Vance and John Brownell.

Harlan and Miss Miller have but recently finished "The Fighting Edge," Warner Bros.' picturization of William McLeod Raine's thrilling novel. Henry Lehrman directed this production from the scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

Universal to Make Three Super Productions For Next Year Instead of One, Says Laemmle

MORE big features—better stories—more comedies.

That, in a sentence, was the program outlined for Universal Pictures Corporation by Carl Laemmle, president of the organization, in an interview issued at the studio, on the eve of his departure for New York and Berlin.

Universal will make its usual yearly output of 54 "White List" of pictures, in addition to serials, comedies and short western Laemmle announced. The annual production plans will be altered, however, to provide space for three productions of "Super-Jewels" scale, instead of one, as before.

The complete program for 1926 will include three Super-Jewels, 14 all-star features, 30 regular Jewel Features, starring Reginald Denny, Laura La Plante, Virginia Valli, Mary Philbin, Pat O'Malley, Louise Dresser, Jean Hersholt, Norman Kerry and the other contract stars and seven special features starring Hoot Gibson.

Stories for two of the three spectacles already have been selected. They include a film version of Jonathan Swift's classic, Gulliver's Travels," and a picturization of Harriet Beacher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The decision to make three big productions instead of one a year is due to the tremendous success of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "The Phamtom of the Opera," Laemmle declares.

Universal will specialize in feature comedies even more than it has done in the past, he states. "Comedy, as a matter of fact, is much better told on the screen than drama, and it is a great deal more popular. Reginald Denny's feature comedies have made him one of the most popular stars of the screen in little more than two years. Laura La Plante, with her keen sense of comedy, has become a star in about a half dozen productions."

Regarding this year's production, the Universal chief declares that 51 of the 54 pictures for 1925-1926 release have already been made. The other three are now in the course of production or preparation, and all will be finished before the first of the year to make way for the 1926 programs. The three 1925-1926 features are Svend Gade's Wives For Rent," starring Virginia Valli and Pat O'Malley, "Chip of the Flying U" starring Hoot Gibson, and an untitled feature directed by Edward Sedgwick.

The fact that the 1925 program is virtually completed, accounts for the present lull in activity at Universal City. The lull will end within the next ten days, when at least four companies will begin production simultaneously.

One of the most important moves he has made, Laemmle believes, is the purchase of American Film rights to the big French production, "Les Miserables."

In my opinion it is an even greater picture, from an artistic standpoint, than "The Last Laugh" which I brought from the UFA company last season," Laemmle states. "Although 'The Last Laugh' did not bring back great profits, I am very happy that such an excellent picture was brought to America through my efforts, and I am just as anxious to bring 'Les Miserables' here for presentation."

The producer has also signed a contract which will bring to Universal City, Andre Mattoni, noted German actor now under contract to the UFA company. Laemmle regards him as one of the greatest discoveries for screen personality he has ever seen. Mattoni will be featured in Universal pictures.

At least three features will be put in production at Universal City within the next ten days, and at least that many more will start work within the month.

Harry Pollard will direct Edgar Franklin's story, "Poker Faces," with Edward Everett Horton in the featured role; and following this will film the world-famous novel, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Laura La Plante is to star in "Doubling For Lora," under William A. Seiter direction; Edward Sedgwick will film Courtney Ryley Cooper's "The Trail of the Tiger"; Arthur Rosson is finishing his preparatory work on "Chip of the Flying U," to be Hoot Gibson's next starring production; Albert Rogell will direct Jack Hoxie in "The Tuneful Tornado," and Clifford Smith will film a story, as yet untitled, starring Art Acord.

"Wives for Rent" has already started, while Lynn Reynolds is finishing up House Peter's starring picture "Combat."

Edward Sloman, whose latest picture, "His People" is breaking theatre records and winning the most enthusiastic praise from New York critics, has signed a new Universal contract, and will begin work on a new production in the near future.

Join "Daybreak" Cast

Four actors have just joined the cast of "Daybreak," Fox Films screen version of Dorothy Brandon's stage hit, "The Outsider," for some of the later sequences. Bertram Marburg, Crawford Kent and Louis Payne portray the roles of the three surgeons, and Gibson Cowland has been given the part of Shadow. Lou Tellegen, Jacqueline Logan and Walter Pidgeon, who have the featured roles, are well advanced in production. Rowland V. Lee is directing.

"Warner Week" in Wheeling Packs Court to Capacity

The week of November 15 was virtually "Warner Bros.' Week" at the Court Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va. A double bill, each part of which was a Warner attraction, was put on, and capacity houses were drawn daily.

The features were "How Baxter Butted In," with Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, and "Tracked in the Snow Country," one of the Rin-Tin-Tin starring triumphs.

"With two such pictures on the program, nothing more could be expected in the entertainment line," commented the Wheeling Intelligencer. "If you like action, Rin-Tin-Tin surely gives it to you. 'How Baxter Butted In' is one long lasting laugh, and a picture worth the admission price alone."

"Blue Blood" Press Book

Chadwick Pictures Corporation has prepared a special press book with many unusual features on "Blue Blood," a current release, which is the second of the series of six George Walsh modern, action romances. "American Pluck" was the first of the series. In addition of the many features, which are embodied in all Chadwick press books, the "Blue Blood" book offers an interesting series of the sport cartoons, featuring the many noteworthy athletic accomplishments of Walsh, who is a former Georgetown and Fordham all 'round star.

"HE WILL ANSWER TO ME," says Art Acord, Universal star of "The Call of Courage," a Blue Streak Western, snapped here in one of the "thrill moments" in this fascinating story of life on the plains.

Peggy Joyce on Second Associated Special

PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE, star of Associated Exhibitors' big special, "The Skyrocket," arrived in Hollywood from New York this week and immediately buried herself under a mass of manuscripts from which she will select her second starring vehicle for Celebrity Pictures, Inc. She has entirely recovered from the illness which made necessary the postponement of her trip to California, and is eager to begin actual production, which is scheduled to begin shortly after the new year.

Miss Joyce has convinced the most sceptical that she posseses every qualification for screen stardom by her work in "The Skyrocket," and there is no doubt that this Marshall Neilan production of Adela Rogers St. John's famous Cosmopolitan Magazine story will firmly establish her with exhibitors as one of their surest box-office assets. Because of her certain box-office value extreme care is being exercised in the selection of her next vehicle, and stories by some of the best known of the world's authors, as well as several plays, have been assembled for the selection.

Since the stir created in film circles by the announcement of her motion picture debut the entire industry has been awaiting official verification of the glowing reports that have been coming via the rumor route regarding the bigness of "The Skyrocket." Oscar Price, president of Associated Exhibitors, under whose banner this big special is to be released, is exceedingly enthusiastic about the picture. He says:

"Although we have always known that in Peggy Hopkins Joyce we possessed a star of unequalled charm and appeal, her work in 'The Skyrocket' is going to be a revelation to everyone who sees it. The picture had its first showing in finally completed form only a few days ago, and delighted the assembled executives of our organization.

"Naturally no effort was spared in the selection of a vehicle of outstanding worth for her initial production, nor was any limit under the sky set for the production cost. This is seen alone in the cast which appears in support of Miss Joyce. Taking all these things into consideration, however, and allowing for the fact that in Marshall Neilan we had one of the finest directorial minds in the industry, none of us were quite prepared for the truly extraordinary picture that has resulted—a picture that through sheer artistry and strength will place Peggy Hopkins Joyce near the apex of her profession.

"We are of course delighted to pass along this wonderful news to exhibitors everywhere who have been eagerly awaiting 'The Skyrocket,' and they have my personal assurance that Peggy Hopkins Joyce is not only an outstanding box-office attraction, but also a screen actress of rare ability, ready to take her place with the foremost interpreters of the cinema art. The name of Peggy Hopkins Joyce is certain to attract crowds to every theatre, and 'The Skyrocket" will send them away delighted with the entertainment and singing the praises of a new cinema star."

Spring and Depinet Return from Big Tour

SAMUEL SPRING, chairman of the Sales Cabinet of First National Pictures, Inc., and Ned Depinet, sales manager of the Southern territory, completed their tour of key cities, this week and returned to the home office in New York, Wednesday, December 9th.

Mr. Spring and Mr. Depinet are enthusiastic over the results of the trip during which First National branches were visited and the sales executives conferred with leading exhibitors. At the meetings of branch managers and their salesmen plans were fully outlined for the handling of First National Month, January, 1926, which promises to produce the biggest results ever achieved by a campaign of the kind.

Every individual connected with the First National sales force, the men in the field, bookers and office employees, is getting behind the drive with the utmost spirit. They appreciate that the month is dedicated to the entire organization and not merely to those in executive command.

In all of the cities visited, the members of the Sales Cabinet received assurances of the fullest support from franchise holders, regular First National exhibitors and from others interested in the exceptional pictures available for showing during January. Many exhibitors have booked their theatres solid with First National pictures for the weeks of January.

During their trip, Messrs. Smith and Depinet conducted meetings in the following cities: Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Chicago, Detroit and Toronto.

Ned Marin, Western sales manager, will be away from New York for some time to come on a trip that includes Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines and Detroit.

Warner Brothers to Produce "Shenandoah"

THE famous old Civil War drama, "Shenandoah," long the greatest theatrical attraction in America, is soon to reach the screen. Warner Bros., have acquired the picture rights and propose to make of it an outstanding production on next year's schedule.

"Shenandoah" was the greatest work of the celebrated playwright, Bronson Howard. When the play was completed, thirty-six years ago, Charles Frohman procured it, inducing "Al" Hayman, of San Francisco, to take a half interest.

The premiere took place at the old Star Theatre, New York, September 9, 1889. The venture proved a tremendous success, the original company remaining at the one theatre nearly a year, which was regarded as extraordinary in those days. Frohman and his partner were said to have divided $200,000 between them, and, in addition, "Shenandoah" had the distinction of being the first big royalty-payer, Bronson Howard receiving $100,000 as his share for the first year alone.

The original New York cast was a distinguished one, with Wilton Lackaye, Henry Miller and Viola Allen in the star roles. Frank Burbeck succeeded Lackaye, and Joseph Holland appeared in the same role in another company. In one company Frank Carlyle impersonated the character first assumed by Henry Miller, and Lilla Vane and Esther Lyon were among the actresses who played the part Miss Allen has originated.

"Oh What a Nurse" Syd Chaplin's Next

"OH WHAT A NURSE" is the title which has now been given definitely to the forthcoming Syd Chaplin production, which is well under way at the Warner Bros. West Coast Studios. This is the story by Robert E. Sherwood, the editor of Life, and Bertram Bloch. Darryl Francis Zanuck was the scenarist. Charles ("Chuck") Reisner, who directed also the big Chaplin success, "The Man on the Box" is directing.

The story, which has to do with the amusing tribulations of Jerry Clark, a young newspaper reporter, are said to give Syd Chaplin an excellent opportunity for a demonstration of his fun-making powers.

Patsy Ruth Miller plays opposite the comedian star. She has the role of June Harrison, the fiancee of Clive Hurst, played by Gayne Whitman. Others prominent in the cast are Matthew Betz (Captain "Ladye" Kirby, skipper of a rum-runners' speedboat), Edith Yorke (Jerry's mother), Dave Torrance ("Big Tim" Harrison, a political boss and June Harrison's uncle), Ed Kennedy (Eric Johnson), Raymond Wells (a ship's mate), and Henry Barrowes (an editor.)

All kinds of amusing situations are presented in the development of the plot and the story is a riot of fun.

Edgar Hart Works Fortune Machine for Standout Business Against Opposition

MEET Edgar Hart's latest, the Mystic Fortune Teller. It helped him to put over The Mystic to two days of great business in the face of the strongest sort of local opposition, the Elks' Follies show. It got him top receipts with some to spare, and the stunt (which cost him about $20) not only put over the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer release, but it made talk that will run for weeks to come. It is advertising beyond the immediate moment.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

THE MYSTIC ORACLE

Edgar has been saving this idea for several months. We know, because one of the hottest days of last summer we tramped all over the Bowery and Chatham Square, where the cheap publishers and "slum" shops congregate, in an effort to locate ready-printed fortunes.

What we were looking for were the printed fortunes such as you are given by the "bird women," whose parrots pick out the envelopes. No one seemed to know where they were printed, so Edgar had to roll his own.

Animated Bust

The device, as the photograph shows, is a sort of cabinet topped by a bust of a seeress. In the photograph this looks like a cast, but it really was a woman, acting as much as possible like an automaton. The cabinet was made to her measure so that her shoulders should protrude, and the opening in the top was made a tight fit. It was just tall enough to permit her to stand. She was made up as an Oriental type.

A plaster statue of Buddha is on the front section, with tablets on either side painted to resemble eyes. On each is lettered, "The All-Seeing Eye." At the base of the statue is a card lettered: "Are you married or are you single? Tell Walla-Hallah."

On either side of the statue were two slots labeled "single" and "married," though we think the stunt would be more effective were there but a single slot.

Nicely Staged

Mr. Hart suggests that a large crystal or an upturned goldfish globe can replace the statue where this is not obtainable, but many drug stores have a statue used to advertise a brand of incense.

This cabinet (which is shown in the stage entrance, for lighting), was placed in the corridor lobby with amber lighting and a blue spot on the girl's head. Incense was kept burning and "Walla-Hallah," a man costumed as an Oriental, stood between the box and the incoming patron.

From them he learned whether they were married or single and called out a code word for the guidance of the girl, "Allah" standing for a single man, for example, and "Esla" for a married woman.

The girl had her hands free beneath the cover of the cabinet, and there were five receptacles for the fortunes, one each for married men, married women and single men and women. The fifth contained envelopes for those who gave the wrong information. If Wallah discovered a wedding ring on the hand of a women who declared herself single, or found a man whom he knew to be a bachelor trying to pass as married, the trickster would receive a slip reading: "Do not attempt to trick the all-seeing. No fortune awaits those who seek to deceive." It helped to mystify.

The Fortunes

In the other boxes were a dozen or more fortunes in each class, to give variety. Having failed to locate any ready-printed, Edgar wrote them all himself, had them printed locally on large sheets and cut apart into slips about 2 by 4 inches. Printing them on large sheets and then cutting materially reduced the printing costs. The stock used was a flimsy wood pulp in several colors. All were signed "The Mystic" in allusion to the play.

THE ENVELOPE FRONT

As the patron passed Walla he gave the code word and the girl slipped out the right envelope, all of which were alike. These were handed to the patron by a second attendant, and there was no stoppage of the line.

Mr. Hart reports that of a distribution of more than 3,000 envelopes, only two fortunes were found on the floor in the three days the stunt was run.

The stunt was not offered seriously and the word "fortune" was not used in the advertising, other than on the envelope. It was purely a stunt and not a fortune telling device, but the lack of throwdowns proves the interest taken in the idea.

Care should be taken to avoid the suggestion of peril or misfortune. One of the leading mystics in this country; a man internationally known, told us once that he never predicted misfortune, knowing the mischief wrought by the less scrupulous fakers.

A RACING CAR AND TWO PRAMS ON CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD

These were part of the campaign on the Denny picture that helped sell 1,728 admissions to the 688 seat Rialto Theatre, London, when the English premier was held. Pretty good business for an opening night. The racing car has a record in real races.

Planted 250 Trees as Memorial to Mrs. Porter

chief wrought by the less scrupulous fakers. Edgar told only pleasant things, or offered good advice. The following selections from his sets will give the idea.

For Single Men

Do not imagine that an automobile is the speediest way to get hold of a girl. Lots of drivers have experienced a sad miss in their motor. Just go slow about "garaging" your affections, you might want to turn out in a hurry and couldn't. Save gas.

At this very moment a man is talking about you and discussing you for a certain position. You will receive an invitation of some sort from a lady. Accept it, as this will lead you to land the position the man is talking about for you.

A married woman would involve you. You will do well to be on the look-out for a red-haired girl. If any woman drops an article on the ground, do not pick it up, else run the consequences.

There is a dark eyed girl who is heart-sick about you, but too shy to let you know. You should write down the names of the many girls you think about, you will nearly have forgotten one, and when her name comes to your mind suddenly, you will know her. She is yours for the asking.

For Benedicts

No memory of the past shall ever darken the horizon of your domestic felicity. Rivals and enemies you have none, except imaginary ones, so continue to be a good provider. Your psychic glass is serene and cloudless.

If your wife only shows you a small portion of the great love she actually bears you, it is not because she is undemonstrative, but because she knows that to sustain the charm of love with you it is necessary to keep you a little hungry all the time. So be resigned, for she truly loves you.

Make no change of location should the occasion be offered you—no matter what promises are made to you, be not interested. A woman will enter your life in order to do harm, but you will suspect her when she talks travels.

When some stocks are offered you, you will not invest in same. You are also warned against a certain real estate deal. It will create only embarrassment for you. Stick to what you have and are doing, for several months, then all will be well ever.

RODNEY BUSH USED COMPO BORD FOR HIS NEW BROOMS

Real brooms would have been better, but the compo board substitutes helped to get a good business for the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. If you use real brooms, note the paper wrappers used by Mr. Bush. This will permit lettering the brooms.

Girls Got These

Within a short time you will be introduced to an elderly man. When this happens, put on your best behavior, because he has a son whom you will later meet and fall in love with. This is your opportunity to position and happiness.

A fair youth is dreaming about you. He does not know whether he stands any chance or not, but he is planning a ride with you to find out. It is up to you then to take or not to take advantage of the opportunity, which is considered most favorable for your happy future.

Do not confide too many of your secrets to other girls, for a while at least, because one of them intends to find out something and play you false. She will come to you while you are shopping, and by this you will know her.

For Married Women

You must keep better hygienic hours, and your health will generally improve. Do not give way to the "blues," you have no cause to apprehend any unhappiness. Your only ailment is indulging your imagination to too great an extent. Think it over.

Resist the temptation to purchase extravagant clothes. For a while longer live prudently. Through a business transaction in the near future you will be rewarded and then be able to gratify your tastes.

Gloriafied Waffles

Barry Burke landed three sides of a restaurant awning to tell about Gloria Swanson in Stage Struck at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas. The hook was "Gloria Swanson glorifies wheat cakes and waffles as you get them at Bishop's in Stage Struck at the Palace, now." Heads of Gloria from the six sheet faced three ways.

Electric Train Is Given an Encore

Bert Jordan used an electric train in the lobby of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, to tell them about The Limited Mail. He knew that he could get nothing better.

But he worked a new idea. He knew that the lobby would be packed, and that the same people would stand around for a long time, so he had the train controlled from the box office and after it had been running for ten minutes the cashier would shut it off until the crowd drifted away, when she would throw the switch again. Ten minutes on and fifteen off was about the schedule for the fascinated crowd would stick around in the hope of seeing it start up again.

The train was loaned by the electric company, and was the finest they had in stock, with all of the trimmings in the shape of signal towers, semaphores, grade crossings, bridges and tunnels. It is coming along toward Christmas and the company was glad to get a chance to bring the line of trains to the attention of the public and knew that the theatre lobby would be a better show room than its own window.

A two foot wire fence around the platform kept people from touching the outfit, but did not cut off the view.

As usual the stunt made a big business. Somehow it always does.

PAINTING 350 TREES IN LOS ANGELES FOR BEE KEEPER

In memory of Mrs. Gene Stratton Porter 350 trees were planted in the school yards of Los Angeles to mark the opening of The Keeper of the Bees at the Pantages Theatre. The American Reforestation Society cooperated with the schools and Pantages.

Freshman Hats Help Advertise on Circus Lot

Program Covers

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, has an arrangement with a local photographer whereby the latter supplies a photograph for the cover of each issue of his monthly magazine. Most of these are seasonable for Christmas, Easter, Thanksgiving, etc., but a few are general.

He has suggested that we work out an exchange for the sale of or exchange of program covers. We do not believe the idea will be feasible, but if you are interested in good front page illustrations, drop Mr. Meyer a line. It will save you both worry and money.

Freshman Caps Are In Lively Demand

Although he ordered 250 freshman caps, C. B. Stiff gave out only 50 of them, scattering them over the town very thinly. Then when the telephone calls came in to ask where the caps might be procured, there were some available instead of the "sorry, they are all gone.'" This made a much better impression and at the same time put the caps into the hands of children who would wear them.

But fifty caps were retained to be handed out on the show lot the following day, when the circus was in town, and with those worn by the original 200 there were freshman hats all over the grounds.

This is a distribution scheme that seems to give better results than an indiscriminate handing out.

Five hundred megaphones were handed out at the football game and were in use at several games before the opening of the picture.

These ideas and an advance lobby display made a real business at the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C.

Pinned Roses

D. Roscoe Faunce derived his main advertisement for Flower of the Night from the charity drives in which the victims pay for artificial flowers instead of tags.

He got two thousand artificial roses, to the stems of which he pasted small slips reading: "Flower of the Night, with Pola Negri. Strand. Next week."

Two girls handed these out in the business district, pinning them to men's coat's and the men were so relieved when they were not shaken down for a donation that most of them decided to see the picture.

The lobby was a mission tower with a bell which was worked by an oscillating fan motor for movement and sound.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

FOUR musical presentations, consuming altogether 35 minutes, were included in the program which had Richard Barthelmess in "The Beautiful City" as the feature photoplay. Richard's picture ran 1 hour and 10 minutes, in addition to which there was the Mark Strand Topical Review running 10 minutes. This brought the film portion of the show up to 1 hour and 18 minutes and the complete show up to 1 hour and 53 minutes.

Each of the four de-luxe performances of the day was opened by the orchestra in selections from Leoncavallo's opera "Pagliacci." For this presentation the purple spangled draw curtains were closed over the small production stage and the lights were as follows: While the introductory film title was being run on the screen blue floods were shot from the dome covering the sheet. When the draw curtains were closed over the screen two Mestrum orange floods were brought down from the dome onto the orchestra; foots and borders in large stage in blue; four steel blue arch spots on the draw curtains and two steel Mestrum floods on the curtains and drapes from the projection room. This overture required 8 minutes.

"Rosetime" was an offering made up of selections suggesting the title. The orchestra opened the presentation with "Mighty Lak' a Rose," while an introductory title was being thrown on the screen. On the conclusion of this number the gold draw curtains were closed over the screen and four members of the ballet corps, costumed in artists' velvet trousers and smocks, came on for a dance to the tune of "Rose of Washington Square." At their exit the orchestra took up a special arrangement of "Indian Love Call," after which the presentation was concluded by a duet by soprano and tenor, singing "Roses of Picardy' behind a scrim while a rose-wheel of colored Picardy roses was thrown upon the scrim from the front. During the presentation the projection room had two flesh colored floods on the orchestra and during the dance number the dome put a flesh colored flood on the dancers. All front floods and the blue stage lights dimmed off during the "Roses of Picardy" number.

The Star Piano Trio, of two men and one woman, were presented in a repertoire of three numbers. For the opening selection one white spot was arranged to reflect only on the faces of the artists. Gradually red borders and blue foots revealed the setting and the pianos.

After the Topical Review came the prologue to "The Beautiful City." Following the locale of the story, a street scene was used, the backdrop being a transparency of tenement houses. In front of it were placed leg drops of the same type. Four pushcarts were placed on the stage loaded down with the merchandise dispensed by the street venders. For the Barthelmess character in the picture a tenor was made up as an Italian youth and for the Gish character a soprano was made up as an Irish girl. The number opened with "Come Back to Erin" by the soprano, after which four members of the ballet danced the Italian folk song, "A Frangesa." The number then closed with "O Sole Mio" by the tenor. Behind the transparency were open box lamps of amber, as the scene represented evening. In front there were open box lamps of blue augmented by blue floods from the dome.

AN ATTRACTIVE PRAM

This is a Ford chassis with compoboard sides, front and back, the sides cut in fancy shape, but the front a straight piece put on a slant with a view hole for the driver. Lettering supplements the cutouts from the posters and the effect is surprisingly good, especially where the cost is considered.

The lobby was framed in compoboard painted with a small yellow "Don" and a large "Q" in red. The whip cracking figure was reproduced on the front banner with the whip lash, title and start name in transparent letters. These were backed with flashers that brought the three items up alternately and gave much more atteneion value.

There was a notable hook-up to the Y. M. C. A. and Baylor University endorsed the picture in its college paper.

H. H. Snell did not go the limit in advertising The Ten Commandements at the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala. Instead he started three weeks in advance, worked small, but persistently and with a minimum of investment he got the best two day business since 1923. He had the Ringling show for opposition at that.

Midnight Sessions for Opera Phantom

Midnight performances were necessary to accommodate the crowds seeking to witness The Phantom of the Opera at the Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, and this made possible a set of receipt records that no one believed possible with the seating capacity.

A special prologue, with a horde of revelers, was one of the attractions, and the ushers were all in carnival suits while the men employees were dressed in French uniforms.

The ever-useful Owl Drug Co. got out Phantom Sundaes which were advertised with stickers and window cards, and the story was serialized in the Record.

Trailers were used at the Metropolitan and Million Dollar theatres, and there was an advance campaign of 150 28-sheets in Phantom red on white.

A MARQUISE MONSTER SOLD LOST WORLD TO KNOXVILLE

W. E. Drumbar, of the Riviera, offered the largest dinocaur to date as the chief item of his display. Because of its size, the animal had to be of light construction, which accounts for the somewhat angular lines, but it pulled a huge business.

Home Made Campaign Sold Feature Well

Because he got a short-order booking on Seven Keys to Baldpate, C. T. Perrin, of the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., mostly had to roll his own. There was no time to sit down and wait for accessories. He had to get a hustle on, but he's used to that.

He had a couple of photographs of Douglas MacLean on hand and with material clipped from the press sheet and trade papers he got a lobby card and two inserts. He made his newspaper talk particularly strong because he had no mats from which to prepare cuts.

Then he stirred things up with the announcement that bald pates would be admitted free the opening day and about twenty-five "close bobs" took him up, each baldhead bringing from one to three paid admissions.

That formed the foundation for a dog story in which the possibility of growing hair through creating laughter was discussed in a more or less serious way.

You can't do without accessories right along, but now and then you can make an improvised campaign so different that it carries value.

Once More

Once more the Raffles stunt has been pulled out to help a play, this time The Merry Widow at the Strand Theatre, Madison, Wis. Pictures of the "Widow" were published in the State Journal, a copy of which had to be in the possession of those who spoke to the supposed widow. The prize was $70. Pictures of the woman were purposely out of focus to render identification a little more difficult.

The college paper carried a cross-word puzzle, and fifteen small towns were given two tens and teasers to draw in the outlying business.

Mix Impersonation Is Latest Juvenile Contest

NEVER THE TWAIN HAD STARRY SKIES

The lobby on Never the Twain Hall Meet in Loew's State Theatre, Newark, N. J. The top was canopied with blue bunting studded with stars. Small electric lights would have been even better, but this is a mighty effective lobby as you can see.

Miniature Mixes Try for Prizes

Changing from the Chaplin, Lloyd and Coogan impersonations, the Majestic Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, has changed the pace. It offered prizes for the closest resemblance to Tom Mix.

It was a publicity stunt for The Everlasting Whisper, but it is good general publicity, and it made a good circulation feature for the Record, which was sold the idea.

The basis of the stunt is that most kids have a Wild West play suit, and down in Texas there are perhaps more than elsewhere. The Record reproduced the snap shots of the boys who were photographed in Mix costume, and made a feature of these for several days. Then ticket prizes were awarded the boys who most resembled Tony's leading man.

Most newspapers will welcome any stunt that will put them in right with proud parents, and most parents get all puffed up when they see their kiddies in the home town paper, so everyone gets a powerful kick out of the idea.

Teasing Boston

The Boston Telegram carried a new style contest during the run of The Iron Horse at the Tremont Temple.

Under a large caption reading "Their Hero Son" it explained that hidden in the line was the title of "what the critics call the world's greatest picture." All you had to do was transpose the letters to their proper order.

Each boy or girl who solved the puzzle was given a ticket good when presented by a parent or guardian holding a paid admission.

It's just another way of giving a two-for-one ticket the semblance of value, but it is a mighty useful way.

Boston isa a fairly large town for a stunt like this, but the idea went over well.

Safety Always

Realizing that there had not been a safety campaign in four or five weeks, the Fox exploitation men came to the rescue and started one in Youngstown, Ohio, where Havoc was due at the Hippodrome Theatre.

The main idea was that jay walking created Havoc at crossings, and the Mayor was induced to call upon them to desist. So the theatre printed up two sizes of warnings. These carried a skull and bones and "Warning. Stop. Death. Danger. Havoc."

Police pasted 10,000 of the smaller ones on windshields, while a larger size was pasted on walls and hung at street intersections. It told the entire town about the picture.

WHERE THERE'S WILL THERE'S A WAY TO LOBBY DISPLAY

That's poor poetry but sound fact. C. B. Stiff has small lobby space in the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., but Sun Up is a play of particular appeal in Carolina, so he made what he could out of the lobby and pulled a big crowd.

Made His Display Against Handicap

Because the lobby space is limited in the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., C. B. Stiff does not usually try to put over a dressed lobby, with the result that when he does pitch in, it has much more than the usual effect.

He felt that Sun Up, a story of the mountains, should get more than usual business if properly advertised, so he slabbed his box office and tied a couple of pine trees to the lobby posts. A final touch was a bench made, mountain fashion, of half a log with saplings for legs. A banner describing the play as "A picture of the Carolina Mountains" completed the appeal.

The entire display cost less than a dollar, and it brought in an extra large business through the emphasis it gave the locale.

In some places it is impossible to get business without a good lobby, but in Columbia since lobbies are largely impracticable, their lack is not severely felt and their use is a direct seller.

Worked Many Stunts With Pony Express

J. P. Harrison put in a lot of special work when he put over The Pony Express at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas.

The week before the showing there was a round-up drive of the Y. M. C. A. and a preview of the picture was given the Friday evening before the opening to the Y officials. It had previously been announced that the boys with the highest scores also would be permitted to attend this special. This not only had the kids hustling for the honor, but those who saw the picture naturally bragged it up to those of their acquaintance who had not been in the audience, and the result was an unusual amount of verbal advertising in addition to the newspaper story. The newspapers not only wrote up the show, but mention was made daily in the running story of the drive.

Much on the Streets

An old buggy drawn by two veterans of the old stage routes, 27 years old, made a good ballyhoo and this was supplemented by an auto with painted compo-board sides. These were kept out for several days.

On Sunday twenty-six boys and girls who had their own ponies escorted the prams about town, the riders being dressed in western outfits. When they had covered the city they hitched their ponies in front of the theatre and went in to see the show, while the string of ponies ballied in the passers-by. Then they took another half-hour ride before they went home, and figured they had been having a lot of fun.

Sawmill slabs transformed the house front into a log hut, and a western old time saddle, tied to a hitching post, contributed local color.

The entire county was covered with advertising, with special letters to the school teachers in all the towns.

The Right Word

Several contests for the best criticism on some picture to which it is desired to draw attention have flopped. Generally the reason is that most persons think criticism and faultfinding synonymous and the picture came in for undeserved slams.

C. W. Hallock, of the Victory Theatre, Denver, offered cash prizes for the best expressing of the impressions of The Pony Express, and this gave emphasis to the fact it was a good picture.

Added

Guy Kenimer knew that the Postal Telegraph had tied to The Pony Express for a window card showing and that every station in Jacksonville would flash the card when the feature came to the Arcade Theatre.

Knowing that, he figured that they might be ripe for scene stills, so he passed them out, and every office manager said "yes."

Those Postal frames do not have much display value, for the frames are in constant use and the change in the cards is not sufficiently marked to get attention. The stills not only did their own advertising, but they called attention to the Postal signs.

Fred Meyer Put Out His Own Pony Express Rider

A First National Release

WE WOULD CALL THIS A BALLY, BUT IT ISN'T, BECAUSE—

The laws of Sydney, Australia, provide that ballyhoos shall not be paraded. This dino came into town by truck and went out again. The law says it's a bally, but the defense argues that it merely is a delivery wagon. Make your own bets.

His Pony Express Carried a Message

Fred E. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, launched the run of The Pony Express by sending a pony express rider from Hamilton to an adjoining town.

Of course it is a simple matter to put a man on a horse and tell him he is an express rider, but that is not Meyer's way. He arranged to start the stunt from the City Hall where the mayor gave the rider a message to the City Manager of the objective town, with all due formality and in the presence of photographers, newspaper men and the general public.

And to make sure that it would be understandable, Meyer talked to the reporters to the extent of nearly half a column about the original pony express and the film which perpetuates the deeds of heroism.

It was thoroughly readable copy, winding up with this paragraph: "So, in tribute to the finest body of men who ever bled for the nation, the Palace Theatre will revive the Pony Express on next Saturday. Each hoofbeat of the horse which carries the Express rider to Middletown will reverberate through dead generations and awaken in public consciousness the heroism of men whose fearlessness kept our nation intact."

The best way to work this is to lay off part of the cost to some nearby manager who also is going to show the picture, and make it work in both towns. Mr. Meyer worked his to advertise the Palace showing along the route.

Skipped Lithos

To get a change of pace, and because he knew that Norma Talmadge appaled to the reading public, George E. Brown, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, cut out the litographs for Graustark and made a 50% increase in his newspaper space. He beat nay previous Talmadge record and came close to topping the best Saturday business. A by product was a chance to slide advertise The Gold Rush to more than the usual number of patrons.

Old Timers

Rodney Bush revived the one piece coat and suit hanger for Not So Long Ago at the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

He tied it in nicely with the statement that "not so long ago" these hangers were popular in New York, and running into a few lines for the play.

He had an old fashioned high wheel bicycle in the lobby and at the curb was the first automobile sold in the state; an early Cadillac. Both got more than a little attention.

He used the Old Timers Night, but limited his invitation to couples who had lived in Birmingham for fifty years. Reporters from the local paper got the stories of the old inhabitants and the stunt more than paid for itself in newspaper publicity cut two ways.

Neat Legal Point Is Ballyhoo Idea

Over in France they are said to cherish a lawsuit that has been running for upward of four hundred years. About the time that is settled Australian lawyers and judges may have settled on the designation of this dinosaur.

Looking at it you might say that it was a ballyhoo or perambulator, but herein you err grievously. You are making the same mistake that led the authorities of New South Wales to hand a whole pack of summons and things to the First National agency there.

They thought it was a bally, too. There is a law against parading street advertising, and so when the dino made its appearance the driver was given a summons, and the First National was given a summons and everyone else down to the office boys got a summons, and all in the mistaken idea that this is a ballyhoo.

But you see it isn't a bally, at all. It's a delivery wagon.

Honest It Was

Yep. The driver had some films to deliver, and he didn't have time to unload the dino, so he just had to take it along, and as he had cans for every theatre served by First National, it was a long route.

So the learned judge ruled that it was a delivery wagon and not a ballyhoo, and they have not yet taken it to the Court of Appeals, but it is liable to get there yet.

Meanwhile the delivery wagon probably continues to function but without the dino, since there has been enough advertising.

It was John Rosenfield who invented the delivery idea, but John never had the nerve to load a dino on a trick, and anyhow he was working for Paramount and not First National so he just delivered advertising signs unwrapped, but the idea is the same.

ON THE SIDEWALK

Loew's State Theatre, Newark, borrowed a number of pets and birds from a local store and made both a lobby and a sidewalk display.

The sidewalk display was mostly parrots and monkeys, with smaller birds predominating in the lobby. A generous sized credit card on both displays paid for the loan of the exhibit. The sidewalk card reads: "See Lon Chaney as the Proprietor of the Bird Store in the Unholy Three." There is not much appeal to the line, but probably it does arouse curiosity. Certainly the animals did some selling.

If you have no bird store make this a loan exhibit. That is even better.

Brown Introduces a New Orchestra

George E. Brown, of the Palace Theatre, Memphis, put in a new, and better, band recently, and knowing that they could be made an asset to the house, he did it right. His stunt probably will interest others who may make a similar move.

He selected The Gold Rush for the debut, feeling that he could reach the largest number of persons through these audiences. A trailer first introduced the band as a whole and then each individual was announced separately and stood in a spotlight and played the chorus of the number the band was giving. This might not be practical in a larger organization, but the personal introduction is feasible. Now Brown has his orchestra pit filled with stars instead of just musicians.

The idea of getting a new organization was to obtain a body of players who could be featured, and the men will be given occasional solos as part of the regular program features.

Eddie Hyman has made some of his players draw equal to the stage acts, notably his xylophonist and pianist. If you can do this, you can save money on your stage show and still give the same satisfaction.

It was worth a page of the usual presswork.

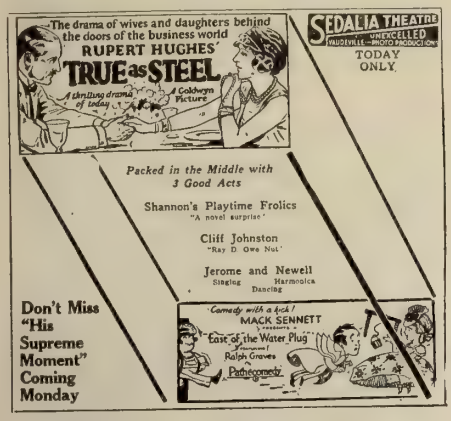
Sitting in With Planck's Sedalia Problems

Planck Layouts Offer Problems

George E. Planck, who now is located at the Sedalia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., sends in a few pounds of advertising samples and asks for comment. He was with Lem Stewart in the home office of Paramount theatres and later did exploitation for First National out of Kansas City. He knows exploitation thoroughly and has a good idea of newspaper layouts, but he wants to check up on his ideas, and we think that others will be interested in his problems, so we are going to use a lot of his samples. He writes that his chief concern has been his Friday to Sunday ads, when he has to add some vaudeville without detracting from his screen attractions. The first example shows one



A Metro-Goldwyn Release

WITH VAUDEVILLE

stab in this direction, and his most successful effort. Here the layout gives top space to True as Steel, lists the vaudeville and then closes with the comedy. The rule work is to suggest a box "packed in the middle with three good acts." To this end he cuts through the lower electro to let in the rule; a device we do not recall having seen used before. This carries the idea of a film show with vaudeville rather than a vaudeville show with a film appendix. We like this treatment, because when vaudeville is used part of the time, there is some danger of carrying the suggestion that you get less for your money four days a week instead of more for your money on the other three. Because this is a Sunday space, there is a prominent display for the underline. The space is a three sixes, and there is room for white space, which gives a prominent display. The press work is rather poor. There is too much "impression" and the paper is forced against the type until not only the printing surface but the edges of the holes where excess metal has been cut away are registered. It would seem that the Metro-Goldwyn cut was provided with a line and that the cut for the comedy was framed in the office to make a match, since this latter cut does not show square corners. Mr. Planck lets the cuts tell their own story. He merely sets in the vaudeville and the underline and provides prominence through the layout. We do not like the billing for the acts. "A novel surprise" does not mean anything, but we gather that Planck trusts to his press work to put the items over, for he writes that he believes the reading notices he gets form the best single item in his sales campaign. This has been the experience of many managers, who trust more to the reading notices than to their display ads and run the latter chiefly to command the former. In some instances the managers overlook the fact that they also can sell through the display, but Planck does not make this mistake, though he does flop a little in the matter of attractive billing. Vaudeville acts are supposed to send in their "billing," but in our own vaudeville days we never hesitated to write our own ticket when we did not like what the act sent in. In this regard we think the advertisement could be improved. Otherwise it is very good. It will be noted that the house signature is an oblong reverse cut slightly under column width. That was the stock signature when Planck took the house over. If you will look at the double cut you will see another signature he devised, patterning after the Kunsky houses in Detroit. This gives the always prominent circle, and is handy since it can be dropped into many spaces where the oblong will look out of place. An oblong or square cut must "ride square" to the rest of the layout, but you can put in a circle wherever you find room without committing a typographical offense. The second example shows another, and less successful handling of the vaudeville. Here the acts are placed in the corners, with a serial to fill the fourth hole. It is a nice, orderly layout, but it is not as good display. The centre panel is framed from a two column stock cut, with apparently home-made selling talk. It sounds as though the copy writer were hopelessly trying to guess at the feature. If we had Mr. Planck's job we would hold up our right hand and solemnly swear never to use a halftone cut in any advertisement. The paper does well jam soft paper against type with gummy ink and still get a result that will make the space look bright and inviting. The line just below the signature hooks The Desert Flower to Sally and does it with a phrase that suggests the locale of the current story. "Hot dog, it's Sally" would be more up to date, but it would not have the color of "Hot tamale," for tamales are standard food where The Desert Flower thrives. There is a somewhat loose connection between the end of this line and the continuation just above the star name. On the other hand the second bank reads well if taken by itself. "Moore" in the star name looks like more poor printing but it really is another case of poor hand lettering, with a white hairline through each letter that serves to mess it up without making it look distinctive. In the example on Beggar on Horseback the "There isn't a horse" copy leads off with a frank explanation of just what it is in the lower panel. This carries less white space than the average, but that is because there is more to be said. The picture requires explanation if the average spectator is to view it in the proper frame of mind, and so the space fills up, though it is by no means overcrowded. The cut does not get over. Until you have seen the play, you do not realize that it really is a huge necktie and not a curtain or something, so the effect aimed at is lost, though that scarcely is Planck's fault. Here the circle reverse makes its first appearance in the announcement of the Shenandoah pictures. In all of these spaces you will note that there is a hairline rule around the space. This is done without regard for how the advertisement lies in the page. If it rests against column rules or cutoffs there is still a two point space of white outside the hairline to hold it from contact. For The Marriage Whirl two press book cuts are used, and these are put into the space with good judgment. The large type for the date seems to be characteristic of the first day display. On a two day run less noise is made about the playing days, but always the change of program is marked by large type to call attention to the change. The selling talk is rather scant, but it gets over the idea, and that is all that is necessary. The cut title puts an edge to the sales talk with its dancing brides. Most managers seem to feel that they must use the three column layout supplied by First National. We think that with this pair of smaller cuts a better display is achieved at less than half the cost. One of the best displays is that for Adventure, and here the cut helps materially. In this Planck makes his first use of the double panel effect, with the inner rules cut to let the illustration through. This not only saves space, but it gives a better effect than would have resulted from the use of a panel large enough to contain the entire cut. There is a saving of an inch and a half in space and a material gain in effect. Even where an extra composition charge is made for cutting the rule, the effect is worth the additional cost. There is a good play-up for the shorts and the single vaudeville act and the general impression of a good show is created through the layout of the type as much as from the good cut. For The Ten Commandments he stressed the prices as the picture was roadshowed last season. For the opening day he does not depart from the standard three sixes and for the follow he employs a two six and a halfs. We think that in the opening day space (on the right), he is in error

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

A First National Release

TWO GOOD CUTS

A Paramount Release

when he makes allusion to the World War. Most persons know that there is no reference to the war in the story, but not all will stop to recall the fact and this might suggest another war story. What he aimed at was a suggestion of a thought-forming picture, but he does not quite get it over. On the second day he uses four lines of comment such as "The Miracle of the Screen" and "Unforgettable in Theme." That space might better have been given to a bold display of the prices in place of the modest six point over Moses' head. We think these the least effective of the lot, for he does not quite convey the suggestion of bigness. This has nothing to do with the size of the ad. It's in the talk. In this pair of displays are seen the two styles of drop-in circles already alluded to and which now are the permanent trademarks of the house. Our personal preference is for the one on the right, even if it does slant the name down a diagonal. Theoretically this is not as good form as the straight line, but the even size of the lettering offsets the slant. Both, however, are good. Taken by and large we don't believe that Mr. Planck stands much in need of advice, and we are making this rather full use of cuts because we think that the gradual improvement in style to be noted will interest many others.

may sink into the cut in reproduction, so to save your eyes, it's a picture of Marion Davies holding a teacup. Just that. There is an attractive title, and some clever talk, with a silhouette of an old fashioned carriage with a suggestion of a rail fence. That all helps to sell, because you can scarcely visualize Broadway, even in the early days, with a rail fence. But what Marion Davies drinking tea has to offer in the way of entetrtainment is something you cannot quite understand. There must have been something in the stills that was better than this. It's strictly a non-seller, and we think that no cut at all would have been better than this, for no cut would at least not have suggested a tea drinking story. The Loew Washington houses hit so high an average that they are entitled to a slip now and then, but when they take a tumble it is all the more noticeable because of the general excellence of their work.

Switching the Spotlight to the Exhibitor

Edited by Sumner Smith

Quebec Exhibitor's Condition Better

GEORGES VEZINA, proprietor of the Quebec Exhibitor's picture theatre at Chicoutimi, Quebec, has been seriously ill during recent weeks but his condition is improving. It is interesting to note that Mr. Vezina has been one of the star players of the Canadian professional hockey team of Montreal, Quebec, in the National Hockey League, which now includes teams in New York, Boston, Pittsburgh and other cities. Mr. Vezina, between games, directs the destinies of the Chicoutimi Theatre in Northern Quebec, and he also has other business interests there. Incidentally, he is the father of eleven children.

The first Australian picture brought to Canada is still going strong after almost two years of presentation in the Dominion. This is "The Man They Could Not Hang," which has been touring Canada as a road show. The most recent important engagement was at the Grand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, where it played twice daily for a week under the direction of Maynard Joiner, manager of the Grand Theatre.

H. M. Thomas of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Western Division manager of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, has returned to Winnipeg after a business inspection trip through the Western Prairie Provinces of the Dominion, which included the theatres at Edmonton, Calgary, Moose Jaw, Regina, Saskatoon and other centres. He arranged for the special presentation of a number of current attractions, including "Little Annie Rooney," "Cobra," "Romola" and "Don Q."

B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, made a special of a local orchestra as an added attraction during the week of December 7, this being Orville Johnston's orchestra of eleven pieces. The engagement was in the nature of a farewell because the band was leaving immediately afterwards for London, England, to fill a contract in the Empire metropolis. When Manager J. M. Franklin of Keith's heard that the orchestra was going to England, he arranged the farewell appearance.

Henry McRae, who has been appointed director-general of production at Universal City, Cal., is a brother of Finley McRae of Ottawa, manager of the Alexandria Hotel, Ottawa, and executor of the estate of the late Harry Brouse, the Ottawa millionaire who was the owner of the Imperial and Family Theatres there and a charter director of First National. Henry McRae made two pictures in the Ottawa district several years ago for Ottawa Film Productions, Ltd.

John Arthur of Toronto, director of presentations for the Famous Players Canadian Corp., is busy with one of the most pretentious Christmas pantomimes ever to be presented in Canada. This will be given at the Toronto Hippodrome during the week of December 21 in conjunction with a special picture program. The pantomime will have a company of 50 people and will be given in ten scenes.

Five union employes of the Majestic Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, went on strike December 4 as a result of a dispute over wages and the employment of non-union men by Froman & Petigorsky, the proprietors of the theatre, of which Harold Vance is the manager. The trouble began two weeks previously when W. Graham, stage manager, and G. E. Groves, projectionist, ceased work claiming that wages were overdue. Oscar Petigorsky, one of the proprietors, denied this statement and declared that the employes had objected to the employment of non-union men. Mr. Petigorsky also claimed that the theatre could not afford to pay the high wages and that he was glad that the strike had materialized. Instead of $43 a week he was now paying his stage manager $15 a week, and in place of the $40 a week for the projectionist he was now paying $20 a week for a non-union man.

The striking musicians, who walked out on December 4, took up the matter with the Ottawa Allied Trades and Labor Association. The proprietors of the Majestic, on the other hand, promised to make an issue of the strike. The theatre is continuing without interruption.

Pittsburgh Exhibitor Hurt in Accident

HARRY PETZ, one of the pioneer exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory, now conducting the Pearl Theatre, Youngwood, Pa., suffered a badly cut mouth and the jarring loose of several front teeth in an automobile collision recently. When the accident occurred Mr. Petz's face was thrown violently against his own steering gear.

Recent out-of-town exhibitor visitors to Pittsburgh's Film Row included Tom Wright, Brownsville; Wm. Lamproplos, Latrobe; J. A. Smail, Avonmore, and Milan Salowich, Johnstown.

The Sheridan Square Theatre in East Liberty, a vaudeville house, changing program twice weekly, five acts of vaudeville and two-reel comedies, has changed its policy and hereafter feature photoplays will be run in conjunction with the stage attractions. The new policy went into effect on December 7. The Harris Amusement Company owns the theatre and J. O. Hooley is resident manager.

The Schenley Theatre, a beautiful neighborhood house in the Oakland district, Pittsburgh, has made a remarkable departure from the beaten path by installing a fifteen-piece symphony orchestra. This organization will play special numbers on the stage as well as accompany the feature pictures. Shows are changed thrice weekly. The theatre is controlled by the Harry Davis Enterprises Company and J. Harry Hayward is resident manager.

New York Exhibitor Not Killed in Accident

L. E. AKINS, manager of the Gem, Randolph, N. Y., was not killed in the auto accident which claimed his wife's life. Mr. Akins was, however, severely injured, but is now recovering. First reports said that Mr. Akins also was killed.

Johnny Carr, manager of Shea's North Park, says that his patrons are enthusiastic over the new $50,000 Wurlitzer organ just installed and that he has received many letters congratulating him on the big improvement in the music programs at this popular North Buffalo community house.

No More Dog Acts For Albany Showman

THERE will be no more dog acts on amateur nights at the Albany Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., if Edward Walsh, manager of the house, has his say, and the chances are that he will. For some weeks past Mr. Walsh has been staging an amateur night along with his pictures, one evening each week, drawing good crowds, the acts costing but little and giving fair satisfaction as a general rule. The winners have received a dollar or so from Mr. Walsh, after the applause from the audience has decided which act is to receive first prize, second prize and so on. One night last week Mr. Walsh had for one of the amateur acts three boys and what they claimed was a trained dog. If the dog ever had any tricks, he absolutely refused to display the same on the night in question. As a result, the act received hardly a ripple from the audience and the boys were not in on the prize money. But the boys, and possibly the dog, too, took an entirely different viewpoint. When the show was over and the audience had filtered out, the boys accosted Mr. Walsh and demanded a dollar for their act. Mr. Walsh replied that they had not been declared among the prize winners by the applause of the audience, and that accordingly he owed them nothing.

"Give us the money," said the older one of the trio, "or we'll set the dog on you."

Mr. Walsh took a look at the dog, which by this time had assumed the proportions of a full grown calf and looked as ferocious as any that ever crossed the ice after Eliza, and decided that a dollar was but a dollar and might well be spent in self protection. So the three boys marched from the theatre with the dollar, the dog with tail swagging, trailing behind.

"There is an old saying," murmured Herman Vineberg, manager of the Albany Theatre in Albany," to the effect that while God loves the Irish, the Jews get the money." And with this off his chest, Mr. Vineberg continued the lobby in green for the week's run of "Irish Luck." Oh, yes, one thing more—Mr. Vineberg indulges in a manicure about once a week and says that it's a dollar well spent just for the sake of having the Ten Eyck manicurist hold his hand and tell him how much she is enjoying the pictures.

Bill Smalley, with a dozen or more the-atres at his command, arrived in town last week aid worked eighteen hours out of the twenty-four before he started back for Cooperstown. Sure, Mr. Smalley reported business as being good, and he generally means what he says. If one ever wants to find Mr. Smalley after 6 o'clock on a day when he is in Albany, he can be located at the Universal exchange, for he generally winds up there knowing that that exchange rarely, if ever, closes before 8 o'clock.

Even though Claude Fish, who runs the American in Schenectady, found his receipts on Thanksgiving Day just $9 less than a year ago, he enjoyed his turkey and thanked his lucky stars that the newborne baby never made so much as a whimper during the holiday. The other night Mr. Fish was discussing business just about the time the 9 o'clock show let out, with a large crowd trooping down from the balcony. Mr. Fish gave this portion of the crowd but a momentary glance and then sized up those coming from the ground floor, remarking that it was not from upstairs he was making his profits but from the main floor.

Babe in the Woods

IMAGINE, if you can, just what happened the other day to the new owner of a residential theatre in Albany, N. Y., who entered the business without knowing a single thing about it, and then finding himself the possessor of a theatre, strolled down to Film Row and stood in front of one of the exchanges. About that time one of the salesmen came out and the newborn owner, turning to him, remarked:

"I have bought the theatre but I do not know where to get the pictures."

The curtain, out of kindness to the exhibitor, will now descend.

Anyhow, the combination appears to be working out well for Miss Feuer.

Through the Loyal Order of the Moose in Albany, the orphans of the city were dined one day the past week while the Mark Strand entertained the children at a free show during the morning. It must have been ("some") scene, for as Frank Braymeier of the Barcli in Schenectady described a picture he was showing, there was a church scene that simply "ripped" the people right out of their seats. Carpenters are busy remodeling the interior of Warner Brothers' exchange. Manager Stern's office will be in front, giving the full sweep of the office across the back for the office staff. His office has been besieged by his many friends, both among exhibitors and exchanges, who have stepped in to welcome him back to Seattle.

A preview of "Winds of Chance," at which Alaskans now in Seattle were guests, was given in the First National exchange here last week, with Manager Fred Sliter acting as host.

Greater Features, Inc., will move shortly into its new location at 12th and Gilsen streets, Portland, Ore., in a building now being completed for them. It is probable that a projection room will be part of the equipment.

Kansas City

And still business continues at a brisk pace along Kansas City's Film Row despite the holidays. Bob Gary, Universal exploiteer, spent a lively week at Ottawa, Kans., on a campaign on "The Phantom of the Opera" at Willard Frazier's Crystal Theatre. Leslie Durland, booker for the Independent Film Corp., knew he could sell film—and did—to Kansas exhibitors. Paul Gray, Southern Division exploitation manager for Pathe, was a Kansas City visitor. Sam Berger and Harris Wolfberg, special Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer representatives, made a sales canvass of the Kansas City territory, while E. C. Rhoden, manager of Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., made a business visit to Kirksville, Mo., Stanley Rolo, formerly connected with the old Mutual Film Company, has accepted a position as representative for the Kansas City P. D. C. branch. C. E. Gregory, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branch manager, is jubilant over the fact that he has a decided "edge" on Kansas City first-run bookings for the next three weeks. C. A. Schultz, P. D. C. branch manager, left on a hurried business trip for Leavenworth, Kans. Louis Reichert, Warner Bros., is branch manager, confining his efforts to Central Missouri.

EVERY ONCE IN A WHILE somebody tries to cheer up an unhappy guy by saying, "Huh! That ain't so worse." L. Goldstein, manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Central American office, says that when he hears of transportation difficulties in the States. Here you see him fording a Guatemalan river and about to throw the bull; also, with J. J. Stadler, owner of the Capitol, Guatemala City, rejoicing over an effective display of Buster Keaton in "The Navigator."

Bob is one of the best known exchange men in this end of the state and this is his first adventure in the exhibiting end of the business. He leaves "U" and the new manager, Charlie Goodwin, with much regret but he goes with the well wishes of his office associates and the congratulations of many exchange and theatre men in the city.

Art Young, who has been with the Buffalo office of Universal for some 15 years, recently as booker and assistant manager, has been appointed assistant manager of the Philadelphia exchange of the same company by District Manager Earl Kramer. Basil Brady, Pathe manager, has received a "Freshman" trophy from Harold Lloyd, together with a letter congratulating Basil on the excellent showing made by the local office with the latest Lloyd comedy. Mr. Brady's position on the "Freshman" team is left tackle. Buffalo stood seventh on the list of the eleven best offices of the 32 in the country on sales.

"Bill" Lee Barton, city salesman for Universal, has been appointed short subject sales manager. "Bill" has been with Universal in Pittsburgh for eighteen years, no other local film man coming within years of this remarkable record. "Bill" began when the office was first opened, at which time it was known as the independent Film Exchange, Inc.

Samuel Fineberg, city salesman for the Columbia exchange, had a narrow escape from serious injury or death recently when his sedan skidded and overturned on a wet road. Sam suffered severe cuts on the right eye and on his nose. The car just missed going over a twelve-foot embankment.

Herbert Ives is in charge of the Standard office during Mr. Rowan's illness.

The Butterfield Enterprises have added another office to their large suite in the Film Building, the new room to be used for the bookkeeping and auditing departments. The circuit now occupies a suite of seven rooms.

Town Laws Conflict With Operation of Theatre

THERE is a fine little mix-up at the present time in Lowville, N. Y., over the management of the Opera House. The town board recently awarded the management of the theatre to J. H. Gerner, who has been associated with E. J. Wolfe in handling the Bijou Theatre of Lowville. Mr. Gerner made two propositions to the town board, one to lease the house outright and the other to manage the theatre on a percentage basis. The town board went on record as in favor of the latter plan.

It now develops that there is a section in the law under which the theatre was erected as a town hall to the effect that the net receipts from the house are to be paid over to a person named, and applied on the payment of bonds and interest.

In the neighboring city of Ogdensburg, a similar case recently came up and was taken into the courts with a resultant decision that no town board could legally take chances of loss or gain in operating a theatre, and that in case of loss, the taxpayers would be called upon to make up any deficiency.

CHRISTMAS FILM DELIVERY

First Assistant Postmaster General John H. Bartlett at Washington, D. C., announces that delivery service will be accorded films for Christmas, if special delivery stamps are films, as the department will discontinue all used. That is a special dispensation for films, as the department will discontinue all possible postal service on Christmas to allow employes a holiday.

National Laugh Month Bookings Mount To New "High" as January Draws Near

JUDGED by the bookings (the only test in any drive), NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH will, it is asserted, take first place in special selling events in the motion picture industry.

Theatre owners who never bothered about short features before have been "shopping early" for special attractions for their January show bills.

Theatre owners who book short features week in and week out have been trying to beat their competitors to the "good things" listed in the various producer-distributor announcements.

Gordon S. White, of Educational, Chairman of the National Laugh Month Committee of the Short Features Advertising Association (the "silent" hustler), gathered a bundle of telegrams together when the representative of Moving Picture World dropped into National Laugh Month headquarters, and said:

"Looks good."

(This may be interpreted thus: "We've been knocked for a goal. Never saw anything like it. Easily the 'biggest thing' in the history of short features.")

When the committee of distributors of short length comedies gathered together and decided to make January National Laugh Month they laid out an ambitious schedule —a high goal to reach. When the final details of the plan had been agreed upon there remained but a short space of time in which to accomplish the desired results.

A broadside to exhibitors, to be followed by a press sheet containing ideas for "putting it over," were the main items of the budget. The aid of accessory manufacturers was to be sought in the preparation of posters, banners, pennants, slides, trailers, buttons and advertising cuts and mats. Each company participating was to work with and through its own exchanges and through its advertising and publicity department.

Committee Reports "Progress"

At the end of three weeks the committee reports to the industry—"progress." But it does not report in the usual manner of most committees using that work as a "stall" to mean that nothing has been done. Instead, the National Laugh Month Committee is able to report very definitely things accomplished.

The movement to make January an industry affair is broadnened. It has been taken up all over the country by newspapers, magazines and prominent individuals. Exhibitors, individually and "en circuit" have responded wholeheartedly. Large picture palaces and small show houses have stepped into line—in a word Laugh Month is now an assured success.

The New York newspapers (in which no amount of money could buy news space) have co-operated splendidly. The main editorial writers and colyumnists have co-operated to the limit. A suggestion of the scope and the possibilties of the idea was all they needed and they responded.

The newspapers in Los Angeles heard of the idea from the local exchange managers and immediately set their advertising staffs to work on two two-page spreads. The first will be devoted to the theatres, featuring Laugh Month, and the second, to appear two weeks later, to featuring the comedy stars. Of course, the star angle is only possible in one spot but papers in other parts of the country are falling in behind the idea of co-operative pages for the theatres.

The Milwaukee branch managers interviewed a committee of newspapermen and have received the promise of co-operation from the dailies in every key city and town in Wisconsin.

By no means the least of those co-operating is the King Features Syndicate. With 180 features, including many of the best known comic strips and cartoons in the world and with many of the best known feature writers, this organization is in thorough accord with the plan. It is preparing to join forces with the National Laugh Month Committee and the added impetus which this will give will be seen throughout the entire country.

Idea Becoming International

The idea has spread to England. Already suggestions have been made to the trade press of the "tight little isle" for a similar campaign and in due time we shall hear the Laugh Month echo come rolling back from across the Atlantic.

Theatre men everywhere are forming special committees to push the plan vigorously. In Atlantic City the group that handled "Greater Movie Season" has been rebuilt and expects to put it over with a bang. In Waterloo, Iowa, Alexander Frank, President of the Frank Amusement Campany, has called a meeting of all the interested people in Waterloo, Cedar Rapids and Clinton, Iowa. In his letter to New York headquarters he says, "This innovation should prove a great stimulant for the month of January. As a matter of fact, with proper exploitation, it should show still greater results than "Greater Movie Season"!

On the matter of accessories the Sweeney Lithograph Company who made the posters, banners and pennants, reports that practically half the first printing of these accessories have been ordered. The broadsides have all been mailed to exhibitors with the opening announcement and these will be followed within a week by the press sheets. These contain a variety of material from three-quarter inch cuts to 8 column size, suggestion for local tie up, illustrations of all cuts and accessories. One special feature is the "Laugh Month Calendar." This is made in four column size and can be used by the local exhibitor for a calendar, a throw-away, the back of a herald or the center of a group of advertisements.

Newspaper Ad Drives

Every newspaper in the country is receiving proof sheets of the cuts contained in the press book and will receive mats and such cuts as it can in co-operation with local merchants as well as with the theatre men. They are being urged to get their advertis-

Big "Ad" Drive Planned for "Laugh Month" By Mack Sennett and Hal Roach Comedies

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., will plunge heavily on an advertising campaign in behalf of their short features for the National Laugh Month drive.

Hal Roach's stars in two-reel comedies will play a prominent part in providing fun during "Laugh Month" in Pathe comedies, and the producer is keeping up a busy production schedule with five units in action. Clyde Cook, Charley Chase, Glenn Tryon, "Hal Roach" and "Our Gang" comedies will be released during "Laugh Month."

Charley Chase's next comedy vehicle is being prepared by Leo McCarey, his director, and Chase, himself, under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, director-general of the Roach studios. Chase has just completed a comedy, in which he was supported by Mildred Harris, Vivian Oakland and Syd Crossley.

Glenn Tryon's next story is under preparation as the last one is now being completed by Fred Guiol. The cast with Tryon in his latest vehicle includes Katherine Grant, Sue O'Neil, Charlotte Mineau, "Rube" Clifford, Helen Gilmore, Bobby Young, Tiny Sandford and Al Hallett.

Clyde Cook's newest fun film is nearing completion under the direction of James W. Horne, with Eileen Percy, Stuart Holmes, Shirley Palmer and James Mack in the cast. Some spectacular photographic and thrill effects are promised in the appearance of two gigantic apes.

Robert McGowan is preparing a new "Our Gang" comedy, having completed a two-reeler a few days ago.

Richard Wallace is completing the latest "Hal Roach" comedy with Jimmie Finlayson, Gertrude Astor, Sue O'Neil, Charlotte Mineau, Mildred June, Tyler Brooke, "Spec" O'Donnell, Ivor McFadden and Jerry Mandi in the cast.

Mack Sennett announces an addition to his staff of comedy writers who devise fun for this producer's Pathe comedies, which will help make "Laugh Month" a merry success. The newcomer is James Gruen, well known scenario and continuity writer. He is now busily engaged with Jefferson Moffitt in the preparation of a story for Ralph Graves.

"A Love Sundae" is the title of the latest two-reeler featuring dainty Alice Day. Youth, sweetness and sparkling humor are the ingredients that Alice brings to her new fun film.

Del Lord is now guiding Billy Bevan and the "Mack Sennett" two-reel unit in a fun concoction. In addition to Bevan the cast includes Madeline Hurlock, Andy Clyde and Kewpie Morgan.

Eddie Cline is wielding the megaphone on a new Alice Day vehicle, in which the little star is supported by Danny O'Shea, Ruth Taylor, Joe Young and Eddie Quillan.

Lloyd Bacon is making a new Ralph Graves two-reeler in which Thelma Parr again plays opposite the popular comedian. The cast also numbers such favorites as Marvin Lobach and Sunshine Hart.

Word has just reached the Sennett studio that Ben Turpin is the most popular screen comedian in Russia. Revolutions may come and go, but the drawing power of the Mack Sennett comedian never wanes. The Russians are enthusiastic movie fans with a discriminating comedy sense. They have chosen Ben as their favorite because they consider him a great artist.

News Reels Feature "Laugh Month"

The various companies releasing news reels have made arrangements for special material to be used in boosting January as Laugh Month.

Pathe News editorial department has made arrangements to shoot a group of well-known cartoonists doing their stuff on heads or other drawings suitable for Laugh Month. Among those who will be filmed are, George McManus, creator of Jiggs and Maggie in "Bringing Up Father"; Billy DeBeck of Barney Google and Spark Plug fame; Russ Westover who makes "Tillie" a toiler—sometimes; Cliff Sterrett, creator of "Polly and Her Pals," and Harry Hirschfield, raconteur par excellence—also a cartoonist of note who features Abie The Agent and Kabibble Kabaret.

Kinograms through its West Coast representative has arranged to take pictures of various comedians doing special stunts apropos of the season and of Laugh Month. So far the following have been lined up for the Kinogram reel, Bobby Vernon, Walter Hiers, Harry Langdon, Floyd Hamilton, Lupino Lane, Lige Conley, Jimmie Adams, Al St. John, and Johnny Arthur. By the time the reel is ready to be shot there will be additional names on the list.

From Fox comes the information that the Fox newsreel is working on an idea but they are not ready to tell about it yet. They promise that it will be a laugh provoker.

All of the newsreel companies are planning to make their releasing fall between Christmas and New Years so that they will prove most effective for the Laugh Month campaign.

Alice Day and Charley Chase divide two-reel comedy starring honors on the Pathe short feature schedule for the week of December 20th. Miss Day appears in "Hotsy Totsy" produced by Mack Sennett, and Charley Chase lures laughs in "His Wooden Wedding" made by Hal Roach. Other subjects on this week's program include "Tol'able Romeo," a Roach single reeler; chapter three of the Patheserial "The Green Archer"; "The English Channel Swim," one of "Aesop's Film Fables"; Pathe Review No. 51, and two issues of the Pathe News, and "Topics of the Day."

"His Wooden Wedding" is just as its title implies, a matrimonial mix-up. Chase is the groom who nearly becomes the gloom when somebody informs him that his bride has a wooden leg. The information was supplied by a rejected suitor but failed to be true. Katherine Grant portrays the bride who is just the kind of a girl to risk marriage on Friday 13th. Gale Henry, Fred De Silva and John Cossar are in the cast. Leo McCarey directed this two-reeler which was produced by Hal Roach.

"Hotsy Totsy" is a merry comic concoction of funny situations. Alice Day is a charming department store girl who attends a banquet given by her boss for a new partner. Alice received an invitation because she could recite a presentation speech and bestow a loving cup. Since it is her first appearance in this guise, mistakes follow in rapid order to provide laughs. Eugenia Gilbert, Danny O'Shea, Barney Helleum and Kalla Pasha are in the cast. Alf Goulding directed this two-reeler for Mack Sennett.

"Tol'able Romeo" is a Hal Roach single-reeler directed by Jess Robbins. The plot concerns a presentation of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" with variations that provoke mirth. Katherine Grant is the leading lady.

"In the Enemy's Stronghold" is the third chapter of the new Pathe-serial "The Green Archer" adapted by Frank Leon Smith from the Edgar Wallace novel. Allene Ray and Walter Miller are the leads. This episode shows what happens when Valerie Howett (Miss Ray) accepts Abel Bellamy's (Burr McIntosh) invitation to call at the castle and is taken on a personally conducted tour from turret to dungeons by Bellamy who believes her to be the "Green Archer." Spencer Bennet directed. Frank Lackteen, Burr McIntosh, Stephen Grattan, Dorothy King are in the cast.

Pathe Review No. 51 presents: "The Shrine of the Faithful," the ancient capitol of Japan; "American Wild Flowers," a distinctive Pathe-color series produced by the time-lapse camera by Arthur C. Pillsbury of Yosemite National Park; and "The Bee's Daily Bread," one of the L. H. Tolhurst "Magic Eye" series of microscopic studies.

"The English Channel Swim" is the Paul Terry creation of "Aesop's Film Fables." "Topics of the Day" and two issues of Pathe News complete the Pathe short feature schedule for the week of December 20th.

Big List of Century Comedies Scheduled for Holidays and National "Laugh Month"

THE STERN BROTHERS announce an unusually large schedule of Century Comedies for release during the December holiday period.

In addition to their availability for booking during the Christmas season, these comedies have been selected so that they will be equally as appropriate for presentation during January, National Laugh Month.

The Century holiday list is headed by a new Buster Brown Comedy and includes two-reelers starring Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian, Al Alt and Eddie Gordon. These comedies have been selected from a big list of completed Century products as being of especial box-office value, and therefore of the maximum pulling power during the holidays.

The new Buster Brown Comedy is "Buster's Nightmare." It is the fourth in the Buster Brown series and recently had its Broadway premiere in the Warner's Theatre, New York City. Following its successful week in that house, it was played over the entire Loew circuit in and around New York City and went far in establishing the Buster Brown Comedies as one of the outstanding comedy offerings of the year.

"Buster's Nightmare" was directed by Gus Meins, with Arthur Trimble as Buster, Doreen Turner as Mary Jane, Pete the dog comedian as Tige, and Pinto Colvig as the Brown butler. The two-reeler is filled with humorous pranks and comedy situations. Reports from Warner's and the Loew houses state that the audiences were in a continuous uproar during the running of this big comedy.

"Going Some," the Wanda Wiley Comedy slated for current release, is that star's latest two-reeler. It was made by Edward I. Luddy with Jack Singleton in the leading male role. In it Miss Wiley has ample opportunity for numerous comedy stunts and daring escapades, such as have gained for her the reputation as the outstanding stunt comedienne of the screen.

WANDA WILEY
All set for more of her roles in Universal's Century Comedies.

"Eighteen Carat," is by far Edna Marian's best comedy. In selecting it for holiday release, the Sterns were actuated by the exceptional reviews recently given on this picture by the trade reviewers. It is another of Miss Marian's inimitable "fresh from the farm" roles in which she is seen first as a farmer's daughter and then as a shop girl in the big city. Her escapades are many and the action is enlivened by many new gags. The comedy was directed by William Watson. This two-reeler is said to have one of the funniest automobile sequences ever screened.

"Scandal Hunters" is the Al Alt comedy included in the holiday schedule. It was directed by Jess Robbins and is a take-off on the adventures of a cub reporter on the trail of a big story. Larry Richardson and Marie Torpie are in the cast. Wherever it has been pre-released this comedy has met with great approval.

The Eddie Gordon comedy for December is "Captain Suds." Eddie is supported by Beth Darlington, Larry Richardson and Lillian Worth. The main feature of this two-reeler is a comedy prize fight in which Eddie is matched against Richardson, who is almost twice his size.

The Century Comedies are released through Universal Exchanges.

Strong Supports in Christie Productions

IN addition to the regular comedians who are starred in current series of two-reel comedies produced by the Christie organization for Educational's program, the Christie studio organization claims to have one of the strongest line-up of supporting players and while all of these players are not featured on the screen or in the billing of these current comedies, the company points out the fact that in practically all of the new comedies there are comedians filling the minor roles who have themselves been comedy stars.

Appearing in the current Vernon, Hiers, Adams and Christie two-reel series in current releases is an imposing array of comedians including Bill Irving, Jack Duffy, Hank Mann, Kalla Pasha, Eddie Baker, Billy Engel, Lincoln Plumer, Eddie Barry, George Hall, Billy Bletcher, Jay Belasco, Fred Peters, Gus Leonard, George French, Ward Caulfield, Bill Blaisdell and Victor Rodman. A great many of these comedians are members of the Christie studio stock company, while others are engaged for individual pictures in line with Al Christie's policy of assembling real feature casts in the short comedies.

The girls whose faces are familiar on the screen appearing in these new series comedies are Molly Malone, Vera Steadman, Frances Lee, Duane Thompson, Natalie Joyce, Yola D'Avril, Jean Lorraine, Marian Andre, Aileen Lopez, Amber Norman and Anita Garvin. Three well known character comediennes in Gale Henry, Rosen Gore and Blanche Payson figure prominently in current casts of Christie two-reelers.

In claiming to have one of the strongest group of players appearing in the two-reel field, Al Christie points out the fact that while it is not always possible to give recognition in the advertising or on the screen to all of the good and competent players appearing in each comedy, the policy of assembling such casts rather than having minor roles filled by players who are nonentities is worth while from the producer's point of view in insuring himself of well acted pictures, not only on the star's part but all the way through.

"In offering star series of comedies such as the Bobby Vernon, Walter Hiers and Jimmie Adams comedies and in featuring the names of such comedians as Billy Dooley and Neal Burns in the Christie series of two-reelers," declares Christie, "the advertising is necessarily placed heaviest on those names which have come to be recognized as of box-office value, but one should not lose sight of the fact that those names are not offered alone, but are surrounded with players who can contribute largely to the success of the whole picture."

"Laugh Month" Big Success Reports to Fox Indicate

EARLY reports received by the short subjects sales department of Fox films from all parts of the United States indicate that National Laugh Month will be the biggest and most successful project of the kind in the history of motion pictures.

Most exhibitors were quick to appreciate the tremendous possibilities of the national publicity campaign on Laugh Month and they were not slow in taking advantage of their opportunity. Many of them have planned to supplement the countrywide campaign with special advertising tieups of their own, and it seems safe to predict that ninety per cent. of the theatres in the country will offer all-comedy programs throughout the month of January.

While the national campaign has created a broad and general interest in short films, particularly comedies, it is pointed out that the individual exhibitor, to reap the greatest possible benefit from Laugh Month, must link up his theatre with the national movement by judicious advertising and exploitation of such pictures. The unusually attractive array of short comedies scheduled by Fox for January release would in itself warrant extra advertising and big profits await the exhibitor who is willing to meet his opportunity halfway.

The real purpose of National Laugh Month, however, according to those in charge of the movement, is not merely to book a tremendous volume of short films, particularly comedies, for January showing, but to impress both the public and exhibitors with the real importance of short subject films. It is believed that Laugh Month will accomplish this, and, once such recognition is gained, tabloid comedies will be able to hold their own with feature productions ever afterward.

International News Gets Locarno Treaty

Officials of the International Newsreel Corporation announced that exclusive rights in the United States to the world-famous motion pictures of the signing of the Locarno Treaty had been obtained by International and that beginning December 12 the pictures will be shown on the screens of all International Newsreel customers in the United States. The films of the momentous event are now on their way to America.

"Ko-Ko Packs Up" is the Featurette which Red Seal announces as having been recently booked by the Stanley Theatre of Philadelphia. The Ko-Ko out of the Inkwell series have been booked by most of the exhibitors in this territory, according to President Edwin Miles Fadman.

Title Hiers Comedy

The Walter Hiers Comedy scheduled by Educational for releasing on their Laugh Month program, and which was previously untitled, has been called "Weak But Willing." This two-reeler shows Walter, garbed as a little boy, going through a series of thrilling adventures while running the gauntlet of a secret society's new member third degree team. The release date is January 3.

Sydney S. Cohen Suggests Slogan for "Laugh Month"

December 7, 1925.

Mr. Nat Rothstein,
Film Booking Offices of America,
723 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Nat:—It is with distinct pleasure that I attempt to accede to your request anent LAUGH MONTH and what it holds for exhibitors throughout the Nation. (The capitals are yours.) I hasten to emphasize what has long been my constant claim, namely, that all too frequently short subjects have been considered solely in the light of so much additional footage needful to round out a two-hour show. This is not as it should be, for the many splendid sparkling miniature features which abound today, and which we have been wont to term comedies or novelty reels, are in many instances worthy of the place of honor on any one's film program.

LAUGH MONTH, if its fundamental idea is carried out faithfully, will serve to present to the public as well as to those theatre owners who as yet are unenlightened to their worth, these miniature features in such a manner as to establish their real value and dignity. The fact that most of these subjects seek to induce mirth in the degree of giggles, chuckles or roars need in no wise detract from the place of real dignity they hold, for a laugh is the universal moulder of fellowship. "Laugh and the world laughs with you" might well be the Industry's slogan for LAUGH MONTH.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) SYDNEY S. COHEN.

ing staffs to work immediately and line up the merchants.

Adding to the long list of theatres and circuits which have previously been reported as having joined the National Laugh Month movement for January, 1926, reports received by the National Laugh Month Committee indicate that by January 1, 1926, every large and small house in the country will be in line.

Frank W. Buehler, managing director of the Stanley Company of America, writes from Philadelphia:

"We are getting back of Laugh Month, and will do all that we can to put it across. We are with you one hundred per cent."

The exchange managers of Dallas, Texas, are meeting and formulating plans to line up the houses in their territory.

In Kansas City, the following theatres have already promised to join the movement: Main Street, Liberty, Isis and Newman-Royal Theatres.

From Atlanta, Ga., come reports that the local district managers of Famous, Loew's, Universal (Florida) and other circuits promise complete co-operation and are laying their plans accordingly.

Universal's home office reports that the following theatres have wired in that they are going to "whoop 'er up" for Laugh Month and promise complete co-operation:

Capital Theatre, Dallas, Texas; Alhambra, Milwaukee, Wis.; America, Denver, Colo.; Broadway Strand, Detroit, Mich.; Cameo, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Cameo, Los Angeles, Cal.; Cameo, San Francisco, Cal.; Clemmer, Spokane, Wash.; Columbia, Portland, Ore.; Columbia, Seattle, Wash.; Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.; Apollo, Kansas City, Mo.; Olympia, Buffalo, N. Y.; Randolph, Chicago, Ill.; Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Rivoli, St. Louis, Mo.; Tudor, Atlanta, Ga.

In St. Louis, the managers of the companies associated with the committee's activities are formulating plans which will be announced on completion.

From Omaha come promises of a tie up from the following theatres: Rialto, Strand North Star and Hamilton Theatres.

Louisvile, Ky., is right in line with Keith's Rialto, Keith's Majestic, Kentucky, Louisville, Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, taking up the movement.

Atlantic City, home of beauty pageants, is thoroughly organized. As we go to press, word is received that Eddie O'Keefe, managing director of the City Square Theatre, has been appointed General manager of the Laugh Month Committee in that city. This means that every theatre in the famous seashore resort will put in a drive to entertain visitors with flocks of laughs during Laugh Month. A complete list is not available but it means one hundred percent in that territory.

Letters and telegrams from other centers are arriving hourly showing that Laugh Month is taking the country by storm inside and outside the industry.

"The Splendid Road"—First National

Vigorous and Realistic Drama of Gold Rush of '49 in Splendid Frank Lloyd Production

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

DIRECTOR FRANK LLOYD'S two latest pictures for First National have one striking point of similarity. In both, does mankind's mad rush for gold when a new field is discovered furnish the basis for the story, in "Winds of Chance" it was the Klondike stampede of '98, while in "The Splendid Road" the rush to California in the days of '49 opens the story.

Both pictures have been produced on a big scale with a large number of persons employed in many of the scenes, forcefully reproducing the atmosphere of the respective periods, and are epic in their nature. The treatment of the story in the two differs considerably. "The Splendid Road" starts off with the characters taking the land instead of water route to their goal, and happening on board ship serve to so change the plans of the leading character that she never gets farther than Sacramento, the story becoming one of romance and adventure between squatters, pioneers and capitalists.

One of the passengers on the ship sailing from Boston around Cape Horn is an adventurous young woman, Sandra. A widow dies, her little girl appeals to Sandra and rather than split the little family she adopts all three children, and decides to remain in Sacramento and make a home for them. Chance causes Halliday, agent for a capitalist to come to her rescue and they are attracted to each other. Doctor Bidwell loves the capitalist's daughter Lillian but believing she loves Halliday he persuades Sandra that she must give him up or ruin his career. Halliday is ordered to evict Sandra who is a squatter, but refuses and goes to her rescue and is shot by Chehollis a gambler who seeks to force his attentions on Sandra. While convalescing, he learns of Bidwells action and goes back to Sandra arriving in time to take her and her family away to safety after a mad wagon ride, as floods have caused the levee to burst and the town is flooded.

Here is a vigorous, red-blooded story, finely produced. So real and true and attention-holding are the incidents aboard the picturesque old sailing ship, and the scenes in Sacramento, with hundreds of persons in the quaint costumes of that day that before you realize it, the picture is in the sixth reel, as the events begin to shape to a climax, however, the action becomes less spontaneous but allows for a satisfactory solution of the tangled threads of the story and the flood scenes.

This picture is portrayed by an unusually fine cast headed by Anna Q. Nilssen as Sandra, with Robert Frazer as Halliday. Lionel Barrymore in the heavy role of the gambler gives a fine performance, Pauline Garon is good as the dance-hall girl in love with the gambler and jealous of Sandra. Marceline Day is attractive and capable as the banker's daughter and George Bancroft who scored such a triumph as the villain in "The Pony Express" scores again here in a rough comedy role as a drunken pioneer. Edward Earle is entirely satisfactory as the doctor and Russell Simpson makes the best of a minor role. Other well-known players make up the large cast.

"The Splendid Road" with its vigorous story, finely directed and acted and its exceptionally realistic atmosphere of the early pioneer days, combined with its punch climax should prove a thoroughly satisfactory attraction for the majority of spectators, and a good box-office bet.

Abundance of Stirring Action and Good Story Make Buck Jones Film Unusually Fine Western

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A PARTICULARLY satisfying and effective Western is "The Desert's Price" the latest William Fox offering starring Buck Jones. It has all the elements which go to make a picture of this type popular and is backed up by an unusually good story.

While McCann is away, Julia Starke's father is shot and many of their sheep killed and she blames the McCann outfit. Not knowing that Buck is McCann, Julia accepts his help when an unruly ram chases her. Buck learning her suspicions, discovers that a shady bunch, the Martin Brothers are the real culprits. The Martin Brothers attempt to win the Starke sisters but are refused. Sam attempts to kiss Peggy and she falls and is badly hurt. Julia goes after Sam and shoots at him, her brother Phil later has a fight with Sam who is shot. On a tip from Jim Martin, the sheriff comes to arrest Julia and makes Buck his deputy. He offers her a chance to escape but she insists on giving herself up. Sam incites the mob to attack the sheriff's home. Buck inveigles him there while Julia rides for Buck's men who arrive in time to disperse the mob. Sam's henchman accuses him of killing father and her sheep. Sam tries to make a getaway but Buck goes after him and subdues him. Phil is freed by the jury and Julia acknowledges her love for Buck.

It will be seen that while the incidents are of a familiar type, there are plenty of opportunities for action and enough situations to keep the story moving at a fast pace, they dovetail smoothly into each other and the result is a fast-moving and thoroughly entertaining "Western," one of the best of its kind and one that admirers of this type of entertainment should "eat up." It should also prove a thoroughly enjoyable picture for spectators to whom westerns as a rule do not appeal, because of its forceful story,

Marie Prevost and Clive Brook in Exciting Picture in Which All Characters Are Crooks

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

WARNER BROTHERS' "Seven Sinners is well-named, for with the exception of the minor role of a lone policeman and a flash of the district attorney, everyone of the characters, seven of them, are crooks

The picture opens with a flash of a newspaper story concerning homes of the wealthy being unguarded because of a strike of private detectives. The action immediately gets under way with the appearance of Marie Prevost and John Patrick stealthily entering one of these homes. Marie runs into another crook portrayed by Clive Brook and before they get away an aged and dignified pair, Claude Gillingwater and Mathilde Brundage who are cast as a religious crook and his wife come on the scene posing as friends of the owner. Marie introduces herself as the housekeeper, Patrick as the cook and Brook as the butler. The action also introduces Charles Conklin in the character of a real crook and Dan Mason as his pal posing as a doctor. A policeman sets a burglar alarm which keeps them prisoners and the fake doctor adds to their dilemma by quarantining the house for scarlet fever. Two of the crooks get away, Brook and Marie are so impressed by the old man's faith that they admit theft of the jewels and the old fellow gives himself up to save them. They find happiness going straight as man and wife, selling burglar alarms.

None of the characters know until the action is well under way that the others are crooks, though this is disclosed to the audience. This adds unusual suspense and tension to the events that transpire in the house. The earlier reels hold the spectator's interest taut, although there is a slight let-down later on. While highly improbable, the idea is decidedly out of the ordinary and with its effective comedy relief should prove pleasing especially to patrons who like crook stories.

Evelyn Brent in Entertaining Production Is Cast as Chorus Girl Instead of Crook

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

FORSAKING her usual role of a female crook, Evelyn Brent appears in the role of a chorus girl in "A Broadway Lady" her newest starring vehicle for F. B. O. release. The story, however, does involve her in trouble with the police as she is accused of murdering a former admirer.

Evelyn, as a chorus girl is admired by a young blue-blood whose family invite her to a reception to show her up. To teach them a lesson for their snobbery she marries this chap, Bob. His sister becomes infatuated with a libertine, Martyn, and to save her when she prepares to elope, Evelyn goes to Martyn's apartment. He is shot and Evelyn captured and accused. It develops that Mary, a girl Evelyn has befriended has a row with Martyn and the shot was accidental. Both girls are freed and Bob's family are glad to receive Evelyn as a member of the household.

While the situations are largely familiar, they have been nicely handled and will hold the interest of the average fan. There is good suspense and the introduction of the murder angle comes as an entertaining surprise. The story moves forward at a good pace, has sympathetic interest and touches of humor with quite a few peppy subtitles. Altogether it should prove pleasing entertainment for the average theatregoer.

Miss Brent is thoroughly at home in this role and particularly effective in her difficulties with the police. Theodore Von Eltz gives a good performance as the wealthy chap, while Joyce Compton scores a personal success as his sister. Johnny Gough furnishes comedy as a chauffeur and Marjorie Bonner is good as the wronged girl.

Valentino in Modern Dress Is Somewhat Lacking the Dash and Verve of Costume

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

ADMIRERS of Rudolph Valentino will like him in "Cobra" better than the admirers of "Cobra" will like the Valentino version. Remodeling the stage version to fit a male star has so altered the structure and even the plot, that little of the original has been retained. Very little has been kept, beyond the main theme, and every effort has been made to supply Valentino with the usual dashing character of his romantic roles, with a shocked swing to virtue toward the close. The result will probably please his followers, but it will add little to his glory. Valentino in business suits and evening clothes is not the Valentino of the pampas or the bull ring.

In spite of the skillful tailoring, the play does not fit his personality. He is cramped in modern clothes and the story works to a moral finish that does not sustain the interest. Mindful of the fact that the censors would be particularly alert on account of the daring nature of the original play plot, the scenarist seems to have sought to disarm censorship with a shift to respectability tinged with renunciation.

The big situation of the original play is retained; the young wife who is killed in a hotel fire while keeping a rendezvous but an effort has been made to throw the chief interest to Valentino's renunciation of his one respectable love in favor of his friend. The situation becomes forced and unnatural and fails to carry a very strong effect.

It is so different from his usual swashbuckling roles that it is difficult to accept him, and the full effect of the sacrifice fails because you feel that presently he will be up to his old tricks again and find ample recompense.

Valentino plays carefully. He is pleasing of personality and he avoids overaction in the renunciation, but the role will probably prove the least well-liked of his characterizations. Greater sympathy goes to Casson Ferguson as the duped husband. He gives a singularly good performance even for this always reliable player. Nita Naldi evidently vamps under the wraps of editorial direction and is almost colorless and Gertrude Olmstead proves the more interesting of the two leading women.

Real Laughs and a Lot of Them in Crackerjack Farce Comedy with Reginald Denny as the Star

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

THAT a farce which proved a big hit on the stage can not only be successfully transferred to the screen, but even improved upon, is amply demonstrated in the Universal-Jewel roduction "What Happened to Jones" starring Reginald Denny. Of course, you must not only have a corking story based on a real idea but one that will utilize the broader possibilities of the camera, and that is just what this play by George Broadhurst does. Consequently, backed up by fine acting and direction this picture is a crackerjack comedy, guaranteed to make any audience laugh as it did a bunch of so-called hard-boiled reviewers when shown cold in a projection room.

Tom Jones, the hero, who is to be married the next day, goes home but is inveigled into a poker game. The place is raided and Tom and a fat elderly friend, Goodly, escaping down a fire escape land in a ladies Turkish bath establishment, where they naturally create a hullabaloo and finally make a getaway in women's clothes, reaching Goodly's home in a milk wagon the next morning. Tom dons the clothes of Goodly's brother, a bishop, who is expected that morning, is seen by Mrs. G and has to pose as the bishop. Complications follow thick and fast including the jealousy of a chap because Tom kisses his sweetheart, and the forcing of Tom as the bishop to officiate at the wedding of his fiance to another chap. It all turns out right, for she recognizes Tom, says "I Don't" instead of "I Do." So Tom escapes from the waiting cops by grabbing her and the real bishop and getting married in a speeding auto.

While the first few scenes are amusing, they give no hint of the riotous fun that is to follow, but with the raiding of the game by the police, the rollicking comedy starts with a bang and laughs pile up with increasing rapidity. Being farce comedy, probability has been of course sacrificed to laughter, but at that the smoothness and apparently reasonable way that one amusing situation develops right into another is a tribute to the skill of author and director.

Length—6,700 feet.

Reginald Denny is capitally cast in the leading role and adds one more to his list of clever portrayals as the fake bishop. As his fat friend Goodly, Otis Harlan gives Denny a race for the honors, his comedy walk is a scream in itself and with his short, rotund figure, he is a regular riot in woman's clothes. These two carry the bulk of the action but have good support in the minor roles. Marian Nixon is attractive and capable as the girl and Emily Fitzroy is capital as Goodly's wife.

Real laughs pile up on each other with such rapidity that we cannot begin to recall them all, but among the best are, fat Otis Harlan trying to go down a narrow fire escape, a lot of things that happen in the Turkish bath but especially the steam room scene and the hiding of Denny and Harlan in electric bath cabinets when the attendant turns on the heat and they proceed to shed their clothes; the chase by cops, the attempt of corner loafers to flirt with the two "girls" the whole sequences where Denny poses as a bishop and particularly his handling of the wedding ceremony. While some may take exception to this, it is genuinely funny and well handled.

Don't be afraid of "What Happened to Jones." Its humor is whole-hearted and spontaneous. It should make a sphinx laugh and provide genuine enjoyment for any type of patronage.

"Sally, Irene and Mary"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Broadway Musical Comedy Success Made into a Pleasing Production by Edmund Goulding

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

BASED on a musical comedy that enjoyed a long Broadway run, "Sally, Irene and Mary," adapted and directed by Edmund Goulding for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offers light but pleasing entertainment.

The story deals with three members of the chorus of a Broadway show, Sally, the worldly-wise one, Irene, the dreamer, sought after by one of the Broadway wolves and also by a fine young chap, and Mary, an innocent little Irish girl who almost gets singed by the Bright lights. Sally's wealthy protector sees in Mary a new beauty and falls for her. Sally is dazzled and resents the attitude of her sweetheart a plumber. Irene succumbs to the lure of the Broadway wolf but in a moment of goodness he sends her home before it is too late and she marries the other fellow but they are killed when a train strikes the honeymoon auto. Sally's genuine grief and real love for her moneyed friend coupled with her unmasking of his real character, together with Irene's sudden death, so impress Mary that she says Broadway will never get her and forsaking this gilded street she returns to her plumber sweetheart.

With the exception of the railroad crossing wreck which provides a good punch, there is little dramatic action, the picture being more a study in contrasting characters of the three types of chorus girls. The story is carried along sympathetic lines and the interest sustained by situations that should prove entertaining to the majority, for instance, the Irish comedy scenes in Mary and Jimmie's homes with the spat between their mothers, backstage scenes of chorus girl life, attractive stage scenes, human interest touches in the love and watchful care of Irene's parents and the grief of the girls at her death, snappy dancing of the Charleston in a handsomely mounted stage scene and the final fade-out on the tenement roof under the new moon. The story does not move fast or develop any tense drama, but it is distinctly pleasing.

The story has been given a high-class production and is portrayed by a thoroughly capable cast. Both in type and in acting, Constance Bennett, Joan Crawford and Sally O'Neill prove fine selections for the title roles. Miss O'Neil as Mary, however, not only has the most sympathetic and interesting role, but scores a big personal success by her handling of this part. She is a newcomer but seems destined for wide popularity on the strength of this performance. The male roles are subordinate, Henry Kolker gives an exceedingly fine portrayal of the only one of importance as the millionaire Broadway roue who finally falls really in love with Mary after affairs with many women.

We believe that the average patron will like the back-stage atmosphere and the human note in the sketching of the characterters of the three girls.

Buck Jones gives a sterling performance as Wils McCann, and Florence Gilbert who has been appearing in the Van Bibber series of Fox comedies proves a happy selection for the heroine, scoring in a different type of role. Montague Love, a popular actor, probably better known to the older fans has an exceptionally good performance as the villain. Edna Marion and Ernest Butterworth do good work as Julia's sister and brother, with Arthur Houseman and Carl Stockdale effective in subordinate heavy roles.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels). Star cast. An action picture that's hard to beat. Something different and pleased my western fans. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. While we did not break any records with this one it was no fault of the picture or star. It certainly was fine action and Silver King at his best. Bad weather kept the attendance down. No tone. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. "Durned good pitcher," that's what several of our husky country farmers told us. And they were correct. Anybody knows when they see a good picture, and this is good enough for anybody. Good posters, good print. Student and general class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

FIGHTING DEMON. Star, Richard Talmadge. Fair picture. All Talmadge needs is the story and good direction. He can deliver. This thing of just jumping around doesn't make the whole show. People are growing more critical and demand a good story along with action. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

IF MARRIAGE FAILS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Fine show Suitable for any house catering to the better classes, the whole town will turn out if you advertise it as a special and let them know that it is "The Stuff." Probably suitable for Sunday. Special, yes. Good appeal. Student and general class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

JIMMIE'S MILLIONS. (5,167 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Fine action picture and plenty of it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

MILLIONAIRE COWBOY. (4,841 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. About the poorest excuse for a western that I have ever run as this boy cannot act or ride and none ever saw a cowboy dress as this Montgomery Ward cowboy does. The picture is simply punk. Nuff said. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats). Gallup, New Mexico.

RIDING THE WIND. Star, Fred Thomson. A good western. Played it Hallowe'en to a fair crowd. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

SCAR HANAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. A very good western that drew a nice Saturday crowd. Lots of action and thrills. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,913 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Next to Mix and Jones, Fred Thomson should hold the field as the most agreeable western actor. His personality is not disgusting like some of the hoodlums that are doing westerns. A nice story to this show. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-20. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Not up to Fred's standard. Had quite a few remarks. "Silver King" is a wonder, but we can't give Fred much as his stories are poor Fred, don't spoil your chance by poor stories and them badly named too. Get in some big nationally known western stories and clean up. You have the makings. so go to it and top all the boys. We are for you and push you all we can so back us up as strong as you can and your name will be as much of a household word as Tom Mix. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

"Boys, every one of us is running a theatre for the good of the commnunity or city and for profit.

"That's why we realize the need of every booking tip. These reports are OUR contribution toward better booking conditions.

"We avoid bias—we're fair to the picture and to YOU. Use these tips and show your appreciative generosity by sending your tips in turn." OUR GANG

First National

BAD MAN. (6,404 feet). Star, Holbrook Blinn. If you haven't seen the "Bad Man" you haven't seen one of the best western comedies made. It is serious in parts and until the bad man makes his appearance doesn't move very fast; after that, Oh boy, it's some show. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry Nauman. Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BLACK OXEN. (7,831 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. Saw this one before and didn't like it. People here seemed to think it was great. I guess reputation has a lot to do with it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry Nauman. Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BLACK OXEN. (7,831 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. This picture received much adverse criticism from other exhibitors, therefore, it was a pleasant surprise to me when I received good comments from my patrons. Good business for one day. Buy it right and play it. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

DARK ANGEL. (7,311 feet). Star, Vilma Banky. Vilma lives up to expectations and with Ronald Colman, what a wonderful picture it is; couldn't be improved upon and was apprceiated by everyone who saw it. Men wiped their eyes and women wept aloud so step on the pathos angle including numerous laughs; can stand a raise in admission if you have the music to go with it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Maybe suitable for special. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Mixed class town of 1,300. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

DULCY. Star, Constance Talmadge. Norma is there, Connie isn't at least not in this. Of all the pifflicated plash ever seen this is the rankest. Clever titles like "Night Fell But No One Was Hurt." Bah. The titles go far to make the show or unmake it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FINE CLOTHES. (6,971 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. A fine picture of its kind but not the kind to get business with in small towns. Lost money with it on one day run. Sunday and special, no. Poor appeal. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

JEALOUS HUSBANDS. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Picture good, though did not draw so very well. Did not make hardly anything. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Hasn't much appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (220 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

KNOCKOUT. (7,450 feet). Star, Milton Sills. This one pleased everyone. Plenty of action for the small towns. Lumber camp scenes fine. Will make a fine Saturday night picture. Will draw anywhere. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Very good audience appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

LOST WORLD. (9,700 feet). Star, Lloyd Hughes. Here is a great picture, but I couldn't make my community realize it. I spent as much money and effort exploiting this as I did "Covered Wagon" and "Ten Commandments" and in addition gave it a Friday and Saturday night run which is something I didn't give either of the other two. I just broke even on it. The paper is good, in fact, too good; several ladies told me after they had guessed the nature of the production from seeing the advertising that I needn't expect to get them in on that one. My advice to small towners is to watch your foot on this one. It won't appeal to lots of the women nor to the class of people who have not the education to cause them to be curious concerning the kind of animals that roamed the prehistoric world. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

LOST WORLD. (9,700 feet). Star cast. Did very satisfactory business for four day run at advance prices 25-50. Everybody well pleased with picture. Animals perfect, good story, and fine scenery. Town of 2,500. Mrs. R. Pappe, Grand Theatre (250 seats), Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore, It's a knockout and easy to put over if you put out the advertising, made money on two nights run, picture pleased one hundred per cent. Very best of comedy drama. Admission 10-25. Mrs. R. Pappe, Grand Theatre, Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

SALLY. (8,636 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A clean sparkling comedy with touches of drama in which this lovable little star plays her part well. A picture that should please any audience. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty per cent. Mixed class town of 5,000. Admission 15-25. L. J. Morse, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Winnsboro, South Carolina.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. He plays a good second to Tom Mix in our town and in this cowboy love story he registers a real triumph. A good plot and plenty of comedy. S. R. O. on this one, so I can recommend it highly for pleasure and profit. Tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

GREAT DIAMOND MYSTERY. (6,056 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. This only a fair program picture with no great appeal. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Oil field class town of 700. Admis-

Look Here, Everybody!

FOLKS—all you members of "Our Gang"—I want to nail something that has come to my attention—and NAIL IT QUICK!

I have been given to understand that somebody around Seattle, Washington, has the impression that I have "clipped" or "lifted" reports from some regional published in that district.

I can't get anything more than an insinuation—can't get the low-down on whether it's the regional or an exhibitor who originated the inference.

But it's sufficiently widely circulated to get back to me.

Now, I'm mighty jealous of the integrity of our dependable tip department.

So I want to slam this back—straight from the shoulder!—

NEVER HAS A REPORT BEEN PUBLISHED IN THESE PAGES EXCEPT REPORTS THAT CAME DIRECTLY ADDRESSED TO THE DEPARTMENT, on blanks I send out or on postal cards signed by an exhibitor and postmarked at the address he gives!

Never will any reports be clipped or lifted. I don't need to do that sort of cheap cheating; I've got plenty of good friends in "Our Gang" to keep these pages filled with reports sent direct.

And if anybody thinks differently, let them send me the dope.

YOU are the department—but I am guardian of your good faith. I've never broken the pledge—and I never will.

VAN.

sion 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (275 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,954 feet). Star cast. The only thing that saved this was Curwood's name. Five reels of ordinary film. Will do for Saturday. The paper especially the six sheet is good. Country class town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (256 seats), Leonard, Texas.

IRON HORSE. Star, George O'Brien. This beats all the western action pictures we have had thus far in the business. It has everything to make it big and can stand all the plugging you desire to put it over and the sky is the limit. Fifty cents admission for this one. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

LUCKY HORSESHOE. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Not up to Mix's standard. Good cast with Mix, but a rotten story. Flopped. Print new. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, never. Fair appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MAN WHO PLAYED SQUARE. Star, Buck Jones. Boys, this is real. Lots of action and good comedy. If you boys like Jones give them this. They will eat it up. It is of the impossible variety but they like it just the same. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. General appeal. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. A Larry Evans story with trimmings. One of the most entertaining pictures on the market. Not a superfluous scene to it. A straightforward story that does not require a dozen reels of explanation. Some punch too. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Didn't mean much at the box office. It's spectacular in spots. Story lacks conviction and for this reason fails to impress. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

PORTS OF CALL. Star, Edmund Lowe. This is a good picture but not a special. Just a good program picture, play it as one and you will make no mistake. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

RAINBOW TRAIL. (5,251 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Mix as usual pulls 'em strong to the box office and this picture sent them away well pleased; what more can be expected? Print good. Special, yes. Appeal, very good. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

RAINBOW TRAIL. (5,251 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Better than "Riders of the Purple Sage," and that's saying a whole lot! A typical Tom Mix western with oodles of action and enough fun to make several two-reel comedies. Lost money on it, though, but not through fault of picture, as a tent show was camped here for a week, and it got all the coin in the village. Tone, fair. Sunday, maybe. Special, yes. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RAINBOW TRAIL. (5,251 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Cowboy Mix in another western melodrama. A sequel to and better than "Riders of the Purple Sage." My stars, but Tom sure puts it over in this one and our people were thrilled with his many single-handed fights against tremendous odds. Of course, you fellers know enough to buy this one and profit thereby. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

ROUGHNECK. (7,519 feet). Star, George O'Brien. This picture is good, the best part of this print was cut out and the print sure was rotten. It was marked inspected but when you consider that I had to take out seventy-two bad splices before I could even attempt to run it you can imagine what it looked like but I got it through just the same. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Working class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SCANDAL PROOF. Star, Shirley Mason. Where Mason is liked will prove an excellent attraction of program quality. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes; special, no. Rural and small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix. From a story by Virginia Brightman this Mix film has all the thrills that can be put in a feature film and it is made in an entertaining manner with no superfluous scenes to explain details. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

TIMBER WOLF. (4,800 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good outside action picture which pleased our crowd. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

TROUBLES OF A BRIDE. Star cast. A lively melodramatic program picture that gave satisfaction to the few who saw it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 for specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

TROUBLES OF A BRIDE. (4,915 feet). Star, Robert Agnew. Good melodrama with some fast action in the last two reels, although there was some padding in the first part. Bum title killed atendance. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WINDING STAIRS. Star, Edmund Lowe, Splendid program picture. Plenty of action and suspense. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A pretty good show if they did cut Larry Evans' story to pieces. Buck Jones is a prime favorite here and they will stand for almost anything from him. His worst is better than many others best. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-20. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WHEEL. Star cast. The title is the only fault I could find. This one on order of the "Hottentot." Ran this with a style show and had lots of compliments on both. Tone, a gambling picture. Special, yes. Appeals to all classes. Country class town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (256 seats), Leonard, Texas.

Metro-Goldwyn

CHU CHIN CHOW. (6,408 feet). Star, Betty Blythe. This one as good as some American productions. Directions not so much. Lover rotten but Blythe and robber chief good. No one walked out on it here. Received good print. You won't lose prestige by running it. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Working class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

EXCUSE ME. (5,084 feet). Star, Conrad Nagle. Not a broad farce but a real funny comedy. Not much slapstick to mar it.

Should go big in any town that enjoys grade A comedy. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. About the only thing to recommend this is an unusual story with clever work by Conway Tearle and the big scene where the doctor and Tearle are almost caught in a box canon during a cloudburst. Good water stuff. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Alice Terry. A great name and a good picture. A good name is half the battle with us. Metro-Goldwyn always makes a highly mounted finished picture; we advertise them as being built for big show houses and have a high class trade on them but not usually an overflow business. The Metro-Goldwyn product doesn't appeal to the farmer or working man as a rule, but you can hold the better picture lovers in your community with the program. We always push our Metro's and are not ashamed of them. We have been nicely treated by the Chicago office. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A high class production suitable for audiences that like better pictures. You must work on that class of trade to put over your Metro-Goldwyn pictures. You will soon see the appreciation. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Can't give the story much. Would class as poor but picture is nicely cast and well done. Not nearly so attractive as "Three Weeks." Rather think the Glyn's have run their limit. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

LADY OF THE NIGHT. (5,441 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. Acting good. Picture very good. Everyone satisfied. Not a blood and thunder picture. Just a nice story with Shearer taking two parts. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Working class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This is a good picture of "Old New York" of 1807. Marion Davies is great in this. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Oil field class town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (275 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

MARRIED FLIRTS. (6,705 feet). Star cast. Good picture for regular program. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Pretty good show. People who didn't like "Circus Days" and "Little Robinson Crusoe" admitted that they liked it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

RED LILY. (6,975 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Can't see this picture. Nothing to it whether all the good stuff was cut out I don't know, but I do know it wasn't in. It came on seven reels, but it amounted to only about five. Tone and appeal, none. Sunday and special, no. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

UNHOLY THREE. (7,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Excellent. A knockout as a box office and audience appeal picture. If they don't like this one then it is because they can't stand good pictures. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Joins "Gang"

"We have been in the moving picture business over three years and have never sent in a report on pictures.

"We enjoy the Straight from the Shoulder Reports the most of any section of your magazine and feel guilty when reading them because of not sending a report.

"They are a big help in buying and EVEN AFTER YOU HAVE BOUGHT as to advertising a picture. If report is not favorable we do not advertise it so big.

"Now—enclosed find report on 'Wild Horse Mesa.'" Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre, Pleasantville, Iowa.

WELCOME, MR. SPALTI.

"Our Gang" extends a warm hand in gratitude and friendship.

WINE OF YOUTH. Star cast. Good program picture. Will please an audience who likes a light jazz picture that carries a good moral. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

WOMEN WHO GIVE. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A regular sea yarn and drama of the New England fishing folks. The photography is wonderful, taken off the Great Banks, showing fishing smacks at sea during fogs and storms. The plot has both comedy and pathos. It grips you. If you like the salt air and marine shots you'll like this one. The cast is splendid. Draw from tourists town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

Paramount

PONY EXPRESS. (9,929 feet). Star cast. Not to compare with "Covered Wagon" or "North of 36" as I look at it, quite interesting for one who is up on history, but too long and rather drags at times. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 25-50. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,929 feet). Star cast. Played three days to good business, although third day dropped off terribly. It is a good show, almost another "Covered Wagon." Beery's work is excellent. Tone, good. Special, yes. Fine appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Not a big special but a very satisfactory attractive Western comedy-drama with Torrence at his best. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Not much appeal. Rural and small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Good picture but Gloria is a dead one here. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

HE'S A PRINCE. Star, Raymond Griffith. This was a flop at the box office, but not the fault of the picture, very clever comedy that had a revolution as the background. Will go over where Griffith is established and make money. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

KISS IN THE DARK. (5,767 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Although we had it marked "bunk," it drew a fair audience and we did a little better than break even. Some of our patrons liked it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 sets), Cloverdale, California.

LOST A WIFE. Star cast. Just above program schedule, but not a feature. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,904 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. After the picture once gets under way it turns out to be an excellent production. Had many favorable comments from patrons who were able to enjoy it, while some others didn't know what it was all about. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good picture. Daniels fans will like it. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

MARRY ME. Star cast. Good picture. Worth seeing but not a special. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NEW BROOMS. (5,443 feet). Star cast. This is a good picture with perhaps a little more lesson to it than people like to buy, but no complaints and I enjoyed it personally. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. Star cast. Had many favorable comments on this picture but business was not so good. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. We did not do the business we expected on this, but made money and will say that for a real special I have never seen its equal. Every theatre should run it. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal one hundred per cent. Rural class and townspeople town of 800. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats). Moravia, Iowa.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). A truly wonderful production. Almost perfect, but in the scene where Pharaoh's soldiers are crossing the Red Sea following Moses and his children there is a very bad error in photography for a director like DeMille to allow to slip by. It is where the water rushes in and covers the soldiers. Anyone can tell that the ditch is only six feet or so deep by the way the water rolls over the edge and in a very small fraction of a second strikes the bottom. The speed camera should have been used here to give the impression of a great mass of water falling one hundred feet or more as one is supposed to believe. Our churches tied up with us and we did a fair business in rainy muddy weather. Tone, good. Special, yes. Town of 1,028. Admission 10-25, 25-50 for specials. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

FAST SET. (6,965 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A program picture that might please one day. I tried it two days and it failed to go over. Many knocked it and very few complimented it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

FLOWER OF THE NIGHT. (6,374 feet). Star, Pola Negri. A good program action picture. Pola has not much drawing power in my town. Good story and excellent acting. Print fine. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent.

R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FLOWER OF THE NIGHT. (8,374 feet). Star, Pola Negri. This is just an ordinary program picture. Pola Negri is a very fine actress but does not pull in country. Would like to see her in one of the big ones. Tone and appeal, fair. Sunday and special, no. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission, twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A good action picture but not his best. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre, Glasgow, Missouri.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A good picture well liked by all who saw it. Film okay. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Quite a special. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (220 seats), Crofton, Nebraska

RUGGED WATER. (6,015 feet). Star, Warner Baxter. Don't dare buy this or run it, as it is a real flop. Lost me plenty of money on Saturday night. Old fashioned story. For me it was a real flop. Some walked out. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. Picture is good and draws, but the exchange gets it all, no matter whether you buy it or play percentage. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Very good appeal. Rural class town of 850. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (220 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Not as good as "36," but pretty well liked. It didn't draw near as well. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Possible for special. Appeal, quite good. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (220 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Consider it to be the best Zane Grey picture on the market today. Stampede of buffaloes not so big but picture will suit most everyone. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre, Glasgow, Missouri.

LITTLE FRENCH GIRL. (5,628 feet). Star, Alice Joyce. A weak sister that they came out pretty well to see due in a measure to Herbert Brenon having been up here so much. This film effort didn't enhance Brenon's "rep," but he has done great enough work to have an occasional slip-up overlooked. You'll play it, of course, but just play it, and don't get eloquent on its merits. Weather fair; attendance good. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. Star cast. A sweet wholesome picture that pleased the better class patrons very much. While it only did an average business it wasn't the fault of the picture. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

HE'S A PRINCE. Star, Raymond Griffith. Good comedy drama, but not a special. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 feet). Star cast. A wonderful painstaking production. The characters portrayed by horses. Rex, Lady and Killer are the principles in a love story that is almost human and interesting to the ninth degree. You all should show this picture. Don't make the mistake thinking it can't be much. It's wonderful I say. Tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Played three days to fair business.

MAY McAVOY
Lending charm to a role of distinction in Universal's "My Old Dutch."

We struck one bad night as it snowed. A great comedy, but in a small town like ours the football game won't register properly. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHY WORRY. (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. This, perhaps, is the weak one of the Lloyd comedies, but we did just fair business on a two-day run. Strong opposition kept the attendance down. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty per cent. General class town of 3,000. Admisison 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

BEYOND THE BORDER. Star cast. Good western. Business good. Ralph Benedict, Varsity Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

CHARLIE'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. One of the most satisfactory pictures we ever ran. Everybody pleased and drew a good business considering business conditions here. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town 3,600. Admisison 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

COMING OF AMOS. Star cast. Had a bad opening due to following a one-night attraction; second day went way up. Patrons enjoyed it very much. Play to a high class audience. My personal opinion very good picture. Rod LaRocque popular here. Paul V. Phillips, Wilson Theatre, Wilson, North Carolina.

COMING OF AMOS. Star, Rod LaRocque. Excellent picture. It pleased our audience and the management. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admisison 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,505 feet). Star Patsy Ruth Miller. Good program picture but not much drawing power, but those who saw it were pleased. Producers' programs all average good entertainment, but the names selected haven't the appeal. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star cast. Splendid comedy feature. Pleased one hundred per cent. W. B. Hitchcow, Jr., Star Theatre, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

TROUPING WITH ELLEN. Star cast. Picture good. No business. M. Shetkin, Olympic Theatre, Erie, Pennsylvania.

WITHOUT MERCY. Star, Rockcliffe Fellows. A good program picture. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admisison 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

United Artists

GARRISON'S FINISH. (8 reels). Star, Jack Pickford. A good race horse picture that will please. Drew fairly good crowds for two days. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SALLY OF THE SAWDUST. Star, Carol Dempster. To my notion this is one of the best pictures of the year and one that you can play up to the limit. I never heard anything but praise on this. If we could only get more like this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent appeal. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Merico.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. Star, Mary Pickford. One of the best pictures I have had the pleasure of showing. The best Mary Pickford ever shown here and many were loud in their praise. You can't exploit it much on account of the cheap advertising that United Artists puts out. That's my only objection to them. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, okay. Appeal, ninety per cent. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

WAKING UP THE TOWN. (4,802 feet). Star, Jack Pickford. Personally, I was disappointed in this feature, as the title had led me to look for a different type of picture. The picture seemed to please, several taking the pains to tell me that they liked it. Tone, good. Special, no. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. specials, twenty-five and fifty cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

Universal

CALGARY STAMPEDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. Simply great and one of the best westerns ever made, and you can boost this one to the skies. Universal has spared no expense to make this a great picture. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Excellent appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

DARING CHANCES. (Star, Jack Hoxie. A first class program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma. Kansas.

HEADWINDS. Star, House Peters. Fine water scenes but only a fair picture. Don't bill it big, it won't hold up. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

OUTLAW'S DAUGHTER. Star, Josie Sedgwick. A little better than the general run of Universal's Blue Streak Westerns. Josie looks mighty good and does good work. Will please in any western house. Country class town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (256 seats), Leonard, Texas.

PEACOCK FEATHERS. Star, Jacqueline Logan. One of the prettiest pictures we have ever seen and one well worth getting behind Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Country class and farmers town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA. Star, Lon Chaney. This is certainly a wonderful show in every respect. Didn't make very much on account of high rental, but glad we played it just the same. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Country class and farmers town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

RIDING KID FROM POWDER RIVER. (5,727 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Smallest house of the season, but, oh boy, we had some storm. A good western. Tone, good. Special, no. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents, specials, 25-50. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

SIEGE. Star, Virginia Valli. This is another one of the good Universal's. We played it against heavy opposition yet did well with it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Country class and farmers town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

SPOOK RANCH. Star, Hoot Gibson. Different from the average type of western subject, plenty of comedy, many thrills and enough action to hold an audience until the curtain is rung down on the closing scene. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Mixed class town of 5,000. Admission 15-25. L. J. Morse, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Winnsboro, South Carolina.

TEASER. (6,300 feet). Star, Laura La-Plant. Not as good as some of her other pictures. Some of my patrons said, "I liked it pretty well." You know what that means. Special, no. Country class town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (256 seats), Leonard, Texas.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. This is some picture. If it had come a week later, nature would have provided a proper setting. Tone, good. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents, specials, 25-50. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). Star cast. Very good. Did not see it, as I have been under the weather, but all reports said great, something different and all parts well acted. Tone and appeal good. Vitagraph UNKNOWN LOVER. Star, Elsie Ferguson. Just an ordinary picture. Not as good as the average Vitagraph picture. Special, no. Country class and farmers town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

WILDFIRE. (6,550 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. Nothing to compare with other Pringle pictures. A negro almost becomes the star in this. Tone, no. Sunday and special, no. Country class town of 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (600 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

Warner Brothers

There are a lot of theatres running so close to release date that they argue "The old picture reports don't do me any good—why bother to send in tips?"

Boys—don't feel that way!

Figure it that a few minutes a week on your part will help thousands of exhibitors.

SHOOT IN THE TIPS!

BOBBED HAIR. Star, Marie Prevost. A modern story of an ancient old problem two men and a maid told in remarkable way by an able cast. This is one of the many big calibre box office attractions offered exhibitors by Warner Brothers this year. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 5,000. Admission 15-25. L. J., Morse, Palace Theatre (400 seats) Winnsboro, South Carolina.

BRIDGE OF SIGHS. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Good picture. Fair story. Will please as an average program picture. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 5,000. Admission 15-25. L. J. Morse, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Winnsboro, South Carolina.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. Star, Johnny Hines. A very nice picture that pleased many of the gang who turned out to see a "Screen Classic." The first Warners here but reliable information says not the last if they keep coming as good as this. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Independents

AFTER DARK. (State Right). Star, Hutchison. Hutchison isn't so bad, but the story don't amount to much. Part of it is broadly humorous and the rest is twaddle. Program picture for third-rate houses. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

HIS MASTER'S VOICE. (Gotham). Star, Thunder (dog). Good picture that pleased. A great deal more than average attendance. A better picture than the average from the big three. MADEMOISELLE MIDNIGHT. (State Right). Star, Mae Murray. There is no entertaining value in this picture, the plot is perfectly stupid and absolutely senseless. Mae Murray as a Mexican senorita is insipid and without any appeal whatsoever. The play is obviously written to permit Mae to pirouette through a number of Spanish fandangoes. Nothing doing, sorry. Draw from tourist town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

About That Buck We're Shelling Out

WE'RE getting a good kick out of handing over a dollar for any major error that one of you folks writes us to point out. The letters are coming along often enough to show that you're taking real interest in helping us make this the most accurate Chart being published.

But, remember this, please!—Major errors, such as wrong feature footage. A parenthesis left off after a star name—or a release eliminated as we do cut them out at top of list when we add new releases—those aren't major errors. They don't work any hardship on exhibitors.

Last week we got three different letters from exhibitors—glad to get 'em. They brought out the point that Paramount's "Golden Princess" footage was away out. One said correct footage was "less than 7,000" —another gave it from an exchange measurement as 6,400, and the third had it 6,502.

So you see, prints differ SOME in different places—BUT—these boys will get the buck because we were away up around 8,000, as we got it with the information published with the review of that film. But it shows you that minor differences are bound to occur—just wise us up when they're REAL ERRORS.

Oh, yes—the New York Paramount office gives that footage on "Golden Princess" as 6,546.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by Colby Harriman

Clarke Discusses Presentations

FOLLOWING the discussion of last week by Major Edward Bowes of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, anent the prologue, we have received additional comment on the presentation and prologue and the application of acts in general to de luxe motion picture theatres. Eric Clarke, Managing Director of the Eastman Theatre, has submitted a consistent analysis of these vital units of a program and its discussion is born out of the theme that such acts or stage features are now in the process of evolution; that this development must be as consistent and as certain as the development of photography itself. Mr. Clarke says:

With the removal of the element of a constantly progressive change, which in its own mutations brings something new and different to clutch the public fancy, the exhibitor of today finds himself looking about for attractive offerings with which to surround his picture programs. For several years the leading theatres have devoted much time and attention to the creation of special acts for the de luxe program. They have fashioned elaborate productions of their own and they have gone to vaudeville for assistance.

The problem has not yet been solved. The ideal act for the motion picture program is in process of formation. Already considerable progress has been made, but there is vast room for development.

The act in the motion picture program provides the necessary diversion. After an hour and a half of steady concentration on the screen, there is a need for something more—something that will show actual people as a contrast to the shadowy figures that flit across the silver sheet. In the search for the best means of meeting this demand we have done much experimenting. We have tried the prologue, the operatic scene, the concert number and the outside act. None of these quite fill the bill.

For some time the prologue has been favored as one way of meeting the situation, yet at the Eastman Theatre, we are not satisfied that it furnishes the answer. A prologue merely extends the atmosphere of the picture and usually duplicates some of its action. Then the matter of time limitation is a serious obstacle to an effective prologue. A picture which offers in its treatment the opportunity for a prologue is usually one of the special productions which run to excessive length. When a prologue, created in the same atmosphere, is added, it takes up time that might be given to something with a more varied appeal.

The operatic scene cannot, as a general rule, be successfully transplanted. The time allotted is too brief to permit building up the necessary atmosphere to its successful presentation. The act must be compressed into ten minutes and there are few scenes that can be done effectively in that period.

The straight concert number, as a rule, fails to fit into the motion picture program because its appeal is almost entirely to the ear and not to the eye as well. The lyric should be combined with the dramatic with special heed to staging and dressing the act so that it will make an agreeable diversion in the program, and this is one form of presentation to which we are paying particular attention.

The vaudeville act may sometimes serve the purpose, but as a rule it does not fit smoothly into the program. In a vaudeville performance of eight numbers there is sufficient variety to appeal to all tastes, and that is the secret of the success of this form of entertainment. Take one number away from the bill, however, and place it in a picture program and it must, regardless of its character, make its bid for the liking of the entire audience. There are big, special headline attractions, of course, that have an almost universal appeal, and these are being used by many of the leading picture theatres today. The number of these acts that are suitable in type, however, is comparatively limited. Animal acts, jugglers, patter comedians and dramatic playlets hardly have a place.

Some Possibilities

In the dance there is the prospect of a form of stage presentation that opens possibilities, yet the strictly classical ballet does not suffice. It needs the touch of the dramatic to give it the realism that the average movie patron demands in his entertainment.

Out of all these things, however, will undoubtedly evolve some form of act that will fit properly into the de luxe motion picture program. The idea act will probably have its foundation in music. It will have a background of orchestral music. It will have the voice and it will have dramatic action. With these elements as the essential ingredients, the genius of the scenic artist and the skill of the stage director will undoubtedly be able to produce a special form of entertainment that will appeal to the eye, to the ear and to the imagination.

Ben Bernie Leaving the Rialto

ON Saturday, December 19th, Ben Bernie, "The Maestro," will terminate his long engagement at the Rialto Theatre and together with his orchestra will depart for Florida to fill a series of concert dates at the larger resorts prior to his opening in London. A change in Bernie's European tour plans made it necessary for him to secure immediate release from his present arrangement at the Rialto where he has become one of the most popular attractions on Broadway.

Bernie the "Dean Swift" of orchestra directors holds the record of the longest non-stop appearance of any dance leader. He has gone 36 hours without once seeking his downy couch. This record was made on the days of Nov. 24-25 when he went from record rehearsal at nine in the morning to matinee shows at the Rialto, dinner hours at Roosevelt, night shows Rialto, supper dance Roosevelt, Armstrong-Feish party Ritz-Carlton, benefit performance at two hospitals, three hours of record making and four hours spent at the Friars Club writing new melodies.

It is probable that the big Rivoli Orchestra will replace the Bernie organization at the Rialto. "Siegfried," the big film spectacle opens at this theatre on December 20th, and will be featured with the special orchestral score arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld for the premier last summer at the Century.

Anderson to Direct Productions

FOLLOWING the announcement that the Public Theatres will be the corporate title for the Famous Players and Balaban & Katz merger word was received that John Murray Anderson had been signed on a long term contract as producer of the various presentation features to be routed on the circuit. Mr. Anderson, who has gained metropolitan publicity with his various productions of the Greenwich Village Follies and Music Box revues is bringing to his new field a policy which is meeting with a hearty patron response. Anderson's work is very colorful and teems with originality, and the addition of a man of his vision, his willingness to produce the original idea and mount it lavishly and correctly is bound to have its effect upon the entire presentation business.

Sensationalism in Presentations

THE lowly presentation that started out as an artistic divertissement seems to be subject these days to all manner of treatment. We can attribute this to the process of evolution. Policies are being changed and it seems that "anything that is different" is immediately given a spot in the presentation program. The newest angle is the "sensational" which embraces spectacular acrobatic acts and master illusion effects. If these two features which have been used in vaudeville, if given an artistic background they will undoubtedly prove successful and in keeping with presentation atmosphere.

Two Stage Novelties

Details for Working Out and Using to Advantage the Revolving Stage and Iris Curtain, Both of Which Have Passed the Stage of Experimentation—Charming Little Prolog May Be Done With These Suggestions

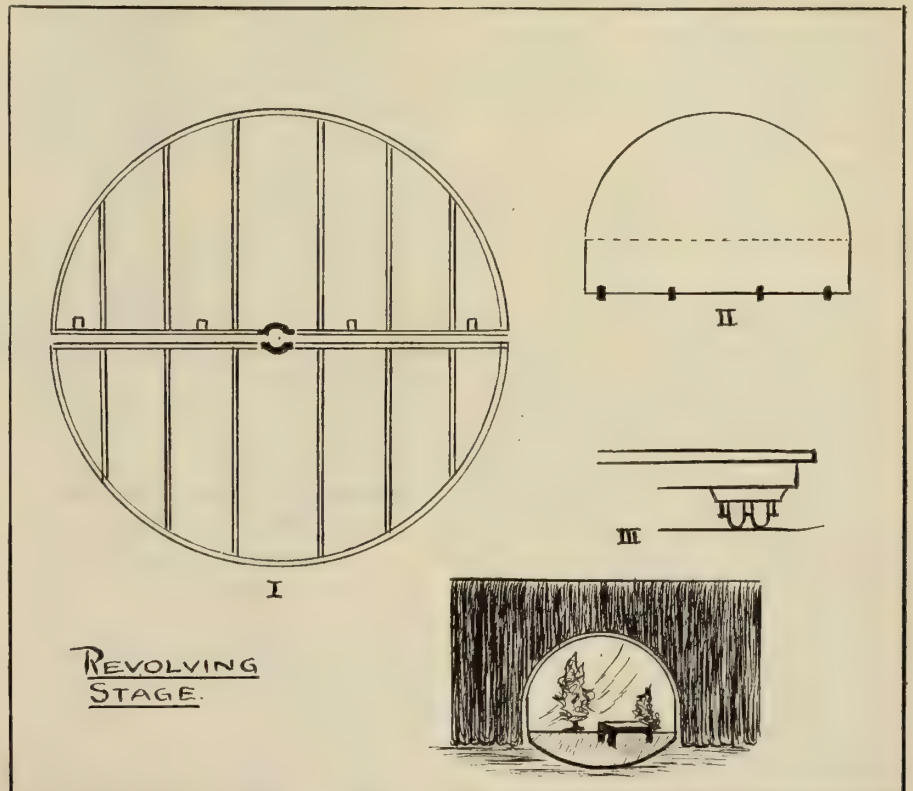
Moving Picture World Presentations—Devised by Colby Harriman

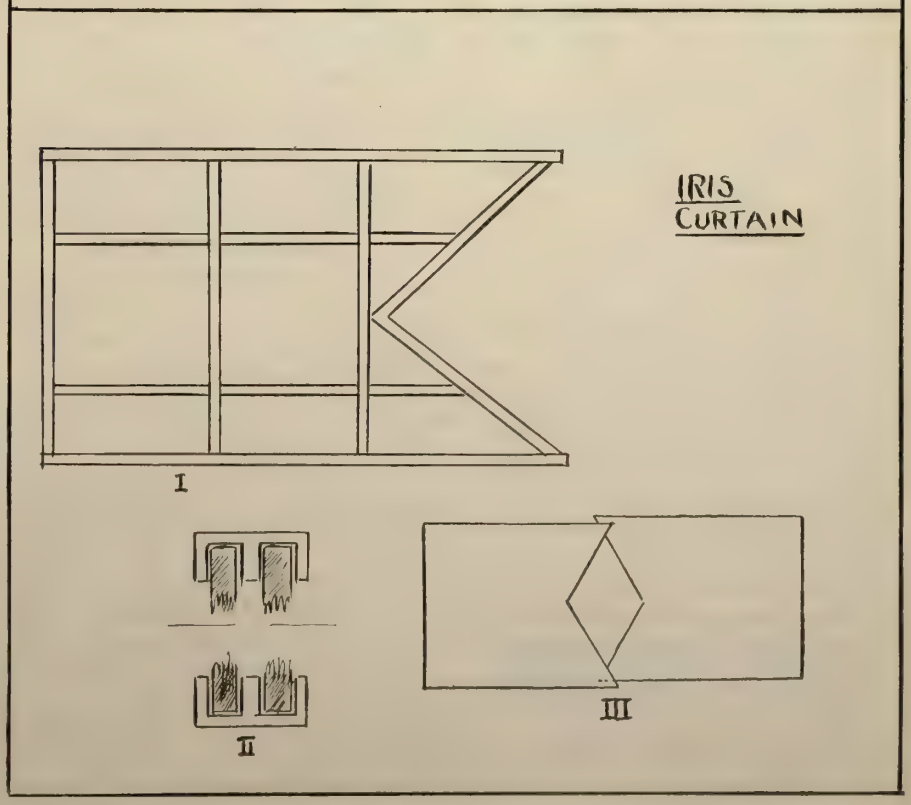
DIGRESSING from our usual presentation suggestions, we are offering two stage novelties which are of technical interest to producers. With the limited space which we find prevalent in most motion picture theatres and the constant tax on one's ingenuity to produce a variety of scenic effects and keep within bounds, these two suggestions may clarify the situation.

The revolving stage and the Iris curtain are not new. They have passed the stage of experimentation and have been simplified thereby eliminating cumbersome and expensive construction. The revolving stage as indicated in the first drawing is one which may be used in innumerable instances and will prove a satisfactory base for any small setting. The accompanying design gives a general outline of the construction of a revolving stage which may be built at a most nominal cost. The stage should consist of two hemispherical units as indicated in Fig. 1. The framework should consist of heavy material upon which a floor is nailed, the edges rounded to give the outline. The two sections are placed back to back with a controlling pivot at center. A ringed opening in the platform should fit over a heavy pipe screwed to the floor. The stage should be separated with an arched partition as shown in Fig. 2. Partition may be of light material with pegs attached to it which fit into grooves located in one of the sections. The rubber tired casters should be attached at angles around the edges of the stage so as to permit it to revolve noiselessly. The stage may be revolved with a cable placed underneath it and operated with a windlass off stage. The setting for this is simple. The revolving stage is placed center; an arched drop cut to fit over the arched center of the revolving stage is hung. When one section of the stage faces the front the opening is closed permitting another set to be placed on the stage. Small compo-board set pieces, foliage units, etc., may constitute the major part of the sets, although there are no limitations as to what may be set in these areas. The size of the stage depends entirely upon the size of the working area of the stage itself.

The Iris curtain is a very effective bit of stage mechanism and is simple to construct and easy to manipulate. Two framed units with a cut opening as indicated in Fig. 1 are placed in a double track or groove and are worked back and forth on the same principle that draw curtains are operated. Travellers may be placed in the grooves both top and bottom and permit an easy functioning of this devise. The face of the curtains may be covered with fabrics or painted a dark color.

Fig. 2 shows the position of the two units comprising the curtain. Fig. 3 indicates the double track or groove which must be placed at the top and bottom of the curtain to insure its proper manipulation.





Presentations at First Run Theatres

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: "The Phantom of the Opera" (Universal)

Overture: "Faust," Gounod. (Grand fantasy with special Symphonic Jazz Interpolations by Arthur Lange). Colony Orchestra under the direction of Andre Dore and Dr. Edward Kilenyi, associate conductor. Mr. John Priest at the Console.

Canary flood, from spots, cover orchestra —Magneta flood on proscenium curtain; magenta foots, blue and magenta tops. For finale canary flood to curtains which part for:

"Parisian Gaities"—A colorful extravaganza of Parisian student life. Lyrics by George Bennett. Music by Jack Glogau. Staged by Harry Shaw and J. De Rosa.

Setting: The rendevous of the Parisian student, "Cafe de Montrouge." This proved to be a snug little retreat at left stage, with the "true" striped awning—the chairs and tables, but no drinks. Across stage between third and fourth a high wall with heavy iron gates center, over which, atop the wall was what seemed to be a lookout house, with gabled roof and a railing around the base, from which hangs vines and the colorful Wisteria in full bloom—at one end of the wall, the peak of a neighboring roof is seen, against the blue sky, and at the other end, there is what seems to be, or should be, a prison tower, which reaches far above the wall; which ends against a backing of hanging greens, masked by several odd set trees —from this set down stage is a short and lower wall with a gate (scroll) which is swung wide open to provide an entrance in 1st—this gate and wall is overgrown with the clinging rose, in profusion and an ample amount of green clinging vines, which reaches across the wall, across stage. Back of the gates center, is another hanging green masking piece, with clinging vines and flowers. in front of this is a set rock.

Costuming: Harmoniously blended, colorful and picturesque.

Dancing numbers were all very effective and well rendered by the Midinettes and the entire company.

The composition of the stage picture was very well maintained.

Principles: About the average, except Mlle. Narree, her work is exceptional and sensational—as a contortion soloist.

Lighting: Full stage light with numbers spotted, except one group dance number, which was cross lighted from bridge, magenta and blue to walls and gate with color wheel of same colors on dancers, and the entrance of Mlle. Narree, who is spotted, as the center gates open, then full stage, with amber spot on artist.

LOOK AT 'EM fightin' and arguin' and jawin'—and me layin' here half dead—seems like I can feel the death-rattle down in my head right now.

Oh, such a pain!

Not constant—intermittent!

And them two jaw about whose fault it is that the poor, hard-workin' print ain't protected.

They know whose fault it is!

It's MY fault.

But whose fault is it that it is MY FAULT?

Protect the Print!

That's what I was designed to do while it is runnin' through my fingers. I like to take hold of the perforations and snap them down without a rattle, without a tear.

But here I lay on my face with them two fightin' over what has happened to a $1,000,000 production.

This is what happened.

When I come from the factory and set myself up in this place to shoot perfect pictures onto the screen, I had every part machined to the thousandth of an inch; experts had went over every one of my parts, like a dentist hunts cavities, and said I was "The cats."

Then what has made me go to the dogs!

This is it!

My owner let me run and run and run—for years. Never thought of overhaulin' me. Never figured that there has got to be wear and tear, even with the finest of fine starts, the best of metal and the most perfect of machine work.

Then, one day, the feller what sits up here with me and sees about keepin' the picture on the whitewashed square, goes to my owner——

"That projector is sure on the blink," he sings out. And, bein' a hard workin' guy that done conscientiously the best he knowed how with what he had to do it with, he shows the boss how he had went over me and tightened up where it was needed and put oil where it was useful—AND NOT WHERE IT WOULD BE ALL OVER THE POOR, HARD WORKIN' PRINT, NEITHER—and he laid out a list of what had to be got for me.

So my owner sets down and looks over the catalogue of what parts my manufacturer has listed as genuine and real.

"Huh!" he monologs, "real parts cost like Helen Summer."

Then he lays back in his old, squeakin' swivel chair and lams the desk with a pencil: then he hops up.

"Ham!" he busts out, "I know where I kin git them same kind of parts—only maybe not STAMPED genuine! But they LOOK all right and they're a whole lot cheaper!"

So he does get them genuine fake parts—and no matter how he bellyaches, the guy tendin' me has to jam 'em and dam 'em and get 'em in somehow.

And my insides rattles and squeals and my gizzard grinds and then, all of a sudden—look back at the pitcher.

If it's my last gasp. lemme gasp——

Theatre Lighting Problems Solved In Way That Will Interest Builders

THIS story will be of paramount interest to the man who contemplates building a theatre.

There is nothing more to be desired in any theatre than a system of lighting by which a patron can easily find a way to a vacant seat, or to leave the theatre during the showing of a picture, without at the same time conflicting with the picture on the screen.

It is conceded by experts—and I've talked with people from the audience--that the lighting used in the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, New York, is certainly an asset in the matter of pleasing patrons.

So, in the interest of the man who wants that sort of lighting, Mr. Lloyd A. Jones, Physical Research Laboratory, Eastman Kodak Company, kindly permits the publication here of portions of a paper originally published in the journal of the American Society of Electrical Engineers, in the preparation of which Mr. Jones collaborated with Frederick A. Mott, Electrical Engineer and Manager Construction Department Wheeler-Green Electric Co.

This reprinted selection of informative data may seem technical to some of you—but it's great reading if you're really after effects such as those which made one Eastman Theatre patron say to me, "I'd travel from New York to attend that Theatre."—Editor.

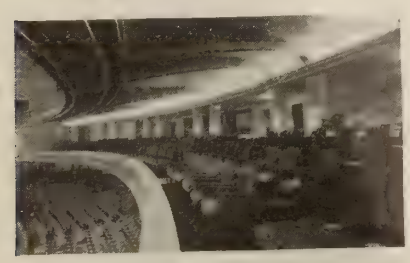
THE EASTMAN THEATRE and School of Music was designed and given to the people of Rochester by Mr. George Eastman to serve as a place where music might be taught and performed in its best forms and under ideal conditions.

Since motion pictures were to be utilized (in the theatre and as a part of the educational equipment) the lighting which would be used during the exhibition of motion pictures must be planned, and much preliminary work done, so that all possibility of visual fatigue would be eliminated.

The Problem

Some time before the building of the theatre, the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company at the request of Mr. Eastman took up the problem of finding how much general illumination could be tolerated in a motion picture theatre without injuring the quality of the projected picture.

An intelligent treatment of the illumination problem involves adequate knowledge of the fundamental visual processes. The relation between the stimulating radiation and the sensation produced when radiant energy falls upon the retina is extremely complicated; even a brief résumé of the subject would require many pages. In this particular problem we shall be concerned chiefly with the way in which the retina responds to brightness and difference of brightness. From the theoretical standpoint, therefore, the treatment of the problem of illuminating this theatre must be based upon the knowledge of the human eye's sensibility to brightness. There are three types of sensibility to brightness: (1) threshold sensibility, which is measured by the least brightness perceptible; (2) contrast sensibility, which is measured by the least brightness difference perceptible, and (3) glare sensibility, which is measured by the brightness just sufficient to produce discomfort or an appreciable lowering of visual acuity.



Plenty of light but no battle with picture.

Throws light to the ceiling, whence it is diffused over auditorium.

Experimental work was done in a small projection room with a screen mounted directly on one of the end walls. The room illumination was obtained by a fixture suspended in such a way as to illuminate the ceiling surfaces. This was so arranged that the ceiling near the rear of the room was illuminated to a fairly high level while the illumination decreased gradually toward the front of the room. By this arrangement it was found possible to obtain illumination on the table plane (horizontal plane 30 inches from the floor level) varying from 0.1 foot candle near the front of the room up to 0.25 foot candle at the rear without any perceptible injury to the quality of the projected motion picture. The following recommendations for the illumination of motion picture theatres were made. These were based not only upon the results obtained in the experimental work done at that time but also upon a consideration of the fundamental nature of visual processes and the requirements of vision.

1. The illumination on the table plane should vary from 0.1 to 0.2 foot candles, decreasing toward the front of the auditorium.

2. No area (outside of the projected picture) visible from any seat in the theatre should have a brightness of more than 2.5 to 3.0 millilamberts.

3. The attainment of (1) without exceeding the values mentioned in (2) requires the use of a very extended effective source such as illuminated ceilings and walls, and is best accomplished by the use of an indirect system of lighting.

4. All light source fixtures such as diffusing globes and translucent glass ware having a surface brightness of more than 2.5 to 3.0 millilamberts should be concealed from view or so placed as not to fall within the field of vision of the audience.

5. The lighting of the lobbies, vestibules, corridors and stairways should be so arranged that the transition from the brightness level of the exterior to that of the interior will be as gradual as possible thus eliminating any sudden change in the brightness to which the eye is subjected. Such an arrangement is desirable for the elimination of visual shock which always occurs when one passes from a region of very high to very low illumination or vice versa.

Other conclusions relative to the screen, frame, and lighting of the vestibules, lobbies, foyer, etc., were made which will not be reviewed at this time.

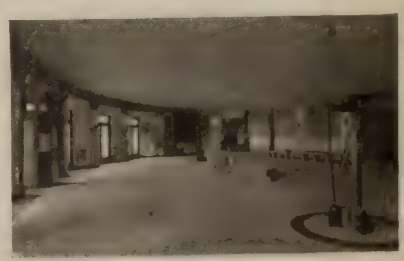
How Problem Is Met

The lighting of the theatre during the projection of pictures is accomplished to a great extent by the large chandelier shown. In this are mounted concealed units which throw light upward onto the ceiling. This lighted surface then becomes the effective source of illumination and due to the large area utilized a satisfactory low surface brightness suffices to give the required illumination. Within the chandelier are a few unconcealed lamps of low wattage which are operated at very low voltage. These light the chandelier itself to a very low level just sufficient to prevent the chandelier from being silhouetted as a dark mass against the ceiling. The intrinsic brilliancy of these units is low enough to prevent any possibility of glare.

In considering the illumination conditions in the motion picture theatre, the chief factor of interest is the brightness of the various objects within the field of the observer's vision. For an observer at almost any point in the auditorium, that is to say, in either the orchestra, mezzanine, or balcony, the central portion of the field of vision is, of course, filled by the picture being observed. The regions immediately surrounding this are occupied by what we may term the "stage setting" which, in the theatre under discussion, is of an architectural type, consisting largely of areas which represent gray stone walls above which may be seen a dark greenish-blue curtain representing the sky. Finally the lateral portions of the field of view are filled by the side walls of the theatre whose lower sections are of buff-colored stone surmounted by large mural paintings.

Plenty of Light—No Glare

Class the chandelier lights as follows:



The urn in foreground is part of the lighting arrangement of the graduated-glow system.

step lights, low lights, high lights, candles, direct lights and the scintillator. The step, low and high lights are indirect. The candles and the direct lights are visible from the floor and the scintillator lights are so arranged within the fixtures as to give scintillation to the crystals of which the fixture is composed. This fixture is about 13 feet in diameter and 18 feet high.

The step lights are so named as they are designed to furnish sufficient illumination to safely use the steps during the showing of the pictures and also to give sufficient illumination to read the head-lines on the programs, as described in another part of this paper.

The low lights have a capacity of about 5 kilowatts, and the high lights of about 15 kilowatts. The direct lights have a capacity of about 8 kilowatts. As their names indicate, they give a low stage or a high stage of illumination for the indirect lighting. The direct lighting is visible and is arranged in symmetrical lines about the lower bowl of the fixture.

The main lobby is elliptical in form, the chief source of illumination being two tripods placed at the focusses of this ellipse. These tripods are arranged for indirect lighting, the light being thrown directly against the ceiling.

On the table between the two tripods are two aquariums which are illuminated by lights concealed in the bases. Suplementary illumination is obtained from semi-indirect brackets located on the pilasters at the walls of this lobby. The majority of these lights are connected to the alternating-current lighting system, but a few are connected to the direct-current emergency system so that if one system fails there will be sufficient illumination from the other to carry on the production.

The mezzanine is lighted chiefly by lamps placed in the cove D shown. The lamps themselves are entirely concealed, the illumination being obtained by light reflected from the upper portions of the cove surface and from the illuminated ceiling over the mezzanine level. The space beneath the mezzanine is lighted by a similar cove system to that shown. All light sources within the region occupied by seats are entirely concealed from the audience, that is, with the exception of the few small units mentioned previously which are operated at a very low intrinsic brilliancy in the main chandelier. Two fixtures for indirect lighting are provided near the rear and at the sides which throw light upon the ceiling fixtures are not shown.

Brightness Graduation

The lighting of the motion picture theatre ought preferably to be so arranged that the eyes of the patron upon entering the theatre may not be subjected to any sudden and great change in the illumination. Moreover, if the change from the exterior to the interior brightness levels can be made gradually, over an appreciable period of time, the processes of adaptation will also have time to operate. Thus the eye will be ready for satisfactory vision at the illumination level existing within the auditorium. From the measurements of illumination and brightness it is possible to trace the decrease in brightness level as the patron passes through the several entrance areas. Some of these values are presented in the following table in a way calculated to illustrate this decrease of brightness as a person enters the theatre through the main lobby, orchestra foyer and on into the central portion of the main floor.

Roth Actodector Part of Fine Equipment L. & T. Put in State

ROTH BROTHERS are naturally proud to have exhibitors of the known ability of Lubliner & Trinz select Roth Bros. Actodector, to furnish current for the projection used in their recently opened State Theatre in Chicago.

This is among the largest and best equipped theatres in the United States. It has to ensure dependable projection—the heart of every theatre that shows motion pictures.

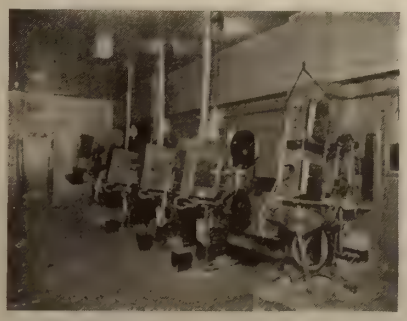
Therefore Roth Bros. Actodector, standard 25-35, especially designed to furnish current for the modern Reflector Type arcs, was chosen because of its demonstrated dependability, its compactness, its economy of operation and of current consumption.

The picture has a 164 foot throw, and is 22 feet square on the screen. Projection machines are equipped with mirror type arcs and have one spot and one dissolver in conjunction.

The simplicity of operation of the Roth Actodector, and its reliable characteristics are especially important to the projectionist in a large house such as the State theater. The compact size, and the fact that the Roth Actodector is designed to furnish current for the modern reflector type arcs, make this unit much more economical in operation than the larger machines formerly used for power supply.

The Roth Actodector has a three horsepower motor, which is ample for any demands on the unit, by reason of the specially designed current carrying features of the whole machine. In operation, the second arc can be struck while the machine is carrying the first one, and there will be no change in operation of the first projection machine, nor are any adjustments of the Actodector necessary. The Actodector carries two arcs during the change-over period, and one arc cannot steal current from the other when the second arc is being struck.

Economy of operation, an important feature frequently overlooked, is most remarkable in the Actodector when compared with old, large motor generator units. The Actodector, being designed especially for this service, is of small size, and is working at high efficiency all the time.



L. & T. State Projectors—Motiographs—with their high intensity arc lamps, and other Actodector handled light sources.

Better Projection Pays

Study the Lens Chart

I PUT a proposition up to John Griffith for an opinion. Projection lens liameter 1 13/16 inches. Projection lens working distance 4 inches. Horizontal crater diameter 24/64ths of an inch. I don't know just what had passed before, but here is what Griffith said:

A projection lens diameter of 1 13/16 inches and a working distance of four inches automatically demands a 20 inch Y distance if plano convex condenser combination be used. This would call for an excessive crater distance, with consequent heavy light waste, hence the Cinephor Parabolic should be used.

Efficient Line-Up

First I will give an efficient line-up, using the Cinephor condenser. I will then try to show why it sometimes is necessary to sacrifice something in efficiency in order to secure the best possible definition; incidentally demonstrating that THE LENS CHARTS SHOULD AND MUST BE STUDIED IF ONE IS TO GET THE GREATEST POSSIBLE VALUE OUT OF THEM.

With a 24/64ths horizontal crater diameter, a 6½ inch focal length plano convex collector lens and a Cinephor Parabolic converging lens, a 14 inch Y distance would be all right. One and one half inches of the Y distance would be through the aperture, and 12.8 between the condenser and aperture. (There is confusion here. As I, and I think every one else has understood the matter, the "Y distance" is from the FACE of the converging lens to the aperture—NOT the cooling plate, but the aperture)—of the projector. Now you inject something else. Don't do it, John. If we are to use the term "Y distance," then it must stand for ONE DEFINITE THING, and one thing only. If face of converging lens to aperture plate is not correct, then define it and FIX it once and for all.—Editor.)

This would give us a 3 1/16 inch crater distance and the projection lens would collect all the light passing through the aperture.

However, this set-up, while very efficient, has one very bad feature, Viz: the aerial image of the condenser, where the rotating shutter should be, has a too-large diameter.

A Suggestion

As we all know, increasing the Y distance decreases the diameter of the aerial image of the condenser; also it brings it closer to the projection lens. (A most important matter under some circumstances.—Editor.)

By the same reason, decreasing the Y distance increases the diameter of the aerial image of the condenser and pushes it further from the lens—probably entirely out of reach of the rotating shutter, unless a special shutter shaft be installed.

Naturally the question arises: How may this adjustment be made so as to obtain a reduction of the aerial image diameter, thus not only enabling the use of a master blade of minimum width, and securing better definition by permitting the master blade to cover the lens more completely during film movement, without at the same time making a too great sacrifice in light loss through face of collector lens?

The Best Way

The best method I know of is to study the lens charts and examine closely the effect of any change we may have in contemplation. For instance: in the case in point we have a 24/64th horizontal crater diameter located 3 1/16 inches from the face of the collector lens, a 5 1/4 projection lens with a four inch working distance, and a 1 13/16 inch diameter and a 14 inch Y distance, which extends 1 1/2 inches through the projector aperture, with the beam concentrated 2.8 increased crater distance—distance crater to inches from the projection lens. We wish to decrease the diameter of the aerial image by increasing the Y distance. The total distance from face of converging lens to back surface of projection lens is, as you will note, 6.8 inches.

First, in order to increase the Y distance we must use a longer focal length collector lens, which of course is a plano convex, therefore let us examine the 6½-7½ condenser column of chart A. (You've got me stuck there, John. I can't remember what the focal length of the parabolic is, but from the above I guess it must be 6½ inches. —Editor.)

We find the 24/64th crater diameter coupled with a 3 5/16 inch crater distance and, with a 15 inch Y distance, and opposite it in chart B, under the 1 13/16 inch lens diameter we find a three inch working distance. Since the actual working distance is 4 inches, the Y distance would be 14 instead of 15 inches, with a total distance between face of converging lens and projection lens of 15 plus 3, or 14 plus 4 equals 18 inches, which is an increase of 1½ inches in the Y distance as against the first condition. But this is not sufficient to make any appreciable difference in the diameter of the light beam at the aerial image of the condenser, or to bring it appreciably closer to the lens.

Examine Figures

Let us next examine the figures opposite the 17 inch Y distance. We find in the 6½-7½ condenser column a 21/64th inch crater diameter, coupled with a 3 3/16 inch crater distance, which latter is only an increase of 1/8 of an inch over the first condition. We find under the 1 13/16 inch lens diameter in Chart B, a 3.4 inch working distance in the 1 13/16 inch lens diameter vertical column.

This will give us 16.4 inches between the face of the converging lens and the aperture, with the maximum light concentration six tenths of an inch on the projection lens side of the aperture, and 3.4 inches from the face of the lens, which makes a total of 17 plus 3.4 inches equals 20.4 inches between the face of the converging lens and the projection lens. (Griffith persists in saying "the condenser," but I assume he means the face of the converging lens. However, darn y' John, in such matters it is always much the best to say EXACTLY what you mean.—Editor.) This gives us an increase of 20.4—16.8 equals 3.6 inches as against the first condition, which would reduce the diameter of the aerial image considerably, as well as bring it nearer to the lens, but while we are reducing the diameter of the light beam at the aerial image—at the rotating shutter position—we were at the same time increasing it at the aperture. And you smart alecs who 'know it all' of course knew all this too. H—l yes. CERTAINLY! Sure thing, etc., etc. —Ed). The difference between 21/64 and 24/64ths of an inch crater diameter is only 3/64ths, but since we are working on a ratio of about four to one, we would have increased the spot by four times 3/64ths of an inch, which is about 1/5th of an inch, but this increase is mostly shell light when using cinephor condenser, and the loss is not so great as is indicated. This is the only way to get fine definition and a minimum shutter master blade width unless we reduce the beam diameter by obstruction at the shutter position, or at the condenser, which eliminates light from all portions of the light source instead of wasting only the shell light.

The method described not only will improve the definition by reduction of the diameter of the light beam where the shutter blades cut it, thus enabling the shutter master blade to cut off practically all light while the film is moving without resorting to an impossible blade width, but it also reduces the diameter of the pencils of light which the lens receives from each point of the film (see figures 46 and 47 of the Bluebook.) Therefore, in view of these facts, I would recommend a 7½ convex collector and a Cinephor parabolic, with a 16.4 Y distance (Face of converging lens to aperture, I take it.—Editor.)

This is a somewhat lengthy explanation of the whys and wherefores of the matter and I will let some one talk about the Extralite shutter (It was mixed up in the matter.—Editor), except that I will say that whatever light it saves one half of it is detrimental to definition; also I would remark that fifty amperes D. C. is not sufficient light for a 15 ft. 10 in. picture under modern projection practice, unless the auditorium is a very narrow one which permits of the use of a narrow angle screen, which item is not mentioned by the correspondent.

Really, men, there is some comedy in this when one remembers the know-it-all wise ones who solemnly declare that there is noth-

Question No. 402—Can you connect a projector arc lamp to a 2-wire or to a 3-wire system at any point, and under all conditions of commercial voltage?

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Walter Munn, Iron Mountain, Michigan; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Roy Saxon, Lufkin, Texas; Allan Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, all made acceptable reply.

I think all the above named will, however, agree that Doe's answer is more complete than their own. Doe says:

Before talking about voltage, let us assume that the generator, the conductors (including fuses and switches) are all large enough to carry the additional load a projection arc lamp would entail, up to the point of connection.

Let us also assume that the question does not contemplate connecting through motor generator, mercury arc rectifier, transformer or their equivalent, because of course by their aid high voltage may be connected to.

We therefore consider merely the connection to be made by means of resistance control of voltage, which may be done at any point desired, either to a 2-wire or a 3-wire system, where the highest voltage does not exceed 500. However, the connection to anything exceeding 110 volts, through resistance, would be abnormally wasteful.

It is quite possible to handle 500 volts through resistance, and in the early days of projection that was done many times, in temporary "one-night" set-ups where 500 volt trolley current was the only current available. It was, however, dangerous; also it was hard to handle, since a slight change in the total resistance meant a very considerable change in amperage delivery; also the waste was little short of enormous.

A most excellent reply. I myself once saw 500 volt current used for projection, through a water rheostat, but think the amperage was intermittently anywhere from twenty to almost enough to burn up everything inside the lamphouse.

Question No. 403—Practical question by S. F. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico: Suppose you test across the two outside wires of a 3-wire system, using for a test lamp two 110-volt incandescent lamps connected in series, and get full light. Then, using only one 110-volt lamp, test from one outside wire to the neutral, get only a faint glow. You test from the other outside wire to the neutral and get nothing at all. What would this indicate? Or suppose you test from outside wire to outside wire, using two 110-volt lamps in series, and get only a red filament, but from one outside wire to neutral you get full light on both lamps, while from the other outside wire to neutral you get only a red filament. What is wrong?

Thoreau, Richards and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia, came in on this one, and with a very good answer too.

Bennewitz answers in a way which seems excellent to me, except for one error. He says:

If you test across the two outside wires of an Edison 3-wire system, using two 110 volt incandescent lamps in series, and get full light, it indicates that the two outside wires are supplying full voltage, or approximately so. If then, using one 110 volt lamp, you test from one outside wire to neutral and get only a faint glow, it indicates that the neutral fuse is blown, or neutral wire is broken. It also indicates that there is a ground on the opposite outside wire. If you now test from the opposite outside wire to neutral and get no light at all, it is further proof that the neutral fuse is blown or neutral wire broken. It also indicates that the other outside wire is free from grounds, or that if it is grounded, the ground is of such high resistance that its presence is not indicated by the lamp.

If you test from one outside wire to the other outside wire, using two 110 volt lamps in series, and get only a red filament, it at first would give the impression that the voltage was far below normal. But, as we proceed by testing from one outside wire to neutral, getting full light and from the other outside wire to neutral we get only red filament, it indicates that the wires are not properly connected to the switch, or fuse block, the neutral being connected to one of the outside terminals. Ascertain the point at which this reversal of wires occurs and then place the two wires across which you get full light on the outside.

Excellent, except that Brother Bennewitz slipped a cog on the ground, because with the neutral fuse blown the ground action could only occur between outside wire and outside wire, both of which would have to have a ground, unless he means, as probably he does, that the neutral has a ground on the dead side of the fuse or break.

Hanover says:

The test across outside wires shows full, normal voltage of approximately 220. The test outside and neutral which produces only a faint glow in one lamp, and nothing between other outside wire and neutral indicates (A) neutral wire is "open," probably blown fuse. (B) A ground between neutral and one outside wire, and none between neutral and other outside wire. This would, of course, mean a ground on one outside wire, a ground on neutral on dead side of blown fuse or other break, and no ground on other outside wire, or (C) that load is unbalanced and the amount of unbalance on the heavy side is flowing through the test lamp. Of this latter action I am not certain, but believe it might occur.

If we test between the outside wires, using two 110 volt lamps in series, and get only a red filament, and then get full light on both lamps between one outside wire and neutral, with only a red filament between other outside wire and neutral, it indicates that one outside wire has been connected as the center wire, while the neutral has been connected as an outside wire. In other words, two of the wires are misplaced.

Excellent, but I, too, am not so sure about the unbalanced load-red-filament matter. What do you chaps think about that? I have incorporated it as a question in a soon-to-come series of questions.

Question No. 404—Suppose your theatre main switchboard to be supplied by 3-wire feeders. The manager asks why a part of the auditorium lights have suddenly gone dim and others very bright. What are you going to tell him, without an instant's hesitation, is wrong?

I think Munn gives the best answer for publication. It is very practical. He says:

The neutral wire is "open," probably a blown fuse. Cut in more load, if possible, on the too-bright side, or cut out some of the load on the dim side. You can tell, instantly, which you have done when you open or close a switch, by the effect on the lights.

If the difference in brilliancy is very great, the safest thing to do would be to pull the main switch immediately, first having warned the audience if the auditorium will be plunged into darkness except for the exit lights, since otherwise it is likely the too-bright lights will burn out, and every one that does so instantly increases the load on the rest, so that from the time the first burns out until the auditorium is dark, would be very short anyhow. Having pulled the switch immediaetly re-fuse the neutral. If it again immediately blows, nothing remains but to balance the load as best you can, and run that way until the trouble which causes the blowing of the fuse is remedied.

In most localities fusing the neutral is prohibited by law. The neutral should be bridged with copper unless a fuse is required by law.

Question No. 405—How many wires are usually found in 2-phase and in 3-phase circuits?

Munn: "A 2-phase circuit usually has four wires, though it may be served by three. A 3-phase circuit usually has three wires, though it may have four, five or six."

Moore: "A 2-phase circuit may have either three or four wires and a 3-phase circuit either three or six." (Correct—Editor.)

Thoreau, Richards and Clark: "3-phase circuits usually have three wires. 2-phase currents usually are found in four wires."

Saxon: "In the single phase system there are two wires. In the 2-phase circuit there are four wires and in the 3-phase there are three wires."

Budge: "In 2-phase we usually find four wires and in 3-phase three wires."

Quite a variety of ideas, you will see, on a very simple matter. It would astound you did you examine the answers each week, and see how far from really accurate knowledge even our best men are in some things. The need of the "school" is apparent to the one who sees what I see, and I have, from this experience, come to the conclusion that the reason so few send in answers is that the average man, knowing his own weakness, is just plain afraid to tackle question answering, lest his own weakness be disclosed. You will note that in all this series, which would be literally "eaten up" by men in many lines of human endeavor, how very few out of the many thousands of motion picture projectionists have even made a try at sending in replies.

San Francisco, which for a long while rather prided itself on the fact that its projectionists were very high grade, has not sent in a single answer. The great City of Chicago has but one man who has dared tackle the matter, though there is perhaps a legitimate excuse there, because having anything to do with Richardson is like waving a very red red rag in front of a considerable percentage of those in power in projection matters in that city. Even Hamilton, Ontario, and Rock Island, Illinois, have been so silent one might hear their hair grow, and so it goes.

Oh well, the school is doing its work in all these and all other cities just the same, and in thousands of the smaller towns, so we should worry.

Question No. 406—Why did many of those who started out answering these questions in the beginning get cold feet, pop back into their hole and pull the hole in after them?

Munn says:

The answer to this is just the same as the answer to the question, "Why did I permit 401 questions slip by before attempting to send answers? It is: I DON'T KNOW."

Moore says:

Well, Frank, there are slackers in every field of human endeavor, and we have ours, though the percentage is perhaps abnormally high in motion picture projection

Thoreau, Richards and Clark say:

Just plain lack of interest in the profession. To be an authority on projection, or to understand its problems well, one must devote some portion of each of their days to study. Does a doctor or a lawyer work outside their actual practice? I'll say they do—if they expect to get anywhere. The same thing applies to motion picture projection, and increasingly so with each passing year. We do not say that because a man does not unite in the work of the Bluebook School he does not study, but once he has "joined" and gotten started in the "school," there is no legitimate excuse for dropping the work, except perhaps temporarily under stress of circumstances. He at least can benefit himself by constant contact with the "school," and can aid in elevating the "Operator" into a projectionist, and the business of motion picture projection into the realms of a profession. If he really knows his profession he will find real pleasure in imparting knowledge to his brothers.

Another angle to the matter is this: From an investment standpoint, if we engage in any mercantile business we must keep an up-to-date stock, constantly endeavoring to improve and increase the said stock. The "stock" of the motion picture projectionist is (A) Skill, (B) KNOWLEDGE, (C) Experience. The latter he only gets through practical work, but experience has less than half value unless backed up by real skill and knowledge, which may only be come by through another sort of work, viz: STUDY. Practical experience and study of theoretically correct practice go hand in hand. Neither is of large value without the other. None but the foolish would even think of disputing that. A SMALL TIME EACH DAY ALLOTED TO STUDY IS A VERY SMALL THING WHEN COMPARED WITH THE DIVIDENDS IT WILL RETURN IN FUTURE DAYS.

If those who drop out, and those who stay out, could only realize their folly, they would enter and stick for good. The bigger the School the greater the amount of knowledge we will all obtain from it.

Which, if you ask the Editor, is one unusually good setting forth of the whole matter.

Here is an answer, which I happen to know is pretty nearly the exact truth, but this man did NOT quit:

"Trouble on one side, sickness on the other;
Wouldn't answer this question, were it asked by another.
Bills and bills and bills, to give the pocketbook a pain,
Fighting a battle to keep from going insane!
Back again at last, with the rest of Bluebook class,
Pour out a stiff drink and pass me the glass."

Study the Lens Chart

ing at all to projection. Its just 'runnin' a machine."

Before publication I referred the foregoing to Griffith for his comment on my comments and criticism. He replies to the effect that the Y distance is the distance between the condenser and the concentration of light, which means just exactly nothing at all, John. Probably you mean to say that the Y distance is the distance from the face of the converging lens to the point of GREATEST CONCENTRATION of light—very different, you see. Griffith certainly does know projection light action, and how to make lens charts, but when it comes to description—well, John, your intermittent needs adjustment, your aerial image is all gummed up and too far from the lens.

Personally I think the Y distance had better be left as the distance face of converging condenser lens to aperture, with whatever distance there may be from there to the point of greatest concentration of light spoken of separately. My reasons for this is that even the machine operator will know and can fix definitely the distance from face of converging concentration of light to face of converging lens because he won't know and cannot find out exactly where the point of greatest concentration is. Do you see any insuperable objection to that proceedure, John?

Important

Griffith says:

Another and much simpler way of stating the entire proposition is thus: When using the Cinephor Parabolic condenser, and it is desired to reduce the diameter of the light beam and bring the plane of the aerial image back closer to the lens by increasing the Y distance, it may be done with the lens chart by assuming the crater diameter to be three sixty fourths of an inch (3/64 in.) less than it really is. Thus, if the diameter be 24/64 in. we would subtract 3/64 and call it 21/64, using the lens charts to adjust the optical train for that crater diameter.

This seems to me to be an extremely practical and valuable matter. It is a bit of information which, if INTELLIGENTLY APPLIED, will enable many a projectionist to materially improve his conditions and the results upon the screen. Of course it may mean some sacrifice in light, but as Griffith points out, it will be chiefly the poorest light, and anyhow the loss will be well compensated for by improved definition, and may be very much more than entirely compensated for my better definition and possible reduction of rotating shutter master blade. It is commended to you all for consideration and study.

Select Union Officials With Care

THE time approaches when local unions, both projectionist and mixed, will select officers to serve, or boss them during the coming year. In many unions men will seek these offices who are totally unfitted to hold them, while the men who, for the good of the organization ought to hold office, will not seek office.

After an experience with labor unions covering a full forty years I have about dispaired of asking members to look around them and consider the QUALIFICATION of men for the office which is to be filled, rather than either assisting or calmly permitting, without effort or protest, the election of men to office because they are a "good fellow" or because they happen to want it, regardless of the fact that they lack ability to fill the office they seek, either with credit to themselves or the organization.

The really good union officer is a reasonably scarce article. He is a man who, first of all, respects his work and has some liking for it. He respects the union and desires that it be respected by all men, including the employer—and mind you respect as I here use it is NOT to be confused with fear. When I say the man really suited to hold any office desires that the employer respect the union I mean that he wants him to respect it because he the employer knows that while it is fighting the battles of the men, still it is trying to give him a square deal by delivering high grade service through its members.

It is not demanding high remuneration for its members, and at the same time protecting them in delivering poor to rotten service. IT COMPELS THE EMPLOYER TO BE FAIR IN THE MATTER OF WAGES, WORKING CONDITIONS, AND IS ITSELF FAIR TO THE EMPLOYER BY OBLIGING ITS MEMBERS TO DELIVER THE GOODS AS WELL AS THEY CAN BE DELIVERED WITH THE EQUIPMENT SUPPLIED.

Of course it is true that officers cannot themselves compel the membership to be fair to the employer. That is true, BUT it also is true that the officers can, if they care to do it, lead the membership in that direction, and in time get the organization to insist upon its membership not only knowing how to do their work well and efficiently, actually doing it that way, under pain of severe penalty.

The officers naturally are the leaders. I am sorry to say that it not infrequently is the fact that offices are filled with men who ought NOT to be leaders, but the fact remains that they are.

Out of Business??

AS YOU know this department is having screen tests made by the Eastman Company, or perhaps a more correct statement would be that the Eastman Company Engineering Department has, at our solicitation, very kindly consented to make tests of all surfaces presented.

Many samples have already been tested, but letters addressed to the last known address of the following were returned by the Postoffice Department marked "Unclaimed" or "Not Found."

The Premier Screen Company, Box 861, Roanoke, Va.; The Eureka Cinema Corporation, 193 Turnbull street, Hartford, Conn., and The Hill Magic Chrystal Screen Company, San Francisco, California.

Presumably these various companies have gone out of business. If not, then let them stand forth and reveal their hiding place.

New Catalogue

THE Enterprise Optical and Manufacturing Company, Chicago, Illinois, manufacturers of the Motiograph Projectors, have handed me one of their new catalogues, descriptive of their various products.

The booklet is an artistic piece of work. If you want one (and it is always well that projectionists, and even machine operators have a full line of projection supplies on hand) just send a postcard request to the company, as per above address, addressing O. F. Spahr, President.

You know in advance

Pictures printed on Eastman Positive Film carry the photographic quality of the negative through to the screen.

It takes but a moment to check up —a glance in the margin tells the story. When you see the black-lettered identification "Eastman" "Kodak" you know in advance that the picture will screen with the brilliancy your audiences expect.

What's the story of this Big picture

That's one of the surprises we've been holding back on you. ¶ And only one of them. ¶ In fact, advertising this picture is just about the toughest assignment a man ever had—and the easiest. ¶ Difficult—because so many box-office angles were never rolled into one picture; easy, because a man can just pick on one, and not go wrong. ¶ Of course, as you know, we are talking about Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket."

this BIG had not the-story··

We could tell you the story alone—and you would know it meant box-office certainty. ¶ A sensationally successful Cosmopolitan Magazine serial—think of what that means in ready-made patrons. ¶ A novel selling phenomenally at two dollars. ¶ A story that tells the inside of movie studio life the tear, the heart-throb, the laugh—as only Adela Rogers St. Johns can tell it. ¶ A story that in every scene and every incident is GIVING FANS WHAT THEY WANT. ¶ Take the story alone—and you can go out and exploit to a BOX-OFFICE clean-up!

the-cast··

There would be no need to talk of anything else. ¶ First of all, a star known to every nation that reads. ¶ Then a supporting cast that includes Owen Moore, Earle Williams, Gladys Hulette, Lilyan Tashman, Eddie Dillon, Gladys Brockwell, Mickey Moore, Joan Standing, Eugenie Besserer, Bernard Randall, Bull Montana. ¶ What a cast. ¶ Hand-picked for name value, fidelity to type, and proven ability to get the utmost out of a story. ¶ Think of nothing but the cast—and you are thinking: BOX-OFFICE—and counting profits.

f Picture hing but the-director

You would have a certified guarantee of PRODUCTION VALUE—of a picture that could be nothing else than a special. ¶ A Marshall Neilan Production! ¶ Enough said! Nothing to add—except— ¶ Just think of what Marshall Neilan can do with a story that bares the heart of the motion picture colony! ¶ Never before have story and director been so superbly in union. ¶ Then give Marshall Neilan that CAST—and that STAR—and that STORY—and the answer is certain: ¶ There's a BOX OFFICE in your town that is going to break records!

the-STAR

We would merely have to print one name on these pages. ¶ And many photographs. ¶ "PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE!" ¶ You wouldn't have bothered to read about story, cast, or director, before you exclaimed, "There's the one I want for MY box office!" ¶ Try to calculate the millions of dollars of newspaper space that this star has received; the pages and pages of roto-gravure and magazines her beauty has graced. ¶ Millions of women—and men—are waiting to see her in her screen debut. ¶ And that's a conservative statement.

—but the SKYROCKET has Everything

EVERYTHING—that showmanship demands and audiences desire . . ¶ It stands unrivalled for "Get 'em in" value; it will create new standards for sheer, delightful audience entertainment. ¶ Associated Exhibitors, Inc., takes pride in presenting this gift to box-offices of the world ¶ Celebrity Pictures, Inc. has deserved pride in surrounding its internationally famed star with a production of finest artistry. ¶ A gem of brilliant radiance in a setting of scintillating beauty.

To Those Who Make Christmas Merry

Our message this week is a simple and a homely one. There is not a person within the wide gates of this industry who is not at this time sending forth in printed or in spoken form a word of holiday cheer.

In a larger sense they are sending out cheer three hundred and sixty-five days a year to all the world. Underneath the chimes of Christmas bells is the rustle of celluloid. A melody of cheer that is never hushed.

A strip of film invisibly entwines itself in every wreath of holly that is hung wherever Christmas is celebrated.

The men, women—and children—of the motion picture industry wish "A Merry Christmas" to the world every day of their lives.

It is to these, our friends, who will do so much to make the coming holidays, and all holidays merry, that the Moving Picture World wishes—

A Merry Christmas!

Something That Is Constructive—By Bill Reilly

It's the Katz!

THERE'S always something new under the PICTURE sun. The "something new" this week is a STUDIO designed, equipped and planned for the development of the stage PRESENTATION—a studio which Publix Theatres is launching as soon as the architects finish drawing up the specifications.

The stage presentation has reached a place of DIGNITY and of PUBLIC APPEAL on the motion picture program. That Publix Theatres should consider it of sufficient importance to deserve a fully equipped studio in which John Murray Anderson, Herschel Stuart and Nathaniel W. Finston, respectively presentation specialist, production manager for the studio and director of orchestral investiture can CO-ORDINATE their ideas and develop presentations to the UTMOST point of perfection is certainly a CONSTRUCTIVE step in the presentation adjunct of the motion picture for the big theatres of the country.

Short Programs Long in Showmanship

THE decision of the Fox Film Corporation and the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., to show to reviewers in their respective projection rooms programs made up exclusively of short features, last week, was indeed SOMETHING CONSTRUCTIVE.

The Fox program was made up of:

"Cupid a la Carte," an O. Henry Comedy in two reels; one reel of Fox News; "His Own Lawyer"; a Helen and Warren Comedy in two reels; "The Iron Trail Around the World," a Fox variety in one reel, and "A Flying Fool," an Imperial Fox Comedy in two reels.

The F.B.O. program comprised:

"Tea for Toomey," No. 7 in "The Adventures of Mazie" series, starring Alberta Vaughn"; "All Out," No. 5 of the Standard Fat Men Comedies, featuring "Fat" Karr, "Tiny" Alexander and "Fatty" Ross (three men to the ton), and "The Leopard's Spots," a Bray cartoon.

The reviewers expressed their approval of the new idea, and some of the New York papers gave the plan a liberal showing in the news columns.

It all helps "Laugh Month," and should be valuable a long time after "Laugh Month" has passed.

"P. A." Steps Out—We Step It Up

OH, the difference between the printed word and the spoken word! Here we go right on, week in and week out, printing "Laugh Month" news, and on the other hand—

P. A. Parsons, Director of Advertising for Pathe Exchanges, Inc., appears in person before an exhibitor gathering in Philadelphia and TALKS.

Elsewhere in this issue of Moving Picture World we give you Mr. Parson's address. It's a clear, fair and CONSTRUCTIVE exposition of the fact.

The exhibitors who HEARD "P. A." profited by that address. "P. A." cannot regret now arrange to visit every city and TALK. But we are putting the Moving Picture World amplifier on Mr. Parsons' speech so that every city and town in the country can tune in. Step up, folks, do your stuff, and we will STEP IT UP for you.

Tatters and Tears

THE "Poor, Hard-workin' Print" must be getting a regular thrill out of the campaign going on in Moving Picture World's YOUR EQUIPMENT pages. Others may have taken up the pen that's got the edge on the sword in her behalf—but it takes a Corona typewriter under the flying fingers of a really enthusiastic champion to give her the break she's getting—a BREAK that has nothing to do with TEAR.

It's a GOOD move—that. Slants in from a DIFFERENT angle, too. Usually a print protection campaign consists of a series of exhibitor slams for exchanges and the exchange come-backs. THIS time it's a get-together idea—and if you're not reading it you're missing SOMETHING CONSTRUCTIVE. Something that concerns YOU vitally, whether you sit at a desk in New York and O. K. the expenditure of $1,000,000; hold a developed negative up to the light and dope out the light for printing the positive; or tell the salesmen under you they've got to hit it up in their territory or there'll be a cleaning out; or just happen to be the chap who sticks up the posters and gets the film from the freight office and wonders how much time you've got to spend on bad patches before you can jam 'er through.

EXHIBITOR SUBSCRIPTION RENEWALS

ANY business—any paper—can put on an extra drive, boost its sales, and have something pretty to talk about for the moment.

FOR THE MOMENT.

A pointed question to ask of such a business or such a paper is:—

"HOW ARE YOUR REPEAT ORDERS? DO YOU LEAD YOUR FIELD IN RENEWALS?"

The Audit Bureau of Circulations demands that the question:—"PERCENTAGE OF EXPIRING SUBSCRIPTIONS RENEWED?" be answered.

It does it because the advertising men who comprise its Board of Directors REALIZE that in the answer to that specific question lies the REAL TRUTH OF THE READERS' PERMANENT PREFERENCE FOR THIS PAPER OR THAT PAPER.

By insisting on correct answers to such penetrating questions as this one the AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS is doing a service of inestimable value to the advertisers of this country who are interested in buying PROVEN VALUES.

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

"A Christmas Carol"

AT this time of the year as I walk up Fifth Avenue and see that phantasmagoria of rich and poor, young and old, healthy and sick, crippled, halt and blind, all searching for happiness, my thoughts compellingly turn to that most poignant of all yuletide stories—Dicken's "A Christmas Carol."

There never has been nor never will be a story written that sinks so deeply into the heart as this early English tale. We can leave it to the stage to try all sorts of metaphysical and psychic experiments, but it is the business of the Movies to touch the heart, and when they fail to move our hearts they neglect to reach our pocketbooks.

Many centuries ago Three Wise Men came out of the east carrying gifts of frankincense and myrrh.

Some day soon another Wise Man is going into the west, carrying a gift no less precious.

It will be the gift of Dicken's Christmas Carol, adapted worthily, as it deserves, screened so that it will prove a perpetual, perennial gold mine to the producer and to the exhibitor. To audiences all over the country it will become a fountain of childhood revivification. It should be shown each year in every picture house from the smallest icebound town in Minnesota to the most exotic southern city.

Jackie Coogan is ripe for the part of the tiny crippled Tim. And the producer who brings the Christmas Carol to him and him to the Christmas Carol is going to carry a very rare treasure to producer, to exhibitor; to rich, to poor, to young, to old, to healthy, to sick and to crippled, halt and blind.

My wish is that we won't have to wait longer than three hundred and sixty-five days before Tiny Tim's pathetic little cry will ring the Christmas air: "God bless us every one."

"The Last of Mrs. Cheyney"

AT the Fulton Theatre Charles Dillingham is presenting Ina Claire in Frederick Lonsdale's comedy "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney."

This is the delightful story of a young woman who is willing to steal pearls but isn't willing to give her virtue to the man she loves. Rather incongruous, isn't it, but aren't we all?

In Claire is charmingly satisfying in her role of Mrs. Cheyney, only she isn't a Mrs. at all but a little shop girl from Bloomsbury, awfully tired of measuring off her ribbon or selling her stockings, or whatever it is she does. She falls in with Charles (A. E. Matthews) a gentleman crook and he and his gang install her in a beautiful home at Goring, England. There, as the first act discloses, she is giving a garden party and musicale for some charitable purpose. Her distinguished guests, men and women alike, are charmed with her. Two visitors Lord Elton (Felix Aylmer) and Lord Arthur Dilling (Roland Young) are enthusiastic almost to the point of matrimony.

As her blooded guests leave, Fay Cheyney sits down at the piano and her erstwhile servants Charles, who acts as her butler, the chauffeur and two other domestics come into her drawing room, sit down, smoke and generally harangue her on the subject of the pearls.

She is invited on a house party by Mrs. Webley whose pearls are at least three yards long, but as Fay's love for Lord Arthur increases her enthusiasm for stealing pearls decreases.

Lord Arthur has a reputation of having ruined more women in his time than Lydia Pinkham has sold pills. He has never really had an honest emotion about anybody until Fay, with her innocence arrives. She doesn't smoke or drink or swear. She really stands out as a fine specimen of lovely modest womanhood among all the other horsy English beef-to-the-heels guests. The first night of Mrs. Webley's house party he asks Fay to marry him and she is forced to refuse. Then he becomes suspicious and remembers her butler Charles as a crook he had once met at Monte Carlo.

Fay goes to bed with a bad headache telling Mrs. Webley that she may come to her room for some aspirin in the night. Arthur changes bed rooms with Mrs. Webley and as Fay comes in to steal the pearls, he locks the door and gives her the choice of either spending the night with him or giving herself up to the police.

She refuses to stay with Arthur, rings the night alarm bell and tells the honorable hostess and guests who and what she is. But they don't turn her over to the police and she and Arthur go out the next morning and get married.

This play would make a successful moving picture. We Americans never tire of seeing the foibles of our British relatives thrown upon the screen. And rarely do we have the opportunity of witnessing such an amusingly subtle comedy. Mae McAvoy would be perfectly cast as Mrs. Cheyney. She has just the air of sweet, helpleess innocence which Fay Cheyney's role requires to make this a convincing screen production.

Beware of Widows

IN THE part of the country from which I come there is an old expression: "If a widow gets close enough to you to blow her breath on you, you're gone," and I am commencing to believe it since I saw Madge Kennedy in Owen Davis' "Beware of Widows," which Crosby Gaige is presenting at Maxine Elliott's Theatre.

Miss Kennedy is so charming that she makes Helen of Troy and all other historic beauties seem hybrid concoctions—crosses between starved truck horses and mistreated scrub women.

Some enterprising moving picture producer, tired of working and wishful of retiring on a large income, ought to take this little beauty with her red gold hair, entrancing dimples and unvarnished complexion right back into the movies. Said producer, if he follows my advice, could make enough money to buy a few floors of the Woolworth Building.

No better vehicle for Miss Kennedy's reappearance could be found than "Beware of Widows," which is the kind of play that pleases every type of audience. It's so amusing that I didn't even have a moment to read the first page of my program: "What the Well-Dressed Man Is Wearing This Season."

It would be no work at all to adapt this comedy for the movies. It was imagined for them, created for them—why it positively screams for the screen. Titles come ready made. Miss Kennedy as Joyce Bragdon speaks of her medical lover of polygamous tendencies something like this: Jack is so fond of women that when he was eighteen months old he broke his arm trying to climb out of his go-cart into a little girl's baby carriage.

I'm not going to tell you the plot. Go and see the play. Sufficient to say there are three couples on a houseboat. They are desirous of getting married but nobody seems quite sure just which individual he or she wants. But it turns out all right and all six live happily for ever after.

Any comedy director would have a regular fiesta, for in addition to Miss Kennedy's role, there are five other strong parts: The leading man, the ingenue, the juvenile, the father and the father's divorcee-fiancee, all brilliantly acted characterizations. Louise Dresser, by the way, would prove an enormous success as Paula Lee, the mistreated divorcee.

There is plenty of excitement and action—lots of everything, in fact, to make a royal box office flush.

In Which We Heckle Mr. Wisby

THE third of the series of articles "Of the Screen, by the Screen, and FOR the Screen" will appear in Moving Picture World next week.

In the coming article we are asking direct questions and Hrolf Wisby, whose production plan the series is discussing, is answering them.

It will not be a debate. Mr. Wisby is carrying a few brickbats up to the third story of these articles, and for the time being we are just laying them.

If you do not think he is justified in toting next week's hodful, tell us so, and tell us why.—THE EDITOR.

Associated Press Gives Film News More Prominence in Its Service

Will H. Hays Convinces Great News-Gathering Agency of Importance of Pictures— Will Counteract Scandals

By Sumner Smith

THE Associated Press, the world's greatest news-gathering organization, has, through the efforts of Will H. Hays, taken official cognizance of the motion picture industry as not only one of the greatest of American industries but as one whose activities have been somewhat neglected in the past so far as newspapers are concerned.

Hereafter more motion picture news than ever before will go out to the different newspapers of the world from the New York office of the Associated Press. Care, naturally, will be exercised to distinguish between real news and publicity.

It has been true that heretofore the events of the motion picture industry, big in a local sense, have not attracted the attention nor appealed to the interest of the world. The public has been interested in the doings of the stars, as witness the success of tabloid newspapers which feature "movie news" in streamer headlines and news photographs, but, through lack of knowledge, has known little and cared less about the real brains of the industry and its development along technical lines.

Possibly one thing in particular has done much to awaken the public to the fact that the industry possesses interesting personalities other than the stars— the Federal Trade Commission case against Famous Players. This case, which has filled hundreds of newspaper columns, has showed the public that Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, ranks with the big business brains of the country and that therefore his acts are vital and interesting news.

A Source of Big News

The Associated Press is quick to sense a reaction of the public to news values. The limelight has shown Zukor as a dominant figure to be reckoned with in the development of the country, for who can deny that motion pictures exert a tremendous influence today? And the Associated Press knows, through the Universal-Ufa deal as well as others that Carl Laemmle is another big motion picture man and will often be heard from in a news way, not to mention William Fox, organizer of a company to acquire hundreds of theatres, and many others.

So it has not been difficult for Mr. Hays to impress the Associated Press with the importance of motion picture news, and to receive assurances that the co-operation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., will be gratefully received.

This decision obviously is of incalculable value to the motion picture industry. It opens the doors for a wide dissemination of motion picture news other than that involving star personalities, and the bringing of constructive steps within the industry to the attention of the man with his paper propped against the sugar bowl at the breakfast table will do much to counteract any single impression of individuals that the industry is not stable and that its activities consist largely of riotous parties and divorces.

There is a colorful romance in the rapid growth of the motion picture industry that no writer to date has succeeded in telling adequately, so far as appealing to the public taste for the romantic is concerned. It is the opportunity of a lifetime for somebody with the necessary background and without an axe to grind. This romance of big business has heretofore been neglected by the great news-gathering agencies; now the future progress of the fourth greatest industry of the United States will be kept vividly before the American public.

The headlines won't be, "Movie Queen Sues for Fifth Divorce," but, say, "Juvenile Films Great Educator," or, "Film Men in Crucial Contest For Theatre Control." Then, with a background of real knowledge of the industry which entertains them, Mr. and Mrs. Public will better appreciate the products of the industry upon the screen.

Hurt Saving Girl

NO movie hero ever staged a more daring deed of valor than that performed in real life recently by George Fernberg, who operates the Alhambra and Auditorium Theatres at Newark and two houses at Utica and Granville, Ohio.

Fernberg, while doing some work in front of his Alhambra Theatre, noticed a little girl crossing the street directly in the path of a speeding automobile. Figuring that it would be impossible for the child to escape being hit by the machine, Fernberg dashed into the street and rescued the youngster. However, the car struck Fernberg, breaking his collar bone and inflicting other injuries of a more or less serious nature. Hospital authorities report that he has been painfully but not seriously hurt.

Toronto Discouraging Sunday Midnight Film Shows

CHIEF OF POLICE S. J. DICKSON of Toronto, Ontario, has asked for the co-operation of the Ontario Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners in discouraging the holding of Sunday midnight shows in Toronto picture theatres, a practice that has become noticeable with several local neighborhood cinemas during the past month or so. These small theatres throw open their doors at one minute past midnight Monday morning. Chief Dickson has stated that this is considered in the nature of a nuisance.

The matter has been brought up before the Toronto Board of Police Commissioners and Chief Dickson has told the executive of the Ontario M.P.T.O. that he would suggest that "you prosecute an educational campaign in order to offset the condition, otherwise it may be necessary to draft some drastic regulations."

The Ontario M.P.T.O. followed up this request by adopting a resolution against the practice of holding Sunday midnight shows and requesting all exhibitors to respect the wishes of the public.

TALMADGE SUES MAGAZINE

For saying that Richard Talmadge fakes his movie stunts Popular Mechanics must go into court. Through Abraham Carlos, his manager, the magazine has been sued for $500,000 damages. Popular Mechanics admitted that the stunts were done but "explained" under its pictures that dummies were used. A year ago the star broke his neck in leaping from one automobile to another racing in the opposite direction. He was paralyzed to his toes for weeks and encased in a hard-rubber cast. His friends say that Talmadge hasn't an equal among actors for taking personal risks.

Woodhull Would Keep Grange Off Screens of the Country

By Sumner Smith

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will seek to keep "Red" Grange off the screens of the country, according to a statement issued this week by National President R. F. Woodhull and based upon a report by Business Manager Joseph M. Seider. To this Lee Kugel replied for the Arrow Pictures Corporation, which has Grange under contract: "Ask them how many members they have among the 19,000 theatre owners in the country. The contract with Grange is genuine and we aren't going to pay any attention to such statements as this one put out today. They are trying to get publicity for themselves."

The Woodhull statement follows:

"We have made a thorough investigation of the alleged payment to "Red" Grange of a $300,000 check. We have made a demand upon the company responsible for these statements concerning Grange and his alleged movie contract for proof as to the genuineness of such publicity.

"The only response we have received is a report in motion picture trade journals boasting that the publicity stories had received 1,000,000 lines of free space on the wires of the news syndicate and that the $300,000 story had made the producer who was responsible for the emanation a famous man overnight.

"Producers have been guilty of bunk publicty in the past. The time has come when we theatre owners can assure the public that as the show window of the motion picture industry we will not project on our screens regardless of the calibre of the producer, a picture promoted by 'dollars and cents' statements.

"Mr. Seider, the general manager, has been authorized by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, composed of theatre owners throughout the United States and Canada, to acquaint our members with the facts we have uncovered in this particular incident. There is no question as to the action they will take when salesmen call upon them to sell this particular picture. This closes the matter so far as we are concerned."

"Kontingent" Plan Will React Against French; Says Blofson

THE enactment of the proposed French "Kontingent," or quota law, limiting the importations of American films in France will react to a great disadvantage against the motion picture industry there. Such is the belief of Al Blofson, former director general of Latin Europe for Universal, who has been appointed branch manager for Associated Exhibitors in Philadelphia after four years spent in the European motion picture field, with Paris as his headquarters.

Under the proposed French law, Mr. Blofson points out, the number of American films that can be imported will be limited. In the law there will be a reciprocity clause providing for additional importations at the ratio of one to one for every French-made film taken into the United States.

At the present time there is but one solidly organized producing company in France. There are, however, in addition, about twenty-five independent directors who, after writing their own scenarios, are sometimes able to secure sufficient capital to produce the stories. If they have merit they are generally taken for distribution through a French exchange.

Now and then American exchanges agree to distribute the picture on a percentage basis. This represents practically the only domestic output for France, which has approximately 1,600 theatres.

The proposed French law, according to Mr. Blofson, is the result of the efforts of M. Sapene, who controls 170 theatres in France. Several American distributors have, it is said, ignored Mr. Sapene in the supply of film because, they declared, he would not pay the price asked. His counter thrust was an agitation for the passage of the "Kontingent."

A careful analysis of the situation, Mr. Blofson points out, will show how utterly impossible it will be for France to get along without the present supply of American pictures, and how such a law would not reduce the revenues of American distributing companies. That American pictures have virtually ruined French production there is no doubt. The larger American producing companies are now distributing approximately fifty pictures a year in France. If their importations are curtailed by one-half they will still, it is said, get the same amount of money for the twenty-five pictures as they did for the fifty, the overhead not being lessened by the curtailment of prints handled. The exhibitor will, accordingly, be paying higher prices for his American films, which are in greater demand than the domestic product.

The reciprocity clause can be easily overcome, Mr. Blofson declares, by the purchase by American producers of antiquated and obsolete French negatives at ridiculously low prices. Some of these can be secured for as low as $100 and $200. Shipment of these to the United States will enable American interests to bring in American negative in excess of the stipulated quota. This additional cost will naturally be settled upon the French exhibitors.

The "Kontingent" system in Germany has resulted in some of the German interests making pictures at a very low cost and recording them as required by this law. For every German film made an American film may be imported, consequently, some pictures are made only to permit the importation of another picture and are never shown.

While American producers and distributors are much concerned over the prospect of the "Kontingent" becoming a law, Mr. Blofson is firm in his belief that, if passed, it will not react to the disadvantage of American product.

Incorporations

Of late there has come an influx in the number of motion picture companies that have incorporated in New York State through the secretary of state's office at Albany. Not only has there been a noticeable increase of such companies, week by week, but the capitalization of the companies is running considerably higher than in the past, indicating that investing capital is looking toward the motion picture business and its future in a more optimistic way than some little time ago. During the past week eleven companies incorporated and one had a capitalization of $500,000. The eleven companies, including one which did not state its capitalization when incorporating, showed a combined capitalization amounting to $725,000.

The companies, together with the amount of capitalization and the incorporators follows: Famous Attractions Corporation, $500,000, J. G. Bachmann, Max Schlessinger, D. M. Palley, New York City; Oceanside Theatres, Inc., $5,000, William Blam, Astoria; Max Sherman, Samuel Riegelhaupt, New York City; Cineman-Realty Corporation, $46,000, with the same incorporators; Laymon Co, Inc., $50,000, Guiseppe Ferrari, Astoria; Gene Laymon, New York; James Cusiniano, Clifton, N. J.; Chanin Theatres Corporation, $25,000, Rose Pincus, Lillian Passman, Rebecca Nackenson, New York City; R. S. P. Amusement Co., Inc., $15,000, Elsa Alper, Goldie Schwartz, Estelle Wagner, Brooklyn; Academy Film Corporation, $40,000, Lena Laure, Edward Laure, Mary Zucco, New York; Rothe & Layman Studios, Inc., $5,000, Bert Rothe, Douglas Layman, Saumel Kassel, New York City; Shergil Corporation, $40,000, Elliot Paley, T. F. Brown, New York City; Charles Gilpin, Philadelphia, Pa.; The Children's Playhouse, $5,000, M. A. and Sophie Jegendorf, Benjamin Pinchot, New York; Roosevelt Exhibition Corporation, capitalization not stated, D. E. Hubener, Richmond Hill; Len Strong, Fay Rubin, Brooklyn.

Davis Joins Rayart As an Executive; New Offices

HUGH G. DAVIS this week became affiliated with Rayart Pictures Corporation as vice-president. Mr. Davis has been associated with W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart, in various enterprises since 1914. Mr. Davis assumed his new post on December 7.

The rapid growth of Rayart Pictures Corporation, organized by W. Ray Johnston in July, has made remodeling of the offices necessary more than once.

It has now been found imperative to again expand and the first of the year will find Rayart established in more commodious and spacious quarters, occupying the tenth floor of the Powers Building, 723 7th avenue, instead of a portion of the second, which they have heretofore made their headquarters.

W. Ray Johnston is president of Rayart, Hugh G. Davis is vice-president, Thomas A. Curran is special western representative, Milton Simon is special representative for the central western states and George B. West is special representative for the eastern territory. Dorothy V. Cleveland continues as director of advertising and publicity.

AGREE TO DARK SUNDAYS

Dover, Ohio, exhibitors have agreed among themselves to maintain dark Sundays in the future. All houses in the town were open on Sunday a week or so ago. They were immediately ordered closed by the city officials but no arrests were made. The agreement followed.

Hayman Answers the M. P. T. O. A. Opposition to Affiliation with Hays

A Puzzle

A PERPLEXING question confronts the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri in the admission of managers of producer-owned theatres into the organization as active members.

The majority of the M. P. T. O. K-M. directors favor lifting bars to managers of producer-owned houses, but the by-laws of the organization say "no," and it takes more than a meeting of the directors to amend the constitution. At a regular convention only can the constitution be amended and the next convention will not be until spring, the usual semi-annual fall convention having been called off.

"All we can do is sit and wait," said R. R. Biechele, president of the exhibitor body. "There can be no doubt about the sentiment towards such a move, but we cannot throw our by-laws to the winds."

Incidentally, in connection with producer-owned houses, virtually all doubt concerning Metro-Goldwyn and the proposed new $3,000,000 Midland Theatre of Kansas City have been removed. Metro-Goldwyn will control the booking of the 4,000-seat house. That much is a certainty, as has been admitted by officials of the Midland Theatre Company, which is constructing the house, but final details have not been disposed of.

ONTARIO ASKS FREE SUNDAYS

The Sunday amusement question has been raised in the Province of Ontario officially through the action of Frank W. Wilson of Windsor, Ontario, member of the Ontario Legislature for Windsor, in announcing that he will introduce a bill at the next session of the Ontario Parliament to legalize Sunday pastimes and amusements. Mr. Wilson has written to the Ontario Attorney-General at Toronto asking that he have the proper law officers rule upon the point, claiming that the present Sunday observance in Ontario is carried out under an obsolete law.

Incidentally, in the Province of Quebec all forms of games and all picture theatres are operated on Sundays without hindrance and have been for many years. The adoption of the Wilson bill would lead to the opening of picture theatres in Ontario on Sundays, it is declared.

LOUISVILLE BUSINESS BETTER

Since the last case of infantile paralysis was disposed of in Louisville, Ky., and the theatres, schools, etc., re-opened, mild weather has resulted in excellent attendance at both the suburban and downtown theatres, the shopping season bringing a lot of people downtown. Late October and Early November business was dull, during the period when children were barred from all theatres and public amusements, but since that time business as a whole has been very fair.

Calls N. Y. Move One to "Bring About Real Exhibitor Organization"—Believes Hays Sincere, Sees Benefits

A. C. HYMAN, president and general manager of the Strand Theatre Corporation, operating the Strand and Cataract theatres at Niagara Falls, N. Y., and one of the leaders in the exhibitor organization of the state, in discussing the petition to the Hays organization said: "I am going to answer my political friends who object to an affiliation with the Hays organization by saying that the exhibitors of the Buffalo and Albany zones of New York State discontinued playing exhibitor politics five years ago in Washington, D.C., when they divorced themselves from the national body, (Do you remember the attempted crucifixion of Jimmie Walker?) because they wanted an exhibitors' organization and not to play politics to further the ends of a few men who wanted to play Moses.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners' State of New York, Buffalo and Albany Zones, have given more real service and protection to the theatre owners in their respective zones in the past two years than they ever got from any organization at any time.

"I was one of the members that voted in favor of the affiliation with the Hays' organization and Iobject to some of the statements made by men who do not want the truth and who have not the exhibitors' interests at heart.

"The majority of the exhibitors in the Buffalo and Albany zones are busy managing their own theatres and have no time for cheap politics.

"In affiliating with the Hays' organization we become an affiliating member. We retain our own identity as an exhibitor organization at all times.

"Our affiliation gives to each exhibitor the right to bring before Mr. Hays and his organization any grievance that they might have which is not in his film contract, and which can not be heard before the present Arbitration Boards, but which is vital to his theatre interests and his further business. He can sit at a table, state his complaint at a joint meeting of exhibitor members and members of the Hays' organization. In other words, we are bringing arbitration to the exhibitors beyond their present film contract. I think this affiliation is a step in the right direction; it will help to bring all interests to closer and more harmonious relationship. It is a move that will bring about a real exhibitor organization, which we have never had.

"I believe that Mr. Hays is sincere in his efforts to unify this industry and put it on a sound business basis, and I will continue to believe in Mr. Hays' sincerity until he shows by his actions otherwise.

"Now let my political friends start their favorite indoor sport, which is throwing bricks. If they throw enough, I will use them to build another theatre. That's that."

Following is Article 4, concerning affiliated organizations, under which the Northern New York exhibitors applied for membership in the Hays organization:

Section 1. Any Association, Board of Trade, Chamber of Commerce or other organization directly interested in any branch of the motion picture industry may, upon application and under conditions approved by the Board of Directors of this Association, obtain a "Certificate of Affiliation" with this Association but only upon the following conditions, namely:

(a) Upon agreeing to contribute annually to the funds of this Association a definite sum to be fixed by the Board of Directors of this Association; or
(b) Upon such other terms and conditions as the Board of Directors of this Association may determine.

SEE THEIR FIRST FILM

Mr. and Mrs. Miles Vernum, lifelong residents of Warrensburg, N. Y., a village a short distance from Albany, saw their first motion picture show last week. Mr. Vernum is 76 years of age and his wife is 66. They attended the benefit show given by the Warrensburg Fire Department, of which their son William is a member. The aged pair expressed themselves as much pleased.

Independents Re-Elect Chadwick

THE second annual meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America was held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on December 11, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, I. E. Chadwick, Chadwick Picture Corp.; first vice-president, Ben Amsterdam, Masterpiece Films, Philadelphia; second vice-president, M. H. Hoffman, Tiffany Productions; third vice-president, Abe Carlos, Carlos Productions; treasurer, W. Ray Johnston, Rayart Pictures, Inc.; recording secretary, Jack Bellman, Renown Exchange, N. Y.

The reports, presented by President I. E. Chadwick, General Manager Frederick H. Elliott and Treasurer Nathan Hirsh, indicated that the association has made substantial progress during its second year, with much promise for future development and accomplishment.

President Chadwick dwelt upon the necessity of renewed efforts towards stabilizing the Independent market, the advisability of forming a national association of Independent state-right exchanges, and urging upon the Independent exhibitors throughout this country, as well as abroad, to remain Independent. He pledged the utmost co-operation on behalf of the members of the association to this end, which position was unanimously sustained by the adoption of the accompanying resolutions.

General Manager Elliott reported a total membership of 95, including 22 producers and distributors and 73 exchanges, a substantial increase over the membership of a year ago. Mr. Elliott's report covered many subjects and included various recommendations, all of which were approved. He made the following reference to the Independent market situation:

"I can only state that I know now, as I knew two years ago, when I first proposed this organization, what the Independent producer and distributor are up against. Then you had unfair business methods as your chief trouble. Now you have an even worse enemy—death-dealing discrimination by a selfish monopoly which seeks to put you out of business by keeping your pictures out of all but a few obscure theatres.

"Unless you fight and fight hard, you face certain destruction at a not far distant date. The producers and distributors of Independent product afford the only protection the public has against a 'trustified' screen. If they are wiped out, the Paramounts, First Nationals, Metro-Goldwyns and a few fear-ridden companies which they graciously permit to live will start a raid on the public's pocketbook, via the box office, that will eventually kill the industry and turn thousands of theatres into gilded garages or cold storage plants.

"It is absolutely essential that the Independent theatre owners and the Independent picture purveyors stand united in this struggle, for the situation is just as vital and just as perilous for them as it is for you.

"A strong offence is the best defence. That should be the policy of your association. Every legitimate means should be employed to save yourselves and your theatre allies from the octopus which is ready for the big squeeze after years of painful pinching. Through proper co-ordinated activities you can blockade them and break the padlock they have snapped on theatres, but you also must lend your help by carrying your case to the greatest and most powerful of all courts—the public.

"The pictures of Independent producers are in many instances as good, if not better, than the trust factory-made product and their prices are better. The theatres, and, through them the public, are entitled to the benefit of these prices and to protection against black-jacking. Years ago when theatres paid equitable prices for programs and charged fair admissions nearly all made money. Now, with destructive rentals added to expensive music and specialties, hardly anybody makes money except the big fellows who use pictures merely as a foot-stool for vast real estate game, masked as an entertainment, which drives the trust forward on its destroying way. And it is up to you in alliance with the independent theatre owners to check it.

"This should not be a ping pong match but a fight against the world's champion of champions—big money. You are in much the same position as the mouse in the fable of the 'Lion and the Mouse,' but you will recall that the mouse won out because he had principle on his side. You may not have as much money as the trust, but you have on your side principle and justice, assets more powerful than money.

Consideration was given to the nationalizing of the independent and state-right exchanges into a compact organization, the president being empowered to appoint a committee of three producers and three exchangemen which is to draft a prospective plan to be presented at the next meeting.

The new executive committtee for 1926 appointed by President Chadwick, compris ing the following producers and distributors, held its first meeting on Saturday, December 12, at the association's headquarters, 1650 Broadway: W. E. Shallenberger, chairman, Arrow Pictures Corp.; President I. E. Chadwick, Chadwick Pictures Corp.; Joe Brandt, Columbia Pictures Corp.; Nathan Hirsh, Aywon Film Corp.; M. H. Hoffman, Tiffany Productions, Inc.; W. Ray Johnston, Rayart Picture Corp.; Sam Sax, Lumas Film Corp.; Wm. Steiner, Wm. Steiner Productions.

The executive committee is composed of sixteen members, eight producer-distributors and eight exchangemen. The latter will be appointed following the filing of their nominations by the exchange membership. The producer-distributor representation on the executive committee is the same, with the exception of Sam Sax of Gotham Productions who succeeds Oscar A. Price.

The executive committee voted unanimously to retain Frederick H. Elliott as general manager of the association, the committee having exercised an option in Mr. Elliott's contract whereby he will continue to have general direction of the organization's activities and management.

The advisability of arranging for more suitable headquarters was referred to a committee consisting of Sam Sax of Gotham and the general manager. It was voted to substantially increase the amount of dues paid by producer and distributor members, which was accompanied by an announcement that several independent companies desired affiliating with the association.

I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent Association of America, has named the committee of producers and exchangemen to draft plans for a national system of state-right exchanges, as follows: Samuel Zierler, Jack Cohn, Sam Sax, Henry Ginsberg and I. E. Chadwick, all of New York; Edward A. Golden of Boston and Oscar Neufeld of Philadelphia. This news was made public just before press time.

F. H. Elliot Attacks "Selfish Monopoly" Among Producers

Oklahoma Convention Offers Music People 5 Cents a Seat

THE Oklahoma Motion Picture Theatre Owners convened in annual session at the Elks' club, Oklahoma City, December 8-9, with about 100 members in attendance, together with the usual number of exchange representatives present.

All committees reported that the association was in good condition, both numerically and financially. Routine business was transacted and the following officers were elected for ensuing year:

Fred Pickrell, president, Ponca City, Okla.; Willis Spearman, vice-president, Edmond; John Brown, secretary, Tulsa; Robert D. Hutchinson, treasurer, Oklahoma City. Directors elected, including the officers, were Fred Jackson, Pawhuska; L. W. Brophy, Muskogee, and Forest McSwain, Ada.

Col. N. A. Cole, president and W. S. Waide, secretary of the Texas M. P. O. A. together with Sid Nowell, editor of the Motion Picture Journal of Texas, were distinguished guests and each made fine addresses appropriate to the occasion.

The music tax matter was taken up and the executive committee was authorized to conduct degotiations with power to act, upon advice and recommendation of a committee consisting of John Brown, Willis Spearman, Fred Pickrell, Mr. Wallum and Fred Jackson. The association made an tentative offer of 5 cents per seat for each theatre in Oklahoma using copyright music.

Present plans for financing the association in connection with the Alexander Film Company were continued.

An arrangement committee consisting of Fred Jackson, Wallace Walthall and Jim McKenney reported that a banquet and ball would conclude the business of the association, and both were given at the Elks' club with large attendance of members and visitors.

All of the theatres were open to the visitors with no admission charges, and Branch Manager R. E. Heffner gave a welcome party at 11:30 Tuesday evening at the Criterion Theatre to see "The Wanderer."

Europe Views Universal-Ufa Deal As Master Stroke by Carl Laemmle

Silent Drama

JOHN SCHWALM, who was elected to the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio at the Columbus convention recently and who operates the Rialto Theatre as well as the Jewel Photoplay Co., at Hamilton, Ohio, is authority for the statement that what seems to be, ain't.

A patron leaving the Rialto encountered Schwalm in the lobby and said: "This is a helluva silent drama. The guy back of me read all the sub-titles out loud, while the gink in front of me cracked peanuts all the time the picture was on. How do you get that way —silent drama?"

It took Schwalm quite some time to laugh this one off.

New Censor Board for New Brunswick, Canada

THE Province of New Brunswick in Canada has a brand new picture censor board and, incidentally, the board has been reduced from five to four members. The new appointments have met with general approval, not only among social workers but with the exchange men of St. John, N. B., and the exhibitors throughout the Province.

The chairman of the new board is Fred J. McInerney, a merchant of St. John, and the three other members are Mrs. John Carvell, a prominent woman worker; Miss Alice Fairweather, who has been identified with the picture business for a number of years, and Stephen Palmer, a lawyer, all of the City of St. John. There are thus two men and two women on the New Brunswick Board.

Miss Fairweather was with the St. John Standard for some five years, being in charge of the moving picture department. Recently she was with Art Films, Ltd., a local firm making industrial and other short subjects locally.

ENFORCING FIRE LAWS

Fire Commissioner Joseph F. Connery has advised more than 300 Chicago theatre managers that they will have to obey the letter of the law relating to the places of amusements. According to the newspapers the fire office sent notices to the theatre owners on November 24 that the ordinance would be enforced to the letter and the violators would be prosecuted. The most flagrant violation, the fire office claimed, was the use of theatre lobbies for waiting rooms and the use of decorative drapes of combustible material. The fire officials are making another inspection to check up on the various theatres and the theatre owners have appointed a committee to seek an amendment to the exisiting fire ordinances.

Continental Daily and Trade Press Unite in Calling It "Epochal"—Reciprocity Chorus at Last Stilled

By W. Stephen Bush

Rome, Italy, Dec. 1.

NO event in the history of the European film world has created the sensation caused by the announcement that Carl Laemmle had acquired control of the foremost and most successful film producing company of Europe, known as the UFA. Not only the trade press in every country but the daily press everywhere is devoting an extraordinary amount of publicity to the event, which is unanimously described as "epochal." Not all the comments are agreed on the effects the event will have on the further development of the UFA and on the manufacture of films in Europe generally, but there is a most perfect accord among all the film men, editors included, as to the vision and spirit of enterprise shown by the head of the Universal. For a moment all the frantic chorus in the trade press about reciprocity has been stilled. It is realized that the movement of Carl Laemmle was not only tactics but strategy of the highest order. The thorny question of a community of interests between the motion picture producers of Europe and America seems to have been solved by a stroke of genius.

The foothold thus gained in Europe by the Universal marks a great historic moment. Indeed, the step taken by Mr. Laemmle is of such far reaching importance that all its full consequences cannot be appraised at this early date. The "new alliance," as it is officially called, may be but the first bridgehead in a sweeping plan of occupation which will sensationally justify the right of Mr. Laemmle to call his great corporation the Universal.

The masterly maneuver came as a complete surprise. The details of the plan, marvelous in their effectiveness, were worked out quietly. When official announcement of the fact was made, the world could do nothing but wonder at the perfection of the plan in every particular. Tact, diplomacy, a genius-like grasp of international possibilities in the field of films, the choosing of the right psychological moment, a thorough knowledge of the practical and financial side—all these things showed forth the master mind in business. The spirit of constructiveness which has always marked the career of Laemmle since the earliest days of the industry has now celebrated its greatest triumph.

Author Hardly Mentioned

In the statement given out the author of the historic plan is scarcely mentioned. If one did not know the negotiations which have preceded the consummation of the "alliance," Mr. Laemmle might not be suspected of any decisive share in the proceedings. With the generosity of a man who is used to victories and whose enviable standing in the industry is solidly assured, he is content to step into the background. Nevertheless the language of the agreement is unmistakable as is the trace of the master mind.

The announcement briefly reviews the career of the UFA up to date and calls attention to the fact that the last fiscal year (closing May 31, 1925) showed a clear profit of the business to the extent of over $3,000,000 marks (about $750,000.) It is proposed to distribute a dividend of 6 per cent. at the next general meeting of the stockholders, to be held December 30 of the current year. After this statement, which is quite elaborate and only summarized here, the announcement goes on to speak of the importance of foreign markets for all European producers and emphasizes the exceptional value of the American market.

UFA'S Statement

The announcement continues literally as follows: "The desire of the UFA to find a proper outlet for its production in the United States has resulted in a co-operative agreement with an American firm of the first class—the Universal Pictures Corporation of New York. Such an agreement will, it is expected favorably influence the position of the UFA in the markets of Europe. In connection with this agreement a loan of 15,000,000 marks (somewhat less than $4,000,000) to draw interest at 8¾ per cent. has been decided upon. This will enable the UFA to consolidate its financial position."

When the announcement was made at the offices of the German Bank in Berlin, Erich Pommer, head of the UFA, commented briefly on the facts of the alliance between Universal and UFA, which he characterized as the culmination of the UFA's consistent attitude toward the American market. He was followed by Mr. Schach, the general representative of Mr. Laemmle, who declared that Mr. Laemmle throughout the negotiations had placed the highest value on the advice of Mr. Pommer. Mr. Laemmle, he added, did not wish to dominate the future of the UFA. No changes in the management or directorate of the UFA are contemplated.

Stanley Company Extension Ratified by Stockholders

THE stockholders of the Stanley Company of America unanimously ratified the entire financial plan suggested to them, at a meeting on December 16. This involves recapitalization to provide for the future growth of the concern and a stock allotment to reimburse the treasury for expenditures connected with the purchase of properties in Washington, D. C., and Wilmington, Del.

The plan approved was that suggested in a letter to stockholders from Jules E. Mastbaum, which follows:

"In the opinion of your directors, the present capitalization of your company is inadequate to provide for its probable growth during the next few years.

"A notice is enclosed herewith of a Stanley Company of America to approve special meeting of the stockholders of a change in the capital structure from the authorized capital of 100,000 shares, Class A, and 50,000 shares, Class B, to 1,000,000 shares of no par value.

"If this change is approved by the stockholders the holders of Class A or Class B stock will receive two shares of the new stock for each share now held.

"In order to reimburse the treasury for expenditures in connection with the acquisition of the Crandall interests in Washington, acquisition in Wilmington and for other capital items, your directors have authorized a stock allotment, subject to the approval by the stockholders of the change in capital structure at the said special meeting, of one new share at $48 per share for each share of Class A or Class B stock now outstanding.

"Your directors have also declared, subject to the approval of the change in the capital structure at the special meeting of the stockholders, a stock dividend of 10 per cent., payable in new stock, to stockholders of record January 11, 1926.

"As a result of these various steps, the holder of ten shares of Class A or Class B stock exchanges his stock for twenty new shares. He may purchase ten additional new shares for $480; and he will receive a stock dividend of 10 per cent., on the stock exchanged for old shares and on the stock purchased through his allotment. If he does not exercise his right to purchase the new stock, he will hold January 11, 1926, twenty-two shares. If he exercises the purchase privilege his holdings would then be thirty-three shares.

"The new shares outstanding upon the completion of the plan, as proposed, will total 33,306½. It is believed by your directors that the new shares should pay an annual dividend of $3 per share, and also from time to time extra dividends may be declared, either in cash or in stock, as the condition of the company in their opinion may warrant."

Upon completion of the above program there will be outstanding 334,306½ shares, with a book value, after giving effect to the present financing, of approximately $32 per share, the Stanley Company states.

"The market value of the company's interests and properties, owned directly or controlled through stock ownership, according to independent appraisal, exceeds the book value by more than $6,500,000 and leaseholds are conservatively appraised at $1,500,000 in excess of the normal value that was carried on the books," the Mastbaum statement continues. Another important announcement is expected soon.

Picture Theatre Invades Milwaukee "Gold Coast"

Milwaukee's "Gold Coast," which for several years has looked with scorn upon the possible invasion of their territory by a movie house, finally has consented to the erecting of one of the most modern type. The village board has set about to change the zoning law to allow the building to be erected. A $250,000 theatre and store building will be erected.

While the owners of the building have not been known, it has been revealed that the building permit was asked by representatives operating the Hollywood Theatre in Milwaukee. The building will be two stories high, one end being occupied by the theatre and the other by a store. The theatre will seat 1,400. The new theatre will be named the Shorewood.

JOIN PRO-DIS-CO.

Two important additions to the executive field force of Producers Distributing Corporation are announced by Sales Manager W. J. Morgan in the appointments of Harry I. Goldman as manager of the New Haven branch and Jacob B. Cohen as manager of the Pittsburgh branch.

Both Goldman and Cohen are well known in exhibiting circles as hustling "square shooters" and their affiliation with the Pro-Dis-Co organization warrants the exchange of mutual congratulations.

Universal Making 25 Theatre Deals; Fair General Manager of New Chain

Many Coast Deals

CALIFORNIA picture houses are going over to the circuits so fast these days that little attention is paid in amusement circles to the transfer of one or two houses. It is only when one of the smaller circuits is absorbed by a larger one that a ripple is raised and this quickly subsides.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., recently acquired the Cline and G. & S. theatres at Santa Rosa, Cal., and now comes the news that it has secured a controlling interest in the Ellis Arkush chain of theatres on the San Francisco peninsula. The latter deal involves six theatres, two at San Jose, two at Burlingame, one at Redwood City and one at San Mateo. All are modern houses and in suburbs of the Greater San Francisco which are growing by leaps and bounds. A working agreement is understood to have been reached with the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, to become effective the first of the year.

And West Coast Theatres, Inc., is not the only circuit in this field that is acquiring houses at a rapid rate. There is the Golden State Theatre and Realty Corporation, the National Theatres Syndicate and others.

Texas Concentrating On Legislative Problems

THE Texas M. P. T. O. A. has named thirty-one chairmen to superintend state legislative matters. This number coincides with the number of senatorial districts. Stuckert of Brenham and Sebe Goodlet of Georgetown.

The thirty-one district chairmen follow:

Mrs. J. E. Martin, Mt. Pleasant; Tracy Flannagan, Longview; Non Binion, Lufkin; Joe Clemmons, Beaumont; E. J. Callahan, Crockett; John Stewart, Kaufman; Ross Dorbandt, Jackville; Henry Sparks, Cooper; H. S. Cole, Bonham; Jack Lilly, Greenville; S. G. Howell, Dallas; P. Q. Marcus Loew to Build Second in Pittsburgh—Publix Buys 19 Theatres in Texas—Fox Active in St. Louis

TWO announcements bearing on the plans of the new Universal Chain Theartes Corporation for acquiring picture theatres and interest therein in the United States, Canada and abroad were made yesterday from the offices of the corporation at 730 Fifth avenue, New York.

The corporation, of which Carl Laemmle is president, announced the appointment of A. E. Fair, one of the best known motion picture theatrical managers in the industry in this country, who has the reputation of having been one of the first to prove the value of operating chain theatres in the South, to be general manager of Universal Chain Theatres Corporation, the vehicle for acquiring and operating a chain of 1,000 cinema houses. Mr. Fair for a long time was identified with the building up and operation of the Lynch Theatrical Enterprises, which proved the profitableness of conducting a motion picture business on a scale similar to that of the leading chain store organizations.

Mr. Fair went from the Lynch Theatrical Enterprises to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as assistant to the theatre manger, Harold B. Franklyn, of the latter organization. Subsequently, Mr. Fair investigated practically every big theatre deal that Universal Pictures Corporation has consummated, and which Universal now is turning over to the Universal Chain Theatres Corporation. The selection of Mr. Fair is asserted to be in line with the recent announcement by Mr. Laemmle that "the best brains and abilities in the amusement business" would be obtained to conduct the big chain of theatres to be consolidated under the name Universal.

It also was stated that since the sale of $4,000,000 Universal Chain Theatres Corporation 8 per cent. preferred stock a week ago, nearly 300 theatres in various parts of the country have offered to sell out to the Universal corporation. It was pointed out, however, that in each case of this kind a careful investigation is being made to ascertain both the earning power and future prospects of the individual theatre, with a view to acquiring only those which will constitute strong links in the chain system planned. It was announced that twenty-five deals for theatres are now in active negotiation. They are being investigated by John Hostettler and James C. Hostettler.

Meyer Schine, president and general manager of the Schine Amusement Company, of Northern New York State, is co-operating with Carl Laemmle in the theatre extension work.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Universal is reported to have closed for a site for a new theatre in Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. This company now is associated with Schine in the operation of the Olympic on Lafayette Square.

Indiana

It is reported from Evansville, Ind., below Louisville on the Ohio River, that a deal is pending there whereby Universal may take over the Victory Theatre Building at a consideration said to be around $1,000,000. Julius Singer, personal representative of Carl Laemmle, was reported recently in the city, where he confered with officers of the Standard Evansville Realty Company, owners of the theatre building, which also houses the Sonnitag Hotel. It is understood that a short option was granted.

Texas

The Palace and Melba Theatres, two of Dallas' largest picture houses, the Crystal, a second-run house, and sixteen other theatres in Texas, formerly operated by Southern Enterprises, Inc., have been purchased by the Public Theatres, Inc., a new organization recently created by the merger of the theatrical property of Famous Players-Lasky and Balaban & Katz.

St. Louis

St. Louis is very much interested in the plans of William Fox who, it is reported in inner circles, has decided to build a $5,000,000 picture palace in that city. To date Mr. Fox has declined to issue statement.

Fuel to the fire of speculation was added the latter part of the week when it became known that A. M. Frumberg, a prominent local attorney, had closed negotiations for the purchase of the buildings and leaseholds on the southwest corner of Grand and Washington boulevards for a reported consideration of $1,000,000. Included in the purchase was the Midway Theatre, the Applied Arts and Humboldt Building.

Frumberg has declined to reveal the identity of the parties he represents. In some quarters Fox is mentioned.

Pittsburgh

Marcus Loew is to build a modern picture palace in Pittsburgh. This will be the second Loew house there, the present one, now known as Loew's, formerly being the Aldine.

The Loew interests have purchased the Anderson Hotel property (at Sixth and Penn avenues) and adjacent properties, with the intention of building on the site during the coming year his newest theatre.

The hotel fronts 112 feet in Sixth street and 140 feet in Penn avenue, and the additional properties purchased in Penn avenue will give a frontage of 240 feet on that thoroughfare. The price paid for the hotel was $1,600,000. Possession will be given May 1, employes having been given notice that after that date their services will not be needed. Work will then be started at once on the razing of the present building to clear the site for the new theatre building.

The building to be erected will not be a skyscraper but it will be a building worthy of one of the finest theatres in the country, which it is to house. The theatre will be in the rear, stores to occupy the front parts of the building in Sixth street and Penn avenue.

There will be a new $1,500,000 picture theatre erected in Syracuse, N. Y., by the Mark Strand Corporation, according to an announcement last week by Walter Hays of Buffalo, vice-president of the company. The house will seat 4,000. The company recently took over the Robbins chain of theatres in Syracuse, Watertown and Utica and plans a further expansion.

The Rowland and Clark Theatres of Pittsburgh will commence the erection of their new 5,000-seat theatre in this city on May 1, the new house to be erected through the entire block of Seventh avenue, bounded by Liberty and Penn avenues, the site of which was acquired at a cost of $3,000,000.

The foyer to this theatre, located at the intersection of Liberty and Seventh, will be finished in genuine Italian marble with mural paintings interpaneled, all of which will be indirectly lighted with twenty different colors of lights. The auditorium itself, designed by Victor A. Rigaumont, local architect, will be the last word in theatre design. The grand stairway and the proscenium arch will eclipse anything in America. A large stage will be constructed. The orchestra pit will accommodate sixty musicians. The organ is to cost $100,000.

Ohio

The partly finished Hippodrome Arcade Building, located on South Main street, Akron, Ohio, has been leased by the Loew Theatre Company, of Cleveland, and is to be the site of a $1,500,000 theatre to be built next year, according to an announcement recently made public. Plans for the new structure are being developed and bids will be called for soon. In addition to various stores, the Loew Theatre wil lbe located in the building and will seat 2,200.

Hartford, Conn.

The second largest picture theatre in the United States, costing $1,500,000, will be erected in Hartford, Conn., by Theodore, Martin D., and Samuel E. Harris of Paterson and Passaic, N. J., according to announcement made by them last week. The theatre will occupy an entire acre of ground near Main and Morgan streets and will seat 5,500 people, 4,500 chairs being placed in the orchestra and 1,000 in the balcony.

Construction will start as soon as nine buildings occupying the site are demolished and the theatre wil be formerly opened on Labor Day, 1926. For six months, the Harris brothers have been looking for a Hartford site.

The stage will be one of the largest anywhere, measuring sixty-five feet across the footlights, thirty-two feet in depth and seventy-five feet in height. The orchestra will consist of fifty accomplished musicians.

Fireproof construction and the finest ventilating and cooling apparatus available will be installed. Plans for the building are being drawn by C. A. Sandblom, New York architect, formerly associated with Thomas W. Lamb, designer of the Capitol Theatre Building in New York. The Hartford showhouse will be called the State Theatre.

Minnesota

Finkelstein & Ruben have taken over the Lyceum Theatre at Brainard and the Lyceum and Rex Theatres at Virginia, Minn. These houses were formerly operated by Clinton & Meyers of Duluth.

Omaha

A new $35,000 theatre is planned for Omaha, in addition to the numerous big ones recently announced. This new one will be located on Thirty-third street between California and Cass streets. The proprietors will be Peter Bribilis, and Henry E. Hower. Mr. Hower recently disposed of the Victoria Theatre. The lot is 60 by 132 feet. The plans call for stores on either side of the building.

Chicago

By the end of the year there will have been more than twenty new theatres opened in the Chicago territory and there are more to come early in 1926. The houses which generally lose business first when the big new theatres are opened are the small neighborhood theatres in the vicinity of the new theatre. Hardly a week has passed this year when a new theatre project has not been announced, and the outlook for the balance of the year is that more houses are coming.

Only two new theatres were reported for the Chicago territory last week, the largest being the 3,500-seat house at Roosevelt Road and Komensky avenue, one block west of Crawford avenue, from plans by E. P. Rupert and Samuel Klein. The owner of the new project is the Lawndals Theatre Corporation, organized last week with Rupert Levine as president and E. E. Gehring, B. K. Smith and Isidor Fox as the other principals in the venture. The new company has a capital of $125,000 and construction is expected to start in abolut six weeks. The opening date has been set for September, 1926.

E. V. RICHARDS, vice-president and general manager of Saenger Theatres, Inc., New Orleans. This is how he looks after years of big-league activity in the picture business. Merry Christmas, Mr. Richards, and the top of the New Year to you.

The other project was the incorporation of the North Shore Amusement Company at Waukegan by Herbert H. Ellern, Charles H. Stake and William Pearce, to build and operate theatres along the North Shore. This new company has a capital of 500 shares of no par value, according to the announcement.

Another project of the past week was the purchase of a two story building at Kinzie and Ashland street by Herbert L. Stern, president of Balaban & Katz, for a storage and scenery warehouse for the big circuit.

Verne Langdon, well known Chicago exhibitor, has bought the Oakley Theatre at 2320 West Chicago avenue from Sale Auerbach, owner of several theatres, for a reported $60,000. The house seats 1,000 and has been operated under the Auerbach management for four years. Verne Langdon will give the house his personal attention and several improvements are expected to be made in the near future.

The Boulevard Amusement Company, which the Schoenstadt brothers control, has changed the name of the company to the H. Schoenstadt & Sons, Inc., and increased the capital stock from $15,000 to $750,000. The Schoenstadt circuit is building the new Piccadilly Theatre in the Hyde Park district and have plans for other houses to be added to their circuit.

The Kidland Amusement Company have acquired the Olympia Theatre at 4619 South Ashland avenue, Chicago, for a reported $75,000 and will improve the property.

The Frescina circuit will open the new Capital Theatre at Taylorville, Ill., next month. The house and equipment will cost about $125,000 when ready for opening.

Gray and Contrakan will open the new Pantheon at Springfield, Ill., next month. The house will show de luxe picture programs.

The Center Theatre has been opened at Bensenville, Ill., by the Center Theatre Company.

Claud Saunders Resigns as Famous Exploitation Head

To accept a position with a nationally-known merchandising organization, Claud Saunders, for seven years exploitation manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has tendered his resignation, to become effective in the near future.

Mr. Saunders, one of the best known publicity and exploitation men in the film business, organized the first nation-wide exploitation department in the picture industry when he joined Paramount seven years ago. The idea of having an expert exploitation man in each exchange for the assistance of exhibitors in putting over the pictures they had booked was first put into effect by Mr. Saunders, whose staff of thirty exploitation men have been responsible for some of the industry's outstanding campaigns in the last few years.

Filmdom Pays Tribute to Lasky

12th Anniversary of Founding of Studio Is Celebrated

HUMBLE workers who put their shoulders to the wheel of the infant company in an old barn in Hollywood 12 years ago, the most brilliant galaxy of stars ever assembled in a motion picture theatre, and prominent executives all gathered at the Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, to pay tribute to Jesse L. Lasky, commemorating the twelfth anniversary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

It was "Jesse L. Lasky Night" at the Metropolitan and the public jammed the theatre, adding the final touch of appreciation of the man who has done so much to make the art of the screen available to the masses throughout the world.

The occasion was one of sentiment and reverence, as well as brilliance, the emotion of the spectators coming to a climax when the orchestra struck up "Memories" and the curtains parted revealing Theodore Roberts, grand old man of pictures and one of the earliest Lasky stars, seated on the stage smoking his familiar cigar. It was Roberts, who, his voice filled with emotion at the applause greeting his first public appearance since he was brought close to death's door by illness, paid the tribute of the evening to Mr. Lasky and presented to him on behalf of the employees of the Lasky studio, a bronze tablet, to be erected at the corner of the old barn which still stands on the site of the immense Lasky studio in Hollywood.

Mr. Lasky, in responding to the introduction, was moved with deep emotion. After recounting a few of the early difficulties, he extended his thanks to the loyal members of the studio organization.

"I can only say that I can pledge you, not on behalf of Paramount alone, but on behalf of the motion picture industry—this great new art which is bringing happiness and entertainment to millions of people throughout the world every day—that I will bend every effort to develop and better this art, to aid in every way the making of finer and greater achievements on the screen," Mr. Lasky said.

One of the great tributes of the evening was from Sid Grauman, wonder showman, who wired: "Have been trying to figure out how you could have achieved greater things in moving picture industry. I do not believe any greater things could have been possible. Every exhibitor in America and Europe owes you debt of gratitude. We have you to thank for the advancement of pictures and picture theatres."

The list of stars, directors and executives present, numbering about 200, read like the Blue Book of the Films. Among them were Pola Negri, Betty Bronson, Ernest Torrence, Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton, Esther Ralston, Neil Hamilton, Mary Brian, Noah Beery, Joseph Striker, Charlot Bird, George Bancroft, George Rigas, William Powell, Alyce Mills, Allan Dwan, Victor Fleming, Eric Von Stroheim, Edward Sutherland, Clarence Badger, Raoul Walsh, Dimitri Buchowetzki, George B. Seitz, William Wellman, B. P. Schulberg, Hector Turnbull, Charles Eyton, and Fred Beetson, assistant to Will H. Hays.

Poli May Retire

IT IS reported that Sylvester Z. Poli will retire from active management of the Poli Theatrical Enterprises on the first of the year and that he will be succeeded by Louis M. Sagal, general manager. No official statement has yet been issued. The retirement of Mr. Poli will not occasion much surprise, as it has been understood that he has been arranging his affairs toward that purpose since the death of Edward, his son, in 1919. The Poli holdings were recently incorporated and the stock was divided among the members of his family. Mr. Sagal is understood to be a substantial stockholder in the corporation. He will be succeeded, if the reported changes are put through, by O. O. Edwards, manager of the Palace Theatre in New Haven.

F. B. O. Moves Home Office to To the New Embassy Building

THE growth and expansion of Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., in the past year has necessitated larger quarters to accommodate the increased personnel and business of the company, and as a consequence the entire home office of F. B. O., R-C Pictures Corporation and subsidiary companies will remove from their present quarters, 723 Seventh avenue, which they have occupied for four years, to the new Embassy Building at 1560 Broadway, in the heart of the film and theatrical district. They will occupy the entire sixteenth floor of this modern and commodious building.

The offices will move this week-end and will take up work on Monday morning, December 21, in their new home.

Instead of housing the departments on various floors as has been done in their present quarters, necessitating delays and time lost moving from one floor to another, the entire personnel will, in the new home, be housed on one floor, an area which approximates 20,000 square feet. The brilliant light on three sides of the building gives each department sufficient illumination so that all departments will be able to work by natural light.

The Embassy Building at 1560 Broadway, constructed by the Bethlehem Construction Company, is one of the newest and most palatial of the office buildings in New York and unusually well suited to the conduct of an organization like F. B. O.

The plans for laying out the offices were perfected by John T. Briggs, of Freehof and Briggs, 135 East 43rd street, architects. The work of recreating the suites of offices for executives and employes, installation of partitions, wiring, fixtures, installation of switchboard, etc., was accomplished in ten days.

The lighting, ventilation, fixtures and general arrangements are the last word in architectural effects and were designed for the efficiency of operation and functioning of the various departments.

All executive offices will be tastefully furnished and illuminated. A beautifully appointed waiting room for visitors has been furnished with antique pieces and rugs. The projection room, seating forty persons, will be perfectly ventilated due to the installation of special force draughts which will change the air currents constantly.

The highly efficient dictaphone system of internal private telephones has been installed to facilitate speed in conveying inter-office information. A battery of eight express elevators will serve all offices from the tenth floor up.

The executives and sales division will occupy the Broadway side of the building. The advertising and art departments will occupy the north side of the building, which will give artists a battery of north window lights. A rest and recreation room has been provided.

Already a number of prominent theatrical and motion picture concerns have taken space in the new building, among them the Pantages Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., and the Stanley Company of America. F. B. O. will retain shipping space at 723 Seventh avenue and its New York exchange will remain at that address.

CENSORS TALK APPROPRIATION

George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, and Arthur Levy, secretary, were at the State Capitol in Albany last week appearing before the Budget Committee and going over the requested appropriation for next year. Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert, the third member of the commission, is recovering from an operation. Even though it is generally expected that the commission will be wiped out of existence under the new reorganization program, the commission is nevertheless obliged to file its statement of financial requirements from July 1 on. There is talk that the reorganization program will not become effective until January, 1927, in which case the commission might manage to hang on to that date.

A NEW, NOISY ARRIVAL

A new addition to the affiliations of Producers Distributing Corporation was announced this week in the arrival of a crown prince at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Beahan, head of the eastern story department of P. D. C. Mama Beahan is justly proud of her first born and Papa Beahan declares that, by the amount of noise which Beahan, Jr., is already capable of making, a potentially great press agent has come into our midst.

Preferred to Continue Under Bachmann

Promises Delivery of 13 Remaining Pictures

UNINTERRUPTED delivery of the remaining thirteen pictures on the Preferred schedule will be made by J. G. Bachmann, who will carry on production and distribution of the same type material which he was influential in supplying to the Independent market during his four years' partnership with B. P. Schulberg.

This means that Mr. Bachmann will contine as an independent producer, devoting his attention now, as in the past, to releasing productions based on well known stories and stage plays, made by directors of established repute and invested with casts of popular players.

Acting for Mr. Bachmann in charge of production will be Harry O. Hoyt, former First National director, who made "The Lost World." Mr. Hoyt's headquarters will be in Hollywood, where the pictures will be made. He will leave for the West Coast in a few days to sign contracts with several directors and scenarists of high standing who will begin preliminary work on the first group at once.

All of the stories formerly held by B. P. Schulberg Productions have been acquired by Mr. Bachmann. The first of his new schedule will be a screen version of Wallace Irwin's best selling novel, "Lew Tyler's Wives," that appeared serially in Pictorial Review and later won popularity in book form.

"Lew Tyler's Wives" will be ready for release the early part of March. The rest of the program will follow at regular intervals.

Early on the schedule will be an elaborate production of Bronson Howard's world renown play of Civil War days, "Shenandoah." Mr. Bachmann denied the report that this valuable property had been purchased by Warner Brothers. "Shenandoah" will be one of the high spots on his own forthcoming program.

J. G. BACHMANN

Including among the remaining stories are:

"Horses and Women"—adapted from the Saturday Evening Post serial, "The Autobiography of a Racehorse," by L. B. Yates.

"Dancing Days"—a novel from a never stay-home family, by J. J. Bell.

"The Aristocrat"—from the Hearst Magazine story, by Larry Evans.

"The Romance of a Million Dollars"—a melodramatic novel, by Elizabeth Dejeans.

"Shameful Behavior"—a story of the younger generation, by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes.

"His New York Wife"—an original screen story, by John Goodrich.

"The Worst Woman"—by Larry Evans.

"Studies in Wives"—a novel by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes that has reached high sales in England.

"Eden's Fruit"—John Goodrich's drama of a 1925 Adam and Eve.

"Exclusive Rights"—a story written directly for the screen, by Evelyn Campbell.

Mr. Bachmann's decision to remain with the Independent market will afford it in a continuation of the source of supply from which it has drawn such box-office attractions as "The Plastic Age," "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," "Capital Punishment," "The Virginian" and "Rich Men's Wives."

Naked Truth Dinner Feb. 6; Nat Rothstein the Announcer

WHAT promises to be without question of a doubt the biggest and finest Naked Truth Dinner ever staged is the coming A. M. P. A. annual affair tentatively set for February. The board of the A. M. P. A., Glendon Allvine, Walter Eberhart, Charles Einfeld, Tom Wiley, Bill Yearsley, Nat Rothstein, King Fisher and other members of the A. M. P. A., met at the home of Mr. Allvine on December 5 to discuss tentative plans. The enthusiasm evinced at this meeting points to a tremendous affair this coming February.

It will be known as an "Eye and Hoof" party, and if but half of the suggestions are whipped into shape it promises a rare treat for the industry this time. One of the many ideas brought forth was that of 100 tables and 100 stars and plans are now being formulated to have present at the dinner every motion picture star in New York at the time, and to bring from Hollywood by special train if necessary a galaxy of stars such as have never been assembled under one roof before.

Nat Rothstein was chosen as the official announcer for the evening. Two of the most famous jazz orchestras in America will be engaged to play, so that dance music will be constant and continuous throughout the entire evening.

Although it is nearly two months before the event takes place, the A. M. P. A. has already received more than 100 requests for reservations, with cash accompanying these requests in exactly fifty-four cases, an indicator of the wide popularity of the A. M. P. A. Naked Truth Dinners and particularly this coming party.

Even before the committee met and before the boys of the A. M. P. A. began to think of the dinner, more than a hundred people have been thinking about it and have attempted to reserve tables for themselves and guests. What brought genuine enthusiasm from the members of the A. M. P. A. was the suggestion of "no speeches." The time taken up with useless, unnecessary, irrelevant speeches will be used this year for dancing and high-powered entertainment.

It was also unanimously decided that this year all reservations will be filled precisely in the order they are received and in no other way. Plans for the affair are being developed and will be enlarged upon in the next two meetings of the A. M. P. A.

Robert Lieber Is Back After 3 Months In Europe

ROBERT LIEBER, president of First National Pictures, Inc., returned from abroad this week after approximately three months spent on the Continent and in England. Mr. Lieber was met at quarantine by a party of First National executives, including Richard A. Rowland, general manager, with whom Mr. Lieber spent the first weeks of his stay in Europe; Sam Spring, secretary-treasurer; A. H. Blank of Omaha, Earl Hudson, Ray and Al Rockett and a number of others.

When Mr. Lieber arrived at 383 Madison avenue he was accorded a reception in his office, decorated with flowers, a gift of the employes at the home office. Mr. Lieber said that his health had improved greatly during his stay abroad and that he is now ready to resume his full duties as president of First National and chief executive of the Circle Theatre of Indianapolis.

"Although I went abroad primarily to rest, I had an opportunity to observe picture conditions in Germany, France, Italy, England and a few of the less important European countries. Everywhere I went I found an increasing demand for the product of American studios. It seemed to me that the favorable attitude toward the better class of American pictures has spread considerably since my last visit to Europe. On all sides there appears to be a disposition to settle any trade differences that may exist and to get down to a sound basis of business dealing which will be mutually profitable."

Mr. Lieber said that during the next few weeks he expects to devote his chief energies to putting over First National Month throughout the country.

REMODELING THE ELBY

The old Elby Theatre Building, at New Albany, Ind., is being remodeled, and will be re-opened as a picture theatre, operating as the Indiana Theatre, new electrical equipment, redecorating, etc., having been underway for some time.

Beautiful $2,000,000 Fabian Theatre Opens in Paterson, N. J.

By C. S. Sewell

AS the keystone of the arch of motion pictures theatres which he has erected in Northern New Jersey, Jacob Fabian before an audience of invited guests and motion picture stars, on the evening of Monday, December 14, opened another theatre, the Fabian, in Paterson. Fittingly, this house bears its owner's name, for not only does it by far eclipse the other beautiful houses in this chain comprising about twenty in all including the stately new Mosque Theatre in Newark, but it takes its place among the most magnificent temples of the mation pcture to be found anywhere.

Thirteen years ago Jacob Fabian demonstarted he was a man of vision by building the Regent Theatre in the same city, one of the first large houses built exclusively for the presentation of motion pictures. Now, in giving to a city of the size of Paterson a house of the size and grandeur of the Fabian he again demonstrates his faith not only in his home city but in the future of the screen.

The Fabian is absolutely the last word in modern motion picture construction. Everything imaginable contributing to the presentation of the picture, the establishment of luxurious atmosphere and the comfort and convenience of the patrons will be found there. A roomy lobby opens into an unusually spacious foyer and there is a magnificently appointed mezzanine lounge back of and under the loges and balcony. Big roomy, soft-cushioned chairs of an improved type insure comfort, while aisle lights and in fact every thing in the way of accessories that the modern theatre engineer can suggest for the convenience and pleasure of patrons has been incorporated in the Fabian.

Situated just off of Paterson's main thoroughfare, this house represents an outlay of $2,000,000 and seats 3,600. There is an orchestra of thirty pieces and one of the largest organs in the United States, equipped with four manuals. The program includes in addition to the pictures, musical selections and presentations of the highest class. From no standpoint need the Fabian fear comparison.

The opening was made the occasion for laudatory remarks from the mayor, the president of the chamber of commerce, a representative of the press and other prominent personages in Paterson, and they were entirely justified in this instance, for the Fabian is not only a credit to the city and one of its show places but a monument to its builder and owner, Jacob Fabian.

New Arbitration Puzzle Faces Kansas-Missouri Exhibitors

A PUZZLE which rivals any of the cross-word species confronts the directors of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri. What they would like to know is this: Is an exhibitor justified in sitting on the Joint Board of Arbitration to hear cases of exhibitors who are not members of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri? A meeting of the directors in Kansas City this month promises probable alterations in the routine of the joint board's working.

The present trend of sentiment points to the fact that cases heard by the board may be divided into two dockets, with the exhibitor members refusing to sit in on the docket of non-members, leaving the fate of the theatre owner entirely up to the exchanges.

"I hardly think such a move could be called drastic," said C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri. "An exhibitor's time is worth money, the same as any business man. Whenever the name of an exhibitor, whose name has not previously come before the board, appears on the docket, we immediately send him a letter. If he is a non-member of our association we inform him that if he desires this body to take an active part in his controversy it will first be necessary for him to obtain a membership. If he declines we worry no further about additional letters. If he happens to be a member we request full details concerning his case and render him a real service in representing him.

"Too many exhibitors today are under the impression that organization is all right 'socially' but of little benefit in actual business. Well, here's the opinion many prominent theatre owners who are members have adopted: Non-members frequently are 'good fellows' and all right in their way, but they are no good to the organization as a business asset and we have no time to waste on them. It seems to me there is 'business' enough in that viewpoint. It is no secret that the present sentiment is to throw off the dead weight from our shoulders and let the non-members fight their own battles."

F. B. O. Executives Plot New Campaign in Chicago

A meeting of the F. B. O. executives and division managers was held last week at the Congress Hotel in Chicago, at which general production plans and production plans for F. B. O.'s 1926-27 program were laid out and the spring sales campaign discussed.

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president in charge of production; Colvin W. Brown, vice-president in charge of distribution; Lee Marcus, sales manager; Cleve Adams, Chicago division manager; M. J. Weisfeldt, division manager, Minneaoplis; C. E. Penrod, division manager, Indianapolis, and J. J. Sampson, branch manager at Chicago, attended the meeting.

At its conclusion Vice-President Schnitzer left for a four to five-month trip to the West Coast studios of the company where, with B. P. Fineman, production manager, he will start lining up the new program immediately.

SAPERSTEIN SUIT UNSETTLED

The jury could not agree in a court action tried last week in Troy, N. Y., with Louis Saperstein appearing as the plaintiff against the Majestic Amusement Company. Mr. Saperstein has sued to recover $40 a week salary over a period of eleven weeks, and also 10 per cent. of the profits of the Rose Theatre for that period. The defendant claimed that there had been no contract, but that an agreement between the two parties had been violated by Mr. Saperstein through absenting himself from the theatre for a period of two or three weeks, when, it is said, he was in New York City.

MILWAUKEE SUNDAY AGITATION

"Moving Picture Sunday" is being attacked in a report made to the Milwaukee Presbytery by a committee of three appointed to investigate Sabbath observances. This report discourages the thought of a "Moving Picture Sunday" and urges church attendance. It has been placed in printed form and is being circulated throughout the Milwaukee Presbytery, which includes thirty-five churches in Milwaukee and surrounding Wisconsin cities. "Surely our age has little need of one more day for amusement," the Rev. C. A. Carriel.

Canadian Music Tax Issue Reopened; Showmen to Combine

JUST when Canadian exhibitors were settling back with the idea that they would not be further disturbed by legislative activities providing for the imposition of royalties on music played in their theatres, announcement was made on December 4 that the Canadian House of Commons would again consider the Canadian Copyright Bill at its session which opens January 7. This means that the issue is again opened and that the proprietors of cinemas in the Dominion will be called upon to protect their interests.

The copyright bill, which has been placed on the order paper for the new Parliament at the request of Leon J. Ladner, Conservative member for Vancouver, B. C., was allowed to slide at the last session when the report of the copyright committee brought in its report late in June. In the meantime, however, the Canadian Performing Right Society, Ltd., a branch of the English society, has been established with headquarters at Toronto, Ontario, to insure the proposed collection of royalties from all Canadian theatres using copyrighted music. This society recently made overtures to the Society of Authors and Composers in the United States to bind the situation in the American republic.

At the same time, however, the Musical Amusement Association has been formed in Canada, with headquarters also at Toronto, to protect the interests of exhibitors, theatrical producers and others and to fight the Performing Right Society. The M. P. T. O. of Canada has also taken sides in the matter, having endorsed the stand of the Musical Amusement Association at a recent meeting of the M.P.T.O. in Canada.

Producer's Dist. Corp. Announces Releases For First Half of Coming Year's Program

THE line-up of Producers Distributing Corporation for the first half of 1926 will consist of twenty-three high class attractions, according to an official announcement from John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager, who makes public an impressive list of attractions for release between January 1st. and June 30th, 1926.

Eight from DeMille

The schedule as now arranged calls for eight productions from the Cecil DeMille Studio including the DeMille personally directed production "The Volga Boatman," twelve productions from the Metropolitan Studios including two specials from A. H. Sebastian and one Renaud Hoffman; two productions from Marshall Neilan, and one big comedy feature from Al. Christie.

The list of titles include adaptions from seven big stage plays, twelve from novels and magazine stories, and four original screen vehicles by well known scenarists.

Two Julian Productions

Cecil DeMille will contribute two Rupert Julian productions in "Three Faces East" and "Silence;" two Paul Sloane productions in "Made for Love" and "Eve's Leaves;" one Alan Hale production "Braveheart;" one William K. Howard production "Red Dice;" and his own personally directed offering "The Volga Boatman." One other production, "Bachelor's Brides" will star Rod La Rocque.

Rod La Rocque will be starred in "Braveheart" an adaption of the William DeMille stage play "Strongheart" and "Red Dice" from the Octavus Roy Cohen story "The Iron Chalice." In "Braveheart" the star will be supported by Lillian Rich, Robert Edeson, Tyrone Power and Jean Acker. In "Red Dice," Margarite De La Motte will be his leading lady supported by an all star cast. Leatrice Joy will be starred in "Made for Love," supported by Edmund Burns and in "Eve's Leaves" with Clive Brook and Rockcliffe Fellowes. "Made for Love" is an original story by Garrett Fort and "Eve's Leaves" will be an adaptation from the succesful stage play by Harry Chapman Ford.

Strong Cast in "Three Faces East"

"Three Faces East," adapted from the sensational war time secret service play by Anthony Paul Kelly, will have Jetta Goudal, Robert Ames, Henry B. Walthall and Clive Brook in the featured roles. While "Silence" an adaptation of Max Marcin's celebrated stage play, will have H. B. Warner in the role he made famous behind the footlights.

Cecil B. DeMille's personally directed production "The Volga Boatman" is from the story by Konrad Bercovici. William Boyd, who scored a decided personal triumph in "The Road to Yesterday" will be featured in the title role supported by Elinor Fair, Robert Edeson, Theodore Kosloff, Julia Faye, Victor Varconi, Rosa Rudami and Arthur Rankin.

"The Volga Boatman" deals in a dramatically colorful manner with the social upheaval in Russia following the revolution. The screen treatment was prepared by Lenore J. Coffee and Arthur Miller is now in charge of the camera work. Adrian designed the costumes from sketches drawn by the celebrated artist Dan Sayre Groesbeck.

Productions from Metropolitan

The Metropolitan offerings, to be presented by John C. Flinn, include "Steel Preferred," directed by James V. Hogan, "Rocking Moon," a George Melford production, "The Million Dollar Handicap," directed by Scott Sidney, "Paris at Midnight," a Frances Marion production directed by E. Mason Hopper, "The Danger Girl," "Forbidden Waters," and "The Dice Woman" to be directed by Edward Dillon, "Whispering Smith" and "Shipwrecked," the directors of which have not yet been decided upon.

"Steel Preferred," the first of the Metropolitans is a melodramatic and spectacular romance of the mighty steel mills adapted from Herschel Hall's "Wally Gay" stories

THIS IS SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN in the way of Westerns, and Buck Jones, the popular Fox star, is just the chap to take full advantage of his role in "The Desert's Price," written for the screen by Charles Darnton from the novel by William MacLeod Raine. Montagu Love is the "heavy," and W. S. Van Dyck directed.

published in the Saturday Evening Post. William Boyd and Vera Reynolds are featured in the production with a great cast headed by Hobart Bosworth, Charles Murray, Nigel Barrie, Helene Sullivan, William V. Mong and Walter Long.

"Rocking Moon" from the flowery, summer time story of Alaska by Barrett Willoughby, will have Lilyan Tashman and John Bowers in the featured roles with Rockcliffe Fellows, Laska Winters, Luke Cosgrave and Eugene Pallette prominent in the supporting cast.

"Paris at Midnight," Frances Marion's second offering as a producer, is a dramatic etching of the humor and pathos of the superficially gay French capital, adapted from Balzac's great story "Pere Goriot."

"The Million Dollar Handicap" is a story of the American turf adapted from W. A. Fraser's novel, "Thoroughbreds." Vera Reynolds will be featured at the head of a remarkably strong cast that includes Edmund Burns, Ralph Lewis, Ward Crane, Tom Wilson, Clarence Burton, Danny Hoy, Rosa Gore, Walter Emerson and a bevy of beauties borowed from the Christie studio.

"The Danger Girl" adapted from "The Bride" by George Middleton and Stuart Olivier, a society melodrama with its locale in New York City, will star Priscilla Dean with John Bowers in the featured role. Cissy Fitzgerald, Arthur Hoyt, William Humphrey, Clarence Burton, Edwin Connolly and Gustav Von Seyffertitz will be seen in prominent parts.

Priscilla Dean will also be starred in "Forbidden Waters" by Percy Heath, and "The Dice Woman" by Welford Beaton, two screen vehicles especially suited for displays of the fiery, dramatic type of the star.

"Shipwrecked" will be a spectacular melodrama of the high seas, adapted from the thrilling stage play "The Storm" by Langdon McCormick. "Whispering Smith" will be a railroad drama adapted from the novel by Frank Spearman. The star, director and cast for these two productions have not yet been selected.

"Fifth Avenue," a dramatization of the human side of New York's famous thoroughfare, suggested by Arthur Stringer's story in The Saturday Evening Post, will have Marguerite De La Motte and Allan Forrest in the featured roles with such screen favorities as Louise Dresser, William V. Mong, Lucille Lee Stewart, Flora Finch, Lillian Langdon, Anna May Wong, Crawford Kent, Josephine Norman and Sally Long in the supporting cast.

A. H. Sebastian will present "The Prince of Pilsen," adapted from the famous musical comedy success of the same title by Frank Pixley and Gustav Luders. Anita Stewart has already been signed for a leading role in this big feature and it is expected that the selection of the other leading players will be made within the next few days.

"Wild Oats Lane," the Marshall Neilan production will be an elaborate picturization of Gerald Beaumont's intensely human story, published as a serial in the Red Book magazine Viola Dana and Robert Agnew will be seen in the featured roles under Neilan's personal direction.

"The Unknown Soldier," an inspiring view of the World War's aftermath, written by Dorothy Farnum, will be presented by Renaud Hoffman, with a cast selected especially for the dificult characterizations called for in the story.

Al Christie will contribute another big feature comedy in "The Champion Lover." For obvious reasons, no particulars are given on this subject other than the statement that it will be a super-comedy on a plane comparable with "Charley's Aunt," "Seven Days," "Madam Behave" and the other Christie features that have preceded it on the Pro-Dis-Co Program.

A summary of the twenty-three subjects listed discloses the interesting fact that Producers Distributing Corporation has rounded out a program for the first six months of 1926, that is of the widest possible diversity in entertainment. In the list are pictures ranging from farce comedy to sumptuous spectacles. There are stories of travel and romance on the high seas, and the steel rails of the land. There are backgrounds in Alaska, Russia, France, Germany, England, and every section of America. Every phase of society; from the highest to the lowest, is pictured in tones of humor and pathos, while adventure and romance are mingled with spectacular thrills and laugh provoking creations of the gag men.

Edward Laemmle Finishes "Still Alarm" for Universal

Final scenes for "The Still Alarm," Edward Laemmle's Universal-Jewel production, have been made at last after a period of almost six months.

The picture was completed four months ago except for fire scenes of a burning apartment house. The apartment house set was built at the studio, and the director was ready to ignite it when a production official decided it should be used first in another picture.

Before the director finally fired the set, it had been used for flashes in two other pictures, and the burning of the four-story set, when it finally occurred, was quite an occasion.

Helene Chadwick, William Russell, John T. Murray, Edna Marian, Richard Travers, Edward Hearn, Dot Farley and others play leading roles in "The Still Alarm."

Columbia Completes Plans for New Season; Many Popular Books and Plays Purchased

Messrs. Joe Brandt, Harry and Jack Cohn, president, vice-president, and treasurer of Columbia Pictures Corporation, respectively, issued a statement at a recent meeting of Columbia franchise holders, held at the New York headquarters of this organization, which in effect is that plans for the coming year includes one of the most ambitious programs yet attempted by an independent producer. Also a unique arrangement for pleasing distributors and exhibitors for the coming year's product has been accomplished, and even a bigger and better year than 1925-1926 is anticipated. The statement in part is as follows:

"When purchasing stories for production and engaging talent, directorial and acting for picturization of these stories, it behooves the producer to show as much consideration for the opinion of the distributors of his pictures as his own. Distributors have their fingers on the pulse of the demand the world over and no producer can go wrong if he listens to the advice and opinions of his franchise holders.

"In this belief we have arranged a conference to be attended by as many of Columbia franchise holders as is possible, at which, our plans for the coming year will be discussed, and advice and opinions listened to and accepted or given consideration in an effort to, insofar as possible, arrange our 1926-1927 schedule to fill the demand for the type of pictures which will please the distributor, exhibitor and public alike."

This year Columbia pictures have won, and richly earned wide popularity throughout the world. "Steppin' Out," which is a splendid comedy, and "The Danger Signal," a thrilling drama, are probably the most successful productions containing the Columbia brand has achieved remarkable results wherever shown. Each and every Columbia production has been far above the average, and proven at the box-office that it has been made right, priced right, and brought in big profits.

To cite a few of the exceptional pictures turned out by this organization, "Lure of the Wild" in addition to "Ladies of Leisure" is now proving its box-office value throughout the country. "When Husbands Flirt," one of the most recent Columbia releases, already revealed itself another tremendous success, which will, it is believed, equal "Steppin' Out" in popularity. There are many other productions which can be mentioned, but as a whole, the Columbia 1925-1926 program has established itself as one of exceptional merit.

As an example of the type of productions to be made for the forthcoming year, the officials of the company have purchased the De Maupassant play, "Poor Girls." This is the first of the famous author's works to be purchased and is a fair indication of the splendid type of pictures Columbia will produce. Messrs. Brandt and Cohn have read the works of many famous authors, and have bought options on a number of plays and novels, which, after the franchise holders' conference, will be purchased or rejected as so decided, and later announcements will be made of the number of options taken up and the names of the famous authors whose works have been bought.

CLAIRE WINDSOR, the beautiful screen star, is "stunning" in the Tiffany production, "Souls for Sables," which exhibitors everywhere are praising as a box-office attraction of the first magnitude.

Jean Hersholt to be Starred by Universal

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal announces the elevation of Jean Hersholt, famous character actor, to stardom. A series of special productions will go into preparation immediately for the player.

The first starring vehicle of the star is an original story by Edward Sedgwick, who will also direct it. The story is "The Squarehead," a super-sea tale in which the actor will portray the role of a Swedish sailor. It is a characterization which is peculiarly suited to the inimitable talents of Hersholt.

Production on "The Squarehead" is scheduled to begin next week, when the company will leave for San Pedro for its maritime atmosphere. Supporting members of the cast will shortly be announced.

To Road-Show "Stella Dallas" In Many Large Cities

Samuel Goldwyn announces plans whereby the Henry King production, "Stella Dallas," will be road-showed in many of the larger cities.

Mr. Goldwyn has turned the road-showing of this production over to Theodore Mitchell, who was formerly associated with the firm of Mitchell & McCarthy, who have successfully handled the legitimate showing of some of the biggest pictures ever produced.

Mr. Mitchell has left for Boston to complete arrangements for the opening of the first road show at the Colonial Theatre, January 11th, for an extended run.

Following the Boston engagement, shows will be opened in Chicago and other important key cities simultaneously.

To Direct Lillian Gish

Irving G. Thalberg, associate studio executive at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, announced that Victor Seastrom has been named as director for Lillian Gish in the screen version of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "The Scarlet Letter."

Miss Gish at the present time is completing work on "La Boheme," the film version of the opera in which John Gilbert has the leading male role. "The Scarlet Letter" is one of the greatest classics of literature.

Frances Marion Preparing "Calamity Jane" For Screen

Working in conjunction with Harry Carr, dramatic writer of the Los Angeles Times, columnist and author, Frances Marion is now preparing Bret Harte's "Calamity Jane" for presentation as another one of her Metropolitan productions.

"Calamity Jane" is perhaps one of the few remaining characters of the early West who has not been brought before the motion picture public in a screen story. Her career was one of the most colorful of all the notables who made history during the days of gold discoveries and land rushes. And there are none more capable of bringing this character to the screen than Frances Marion and Harry Carr. Both are what might be termed veterans in their field of endeavor. Miss Marion has more than fifty successful scenarios to her credit, while Carr is recognized throughout the United States for his abilify as a journalist, as well as a critic par excellence.

JEAN HERSHOLT in Universal's "My Old Dutch" his star part is the real thing in acting.

Big Schedule of Production Now In Progress at M-G-M Studios

WITH production activity approaching its peak at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, every director in the big organization is now busy either on a production or preparing to start within the next few weeks.

This season's production schedule is the largest in the history of the big studio, every play under production or in preparation being an elaborate future.

Probably never before in the history of any studio has so much work, and work of such magnitude, been under way at one time.

Fred Niblo has just completed "Ben Hur," with Ramon Novarro in the title role, and May McAvoy, Carmel Myers, Francis X. Bushman and other famous players. This picture marks a monumental task in film production.

King Vidor is completing "La Boheme," starring Lillian Gish, with John Gilbert, and at the same time is preparing for "Bardelys the Magnificent," Rafael Sabatini's celebrated novel, which will star John Gilbert.

Monta Bell is directing the Cosmopolitan production of the Blasco Ibanez novel "The Torrent," with Ricardo Cortez and Greta Garbo, a spectacular story of Spain and the life of an opera star.

Tod Browning is directing Lon Chaney, with Renee Adoree and a big cast, in "The Mocking Bird," a Limehouse mystery story featuring Chaney in a dual role. The story is an original by Browning.

Sydney Franklin is directing the Cosmopolitan production "Beverly of Graustark," starring Marion Davies, with Antonio Moreno, Roy D'Arcy, George K. Arthur and a large cast. It is an adaptation of the George Barr McCutcheon novel.

Edmund Goulding is preparing for his next production.

Hobart Henley has just started directing "The Auction Block," from the novel by Rex Beach, with Charles Ray and Eleanor Boardman.

Robert Z. Leonard is putting finishing touches on "Dance Madness," a colorful modern story with Claire Windsor and Conrad Nagel.

While in New York recently, the stellar comedian discussed the story with the home office executives of Paramount and it received the enthusiastic approval of the officials. Production work is scheduled to start as soon as the story can be translated into its final continuity and a cast assembled.

Stage Comedian in Pictures

Field's First Starring Picture To Be Based On "Comic Supplement"

W. C. Fields, stage comedian and the outstanding hit of D. W. Griffith's "Sally of the Sawdust" and "That Royle Girl," will rank as a screen star in his next effort for Paramount which is now being prepared at the Long Island studio, according to William LeBaron, associate producer.

The production, as yet untitled, is based on "The Comic Supplement," which J. P. McEvoy wrote especially for the talents of Fields when the latter was a Ziegfeld star, and which provided the material for the actor's part in the most recent edition of the Follies. The author is noted as a comic strip artist and as the writer of the stage play, "The Potters."

Tom J. Geraghty, will write the screen version which will be filmed in the Long Island studio and in Florida. The starting date is February 1.

"Let's Get Married" Title of Richard Dix's Next Picture

Lois Wilson will have the leading feminine role and Gregory La Cava will direct from Luther Reed's adaptation. Production will start the latter part of the month at the Astoria studio.

Beaudine Back with Warners

William Beaudine is "back home" again. That is to say, he is back with Warner Bros. after an absence of more than six months.

Early this year Beaudine was lent to the Mary Pickford company to direct "Little Annie Rooney," after which arrangements were perfected permitting him to remain and make "Scraps." But henceforth he is to devote his time and attention to Warner productions again.

THERE IS A FASCINATION about this two-reel version of O. Henry's "Transients in Arcadia," a William Fox success.

Fox Films Produces "Johnstown Flood" As Thrill Picture for First Run Houses

A THRILL picture, produced to meet the needs of first run houses, and the first of its type to be made, is what Fox Films will offer in "The Johnstown Flood," an epic screen story based on the historic disaster of 1889. The production has just been completed at a tremendous cost after months of preliminary work and actual shooting time.

With its release, Fox promises a thriller that will step out of the class suitable only for neighborhood houses. From first to last its production details have all the finish of the finest feature. In addition, the plot reaches one of the most spectacular and costliest climaxes ever filmed.

"The Johnstown Flood" differs from previous pictures of thrill variety in that it does not depend for its action on stunts or faked camera effects. The story itself has the advantage of actuality and is built with all the logic of truth.

A staff of research experts was engaged to assemble the details of the appalling disaster that startled the world when on May 31, 1889, the North Fork Reservoir near Johnstown, Pennsylvania, broke, carrying death and destruction through the Conemaugh Valley. The thrills disclosed by these authentic records have been faithfully reproduced for the screen story.

To accomplish this the Fox producing forces constructed an exact replica of Johnstown and its neighbor cities, Conemaugh and Cambria. An abandoned dam was rebuilt and great volumes of water released for the mammoth climax. An estimate of this tremendous scene can be had from the historic records of the event, which reveal the following facts:

More than 640,000,000 cubic feet of water was unleashed when the Reservoir dam burst. The weight of the water was estimated at 20,000,000 tons. The water fell 450 feet in a distance of twelve miles.

The uncontrolled currents rushed tree-top high through a valley 300 feet wide.

Fifteen minutes after the dam gave may the flood had subsided, having taken a toll of 12,000 lives with 20,000 people injured, three towns destroyed and $10,000,000 worth of property wiped out.

To capture these startling facts with the camera, the Fox organization has spared no expense. Thousands of extras were employed in the scenes of heroism, suffering, miraculous escapes and daring adventures.

"The Johnstown Flood" will have a tremendous advertising value through its title alone. The disaster is remembered by many now living and has been recounted to the younger generation as an event of history. Against this background has been built the story of a group of rich land-owners who controlled the property adjacent to the dam.

These central characters, participating in the startling event that followed, are being played by a cast of big box-office names superior to any group of players ever before assembled in a thriller. George O'Brien of "The Iron Horse" fame leads the line-up, supported by Florence Gilbert, Janet Gaynor, Anders Randolf and Paul Nicholson. The director of "The Johnstown Flood" is Irving Cummings.

Walsh to Direct "What Price Glory" or Fox

RAOUL WALSH has been assigned by Fox Films to direct the screen version of "What Price Glory," the stage drama by Laurence Stallings and Maxwell Anderson, according to a telegraphich announcement received from Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of the Fox Company, who is now in Hollywood. Walsh wil report to the Fox lot the first of January. He is now with Famous Players-Lasky.

"What Price Glory" was the reigning dramatic success of last season in New York and continued playing to capacity business until this fall. Because of its powerful situations, "What Price Glory" became the most talked about play in the country. The success of its New York run is now being duplicated by road companies in every section of the country.

The plot centers about two hard-fighting Marines, Captain Flagg and Top Sergeant Quirt, soldiering these many years and running afoul of one another periodically, who came together again somewhere on the front in France. Each of them has broken the other in former campaigns. The top sergeant joins the outfit just as the captain is going on leave. While the captain is away, the sergeant wins the skipper's mademoiselle.

Then both go up to the line and forget their feud in the dirt of the dugout and the smash of the daily attacks. The sergeant is wounded and gets back to the girl first. When the captain returns with his company, they drink together and later fight for the possession of the girl. As the play ends neither has her, because they have been ordered to move forward again, with all leaves revoked.

The screen production will be made for next season.

WITH fifteen of the "Triumphant Thirty" all set for presentation to exhibitors, and with Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket" as an offering De Luxe, Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has become a beehive of activity, particularly as regards its force in the field.

Washington Newspapers Help Put Over "Man on the Box"

THE recent run of the Warner Bros. attraction, Syd Chaplin in "The Man on the Box" at the Metropolitan Theatre, in Washington, D. C., was made the occasion for three effective exploitation stunts, the leading two evening newspapers each sponsoring one. All were devised by Bert Adler, who has been engaged by Warner Bros. to carry on special exploitation campaigns on four pictures.

The Washington Evening Star, in cooperation with the Crandall Enterprises, gave a special morning party to 800 boys and girls from the various orphanages and children's homes in the District of Columbia. For this event the Crandalls offered the use of the Ambassador Theatre and the newspaper transported the youngsters in buses.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of the District of Columbia schools, gave official sanction to the event and waived the operation of the compulsory school attendance act in these words:

"The character of the entertainment and the fact that these children so seldom have such an opportunity prompts the superintendent of schools to feel that the principals and teachers should give sympathetic cooperation to the Evening Star in arranging for this party."

The Evening Times carried on a "Man on the Box" contest. Each afternoon for several days it printed a picture of a hansom cab, with its driver and horse. To form the face of the driver the eyes of one movie star had been cut out of a picture and pasted over the face of another. Contestants—there were several hundreds of them—were required to answer two questions daily, "Whose eyes are they?" and "Whose is the rest of the face?" and the person identifying most of the "messographs" received a $50 prize.

There was a taxi war on at the national capital during the run of the picture and the Independents took advantage of the situation by displaying on their cars placards reading:

Independent Taxi

Wants to Earn His Living
And Obey the Law

Menjou's Next to Be "I'll See You Tonight"

Adolphe Menjou will star in an original story by Monte M. Katterjohn, which is tentatively titled "I'll See You Tonight," to be directed by Malcolm St. Clair, it was announced by William Le Baron, associate producer in charge at the Paramount Long Island studio.

The director, author and Pierre Collings, who is writing the screen adaptation, came East for the preparation of this latest Menjou vehicle, which is scheduled to go into production on December 21. The company will go to Vermont for the small town atmosphere and the balance of the picture will be filmed at the studio. A famous Broadway night club also figures in the proceedings.

Griffith to Produce "Sorrows of Satan"

D. W. GRIFFITH is soon to start on the biggest motion picture he has ever attempted. It will be Marie Corelli's story, "The Sorrows of Satan," and it will be produced on a scale greater than "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance."

As tentatively worked out, the story will be filmed with a number of magnificent spectacles in England. Scenes will also be made at the Paramount Long Island studio and in California, according to announcement by William Le Baron, Paramount associate producer in charge.

It may require from four to six months to make the picture. Forrest Halsey, who wrote the screen versions of "Monsieur Beaucaire," "Madame Sans Gene;" Herbert Brenon's present production for Paramount, "Dancing Mothers," and many others, is preparing the script for this production in collaboration with Mr. Griffith.

Representatives of Paramount are now in England seeking a magnificent country estate in the Shakespeare country similar to the one described by Miss Corelli. Tropical island locations have already been examined, agents have visited caves in Virginia to study their pictorial possibilities, and there has been an engneering estimate made of the possibility of having a yacht pass between two splitting icebergs as described in one of the closing chapters of the book.

In so far as mechanical limitations can be overcome the series of vivid pictures described by Miss Corelli will be put on the screen.

"The Sorrows of Satan" was published in England in 1895. From the day of its announcement it was a sensation, because the authoress states that no copies would be sent to reviewers and any reviewer wishing to secure it would have to do so at libraries or bookstores. As a result, it was received with denunciatory criticism in many quarters and was the subject of controversy for years.

It was a tremendous popular success, however, and has been translated into practically every language.

Mr. Griffith read it during his earlier days as a motion picture director and was struck with its possibilities. He has wanted to do it ever since.

"For years I have looked forward to the time when I might film this story," he said recently. "While using my own producing organization I realized that I could not do it justice. It requires unlimited funds, an organization world-wide in scope, and technical equipment such as only the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation could provide.

"I broached the subject to Mr. Zukor and Mr. Lasky soon after affiliating with them several months ago. They both agreed the story had the elements of a great picture. The plans have been maturing since. We are now getting the technical plans perfected. I hope to be able to start camera work during January."

Universal to Make "Star Spangled Banner"

UNIVERSAL plans to make a special feature entitled "The Star Spangled Banner," it was announced yesterday at the Universal Home Office, 730 Fifth Avenue. In the main it will be a dramatic screen presentation of the colorful incidents which lead up to the writing of the American National Anthem by Francis Scott Key, during the siege of Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, in 1814. The picture will go into production with the least possible delay so that it may be ready for release before next Independence Day, July 4th, 1926.

Universal reports that no pains will be spared to make this an unusual feature. It has not yet been determined how long it will be. The pick of Universal's scenario editors already are working on the story and script, and a director soon will be assigned to the picture. Many scenes of the production will be filmed in the actual locations in and around Baltimore, where the events occurred.

George Cochrane, a brother of R. H. and P. D. Cochrane, Universal officials, and himself a director and a member of the Home Office staff, is credited with the idea for this special. He served in France with the Marine Corps and his realization of the appeal of such a picture to every American family prompted his suggestion.

The picture will admit of remarkable stage presentations and music accompaniment.

First National Production Forces Active

WHEN the holiday season hits Hollywood, instead of slackening pace until the beginning of the new year, First National Production headquarters will find activities at the peak.

New stories, books, and plays will be arranged for production, according to John McCormick, head of the West Coast units for that organization.

Colleen Moore will be putting the finishing touches on "Irene," under Alfred E. Green's direction, and announcement of her following story will be made within a few days' time.

Corinne Griffith will be working in production on "Mlle. Modiste," under Robert Z. Leonard's direction.

Harry Langdon will be nearing the half way point in his first feature comedy for First National.

Edwin Carewe will have begun "Twentieth Century Unlimited," the story that will follow his recently completed "Joanna" film.

Lambert Hillyer will have started "The Second Chance" with Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading feminine role.

The Talmadges, Norma and Constance, will be well into production with Norma making "Kiki" under Clarence Brown's direction. Constance's story, although as yet not announced, will be ready for production at that time, according to Joseph M. Schenck.

Balboni will be well along with "The Far Cry" which brings out the combination of Blanche Sweet and Jack Mulhall in the leading roles.

June Mathis will be starting work on Rupert Hughes' "The Patent Leather Kid," which is to be one of First National's special attractions for the forthcoming season.

When Christmas arrives, it will find all of these units progressing at top speed, with the First National scenario division, under the capable guidance of June Mathis, working on additional stories that are scheduled for script form.

Lukan Made District Manager

L. O. Lukan, heretofore manager of the First National Exchange at Minneapolis, has been appointed by Ned Marin to the position of District Manager for the West Coast territory, with headquarters at San Francisco.

Mr. Lukan will cover the branches located at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Portland, Denver and Salt Lake City.

The entrance of Mr. Lukan into this important work is another evidence of the thorough manner in which the First National offensive is being organized and strengthened.

"Stella Dallas" in White House

First Production to Be Shown During Coolidge Administration

To the Samuel Goldwyn-Henry King production, "Stella Dallas," goes the honor of being the first motion picture to be screened in the White House during the Coolidge Administration. Heretofore pictures have been projected on the President's Yacht "The Mayflower."

Last Saturday night, while the President and the members of the Cabinet were attending the Gridiron Dinner, Mrs. Coolidge entertained the wives of Cabinet Officers at a special showing of "Stella Dallas," held in the East Room of the White House.

Arrangements were made through the Hays organization, upon the request of Mrs. Coolidge who selected "Stella Dallas" on her recent trip to New York with the President.

"Stella Dallas" continues to play at the Apollo Theatre for an indefinite run.

Fourteen Releases from F. B. O. In January

AN imposing array of fourteen productions, including seven features and seven short subjects has been assembled by F.B.O. for release during January, 1926.

The program is headed by "Flaming Waters," an oil melodrama produced for F.B.O. by Associated Arts Corporation. Cutting and editing of the film has been completed under the supervision of Harmon Weight, who directed the production. Mary Carr, Pauline Garon and Malcolm McGregor are featured in "Flaming Waters," which comes from the pen of E. Lloyd Sheldon with continuity by Fred Kennedy Myton. "Flaming Waters" is slated for January 3 release. "Flaming Waters" is listed as a Gold Bond production.

On January 10, "Man Rustlin'," an Independent Pictures Corporation production starring Bob Custer will be shown. The picture is being directed by Del Andrews, and Florence Lee, Jules Cowles, Sam Allen, James Kelly, Pat Boggs and Howard Fay appear in support of Custer.

On January 17, the next "Lefty" Flynn production, as yet untitled, based on the story by Gerald Beaumont will be released. Jimmy Gruen and John Gray adapted the story, which was directed by Harry Garson. Kathleen Myers, James Marcus, Adele Farrington, Ray Ripley, Nigel Barrie, Raymond Turner and Jerry Murphy appear in support of the story. The poduction presents the former Yale gridiron star in another cop's role, somewhat similar to those in which he appeared in "High and Handsome" and "Speed Wild."

The next western starring Tom Tyler, F.B.O.'s "surprise" western star, will be shown on January 24. The picture, which is as yet untitled, presents the handsome western player in a lively action film, in which Tyler's horse his dog, and his little buddy, Frankie Darro, make an inseparable quartet.

January 31 is set for the distribution of "When Love Grows Cold," a modernized version of Laura Jean Libbey's famous novel, in which Natacha Rambova (Mrs. Rudolph Valentino) is starred.

On January 31 the next Richard Talmadge production "The Blue Streak" will also be shown. The story comes from the pen of James Bell Smith, and is being directed by Noel Smith, while Louise Lorraine, Charles Clary, Henry Herbert and Charles Mailes appear in support of the stunt star.

Seven short subjects are listed for release during January, National Laugh Month.

The list is headed by "High But Not Handsome," No. 9 of "The Adventures of Mazie," starring Alberta Vaughn. The series are based on stories by Nell Martin which appeared originally in Top Notch Magazine. They are being adapted by Doris Anderson and directed by Ralph Ceder. Miss Vaughn is supported by Larry Kent, Al Cooke, and Kit Guard. "High But Not Handsome" will be released on January 3.

On January 10, "Mummy Love," a Blue Ribbon comedy starring Alice Ardell, will be shown. The Blue Ribbon comedies are being produced by Joe Rock for Standard Cinema Corporation and F.B.O. release, and feature a number of well known comedians in support of the leading lady.

"A Snitch In Time," No. 11 of "The Adventures of Maizie" will be shown on January 31.

Warners Soon to Start Work on Three More

HARRY M. WARNER, arriving at Warner Bros. West Coast Studios in Los Angeles, from New York this week found the lot a veritable hive of activity. About thirty productions on the 1925-26 schedule already have been finished, five others are nearing completion, and work is about to start on yet three more.

A new William Beaudine picture, it is announced, is to feature Patsy Ruth Miller, John Patrick and Montague Love. The role to be taken by Patrick is the largest he has ever had, but is said to be one for which he is splendidly adapted. The production, which is yet to receive a title, will be from a scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr., from an adaptation by Lowe and Phil Klein.

This will be William Beudine's first picture since his return to the Warner studios after an absence of more than six months. He was lent to the Mary Pickford Company early this year to direct "Little Annie Rooney," remaining thereafter to make "Scraps."

Roy Del Ruth has been named to direct the picturization of a story by A. C. Lancaster, which bears the temporary title, "The Grifters." The scenario is by Darryl Francis Zannuck. The cast, as so far recruited, comprises Dolores Costello, Louise Fazenda, John Harron and Matthew Betz. Roy Del Ruth but lately finished production work on "The Man Upstairs," an adaptation of the Earl Derr Biggers novel, "The Agony Column." Monte Blue was starred, with Dorothy Devore playing opposite him.

The Marie Prevost starring vehicle, "Why Girls Go Back Home," production work on which also is soon to start, will be directed by James Floyd. The story is by Catherine Brody, and the scenario was written by Sonya Hovey.

M-G-M Breaks Los Angeles Record

DURING the week of December 7 in Los Angeles, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer broke local exhibition records by having four of their productions showing in first run theatres. Incidentally each one played to remarkably fine business.

At the Million Dollar Theatre, "The Merry Widow," co-starring Mae Murray and John Gilbert, held forth. This production, which has been consistently breaking records all over the country and has been for over four months at the Embassy Theatre, New York, enjoyed capacity business.

"The Big Parade," hailed by the critics as the greatest picture ever made and enjoying turn away business at every showing at the Astor Theatre, New York, since its sensational opening a few weeks ago, is doing the same thing at Grauman's new Egyptian Theatre in Los Angeles. This production, together with John Gilbert, the star, Renee Adoree in th eleading feminine role and Karl Dane and Tom O'Brien, who portray unique character roles, is still the talk of all filmdom on the Coast.

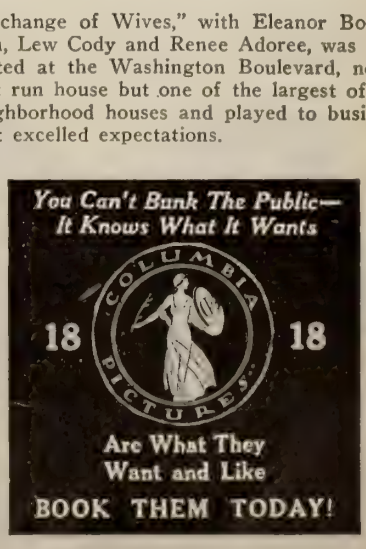
"His Secretary," Norma Shearer's latest starring vehicle, played Loew's State Theatre and both the star and Lew Cody, featured player, were accorded an enthusiastic reception and big business.

"Bright Lights," with Charles Ray and Pauline Starke, was at the Criterion where excellent business also ruled throughout the week.

A fifth Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Exchange of Wives," with Eleanor Boardman, Lew Cody and Renee Adoree, was presented at the Washington Boulevard, not a first run house but one of the largest of the neighborhood houses and played to business that excelled expectations.

M-G-M Exchange Changes Location

The Des Moines Exchange of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, under the management of W. E. Banford, has moved from its old quarters, West 8th street, to 1111 High street, where business is already going on.



Unit Production System Established At First National Eastern Studios

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, general manager of First National Pictures, Inc., announces a new policy to be put in force at the Eastern Studios with a view to reaping the fullest benefit from the unit system in production.

Under the new arrangement, Earl Hudson will manage four production units and Al Rockett four production units, whereas Ray Rockett, brother of Al and co-producer of "Abraham Lincoln," will be business manager at the Studios, a post held for some time by Al Rockett.

In announcing the new plan of production activity, Mr. Rowland said that it is in accord with the ideas he has been putting into operation for some time, whereby First National may profit by the efforts of individual producers. According to Mr. Rowland, the last few years have shown conclusively that the best results may be obtained through the unit system of production rather than the older method of studio work which tended to curb the genius and originality of individual producers and authors. It is his opinion that units should be relatively small so that the producer can concentrate and specialize on his pictures.

Mr. Rowland pointed out that for some time past, the product of First National has been about equally divided between the output of the First National organization and that of independent producers releasing through the distribution channels of the company. The present plan is in effect, a furtherance of this policy which has been found so highly successful.

"Every picture needs individual attention," said Mr. Rowland, "and in order to give the best that is in him, a producer must have the opportunity to concentrate on the production immediately in hand. Our best pictures have been made in this way in the past, and it will be more than ever the case in the future now that every picture released must, in reality, be of 'special' calibre.

"The day of the machine-made photoplay is past."

Earl Hudson, who came from the Coast in October, 1924, has shared in the responsibility for many of the most successful First National productions including such box office winners as "Flaming Youth" and "The Lost World." It is figured that under the present plan, he will find fuller scope for his unusual creative and executive abilities.

Al Rockett's outstanding accomplishment in the motion picture field is "Abraham Lincoln," produced with his brother and recently awarded the Photoplay Magazine Gold Medal as the best picture of 1924. Mr. Rockett came from the Coast to act as assistant to Mr. Rowland and for several months past has been business manager at the Eastern Studios in association with Mr. Hudson.

Ray Rockett, the new business manager, has worked in close contact with his brother in all their picture activities, and has a thorough knowledge of the production end of the business.

Kyne in Hollywood

To Work on New Fox Pictures—First of Kyne-Fox Productions Completed

Peter B. Kyne, rated as one of America's greatest creators of fiction, has arrived in Hollywood to begin work on one of four original stories to be made for Fox Films. It is "Rustling for Cupid," which will be directed by John Ford, maker of "The Iron Horse" and "3 Bad Men."

The first of the Kyne-Fox pictures has been completed. It is "The Golden Strain." This was directed by Victor Schertzinger with Kenneth Harlan and Madge Bellamy in the featured roles. Most of the picture was taken at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, where the action of the story takes place.

Mr. Kyne and Mr. Ford are hard at work on the script of "Rustling for Cupid" and it is expected that the picture will go into production in a couple of weeks. The cast has not been decided upon. The two other Kyne stories which Fox Films will put on the screen have not been named.

In connection with Mr. Kyne's arrival at the Fox West Coast Studios, it might be mentioned that the first print of "The Golden Strain" has just arrived at the Fox Home Office in New York and at the first pre-view for the officials and publicity staff it stood the acid test by measuring up to expectations which were "quite some."

Hallor Engaged for "Red Dice"

Ray Hallor, who played the lead with Constance Talmadge in "Learning to Love," and the lead in "The Last Edition," under Emory Johnson's direction, is announced by DeMille as the newest addition to the brilliant cast who will support La Rocque in "Red Dice."

William Howard will direct the production.

Big Universal Release

"The Still Alarm" Set For Eearly Release By Carl Laemmle

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal is enthusiastic over "The Still Alarm," which he has ordered booked for an early release. "The Still Alarm" is a screen adaptation of the famous old stage play of the same name. Beginning in the days of the horse-drawn fire-fighting apparatus, it gradually becomes modernized and finishes with the present motorized fire department.

"It is without a doubt the greatest fire picture I have ever seen," was Laemmle's comment after viewing the spectacular production. "It is the only fire picture with two smashing fire scenes in it. 'The Still Alarm' is a hundred times as big as the immortal stage melodrama. It has everything about a big fire that thrills—galloping horses, roaring motors, crumbling buildings and heroic rescues. Through it all runs tender romance and excellent comedy."

"The Still Alarm" was directed by Edward Laemmle. Among the players are Helene Chadwick, William Russell, Richard C. Travers, John T. Murray, Edna Marian and Edward Hearn.

It is expected that "The Still Alarm" will be put out as one of Universal's early 1926 releases. It formerly was scheduled for June.

Will Retain Original Title

Fox Films has decided to present the screen version of Dorothy Brandon's stage play, "The Outsider," under its original title, instead of "Daybreak" as first announced. Lou Tellegen is playing the role of the healer and Jacqueline Logan is the dancer. Roy Atwell and Walter Pidgeon have the other principal roles. The picture is scheduled for January 17. Rowland V. Lee is directing.

GO-GETTERS OF FIRST NATIONAL'S EASTERN STUDIO—You know them all by name and reputation; but, in case you haven't met them, they are: Earl J. Hudson (left), head of four production units; Al Rockett (right), also heading four production units; Ray Rockett (center), business manager of the busy East Coast activities.

"The Road to Glory" Is Title of Hawks Picture

Fox Films has decided to call the picture Howard Hawkes is directing, with May McAvoy in the leading feminine role, "The Road to Glory."

Mr. Hawkes wrote the story himself and the picture is already well along in production under the working title "The Chariot of the Gods."

Leslie Fenton has the leading male role opposite Miss McAvoy and Ford Sterling appears as her father. Rockliffe Fellows is the villain. Milla Davenport and John MacSweeney have the other principal roles. Hank, the dog, also has an important part in the drama.

NATACHA RAMBOVA (MRS. RUDOLPH VALENTINO) does some striking work in F. B. O.'s "When Love Grows Cold"—striking the popular fancy, putting in the punch that will make her work a hit when she lands on your screen.

Women Democrats Indorse Goldwyn's "Stella Dallas"

Members of the Women's National Democrat Club, organized to stimulate interest in "better motion pictures" have selected Samuel Goldwyn's "Stella Dallas," which is now doing capacity business at the Apollo theatre, New York, where it has been booked for an indefinite run, as the first motion picture to receive their co-operation.

Lillian R. Sire is the president. Miss Amelia Summerville is vice-president and the advisory board is composed of Robert C. Pell, David H. Knott, Herbert C. Pell, Jr., Irwin Untermyer, George A. Carden and George W. Simpson.

Editing "Hands Up!"

Final editing of "Hands Up!" the largest production starring Raymond Griffith yet filmed by Paramount is progressing under the hands of Tay Malarkey with Clarence Badger, who directed this Civil War-Far West comedy, supervising the work.

Hundreds of persons were used in the cast of "Hands Up!" One location trip to the Mojave Desert kept Griffith, Marion Nixon, Virginia Lee Corbin, Montagu Love, Mack Swain and the other principals away from the studio for a month.

"Hands Up!" which introduces Griffith as a Confederate spy, was written by Monty Brice.

Dix and La Cava Are Editing "Womanhandled"

Richard Dix's latest screen effort "Womanhandled" is in the cutting room at the Paramount Long Island studio, where the star is aiding Gregory La Cava, the director, with cutting and editing.

The picture was made from Luther Reed's adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Arthur Stringer, who was also the author of "Manhandled." Dix, Esther Ralston, Olive Tell, Edmund Breese, Margaret Morris, Tammany Young and the supporting cast spent 10 weeks in Texas filming ranch and cattle stampede scenes. The balance of the film was made at the Westchester-Biltmore Country Club and the Long Island studio.

In "Womanhandled" Dix will be seen as a champion polo player, a fashionable New Yorker whose love for Esther Ralston impels him to go West and become a hero of the untamed lands to approximate her ideal of what a hero should be.

Writing for Tom Mix

Adela Rogers St. Johns, well known screen and magazine writer, is preparing an original story for Tom Mix, Fox Films' western star. The author and the modern Buffalo Bill have been in frequent conference on the story and have come to a final decision on the plot, although the tale is as yet unnamed.

F. B. O. Western Stars Busy

F. B. O.'s Western stars are burning up the hours at the company's West coast studios.

Fred Thomson, F. B. O. topnotcher and his famous horse, Silver King, are at work in Howard Clifton's story "The Tough Guy." Dave Kirkland is directing.

Bob Custer is filming "Man Rustlin'" with Del Andrews handling the megaphone.

Tom Tyler is working on a story by F. A. E. Pine. Bob De Lacey is the director.

F. B. O.'s western stars are operating on a well planned schedule with Thomson supplying several big features, Tyler eight and Custer eight.

Fox News Cameramen's College Meets; Read Paper

Vivid descriptions of his experiences on a tour of the countries bordering the Mediterranean were given by Ben Miggins, staff cameraman for Fox News and Fox Varieties, in a talk at the second meeting of the Fox News Cameramen's College on December 2. He touched Italy, Egypt, Arabia, Syria, Turkey, Greece and the Canary Islands.

A paper on "A New Camera for News Screen Cinematographers," written by J. H. McNabb, president of the Bell and Howell Company, was read by Harry Lott, New York representative of the company. Truman H. Talley, director in chief of Fox News, presided.

Universal's Productions for Next Season To Be Known as "The Golden Rule List"

UNIVERSAL'S 1926-1927 product will be known as "The Golden Rule List," it was announced at the Universal home office. This list, which will follow the Second White List, and will be scheduled for release beginning in August, 1926, will include thirty Jewel productions. Some of these already are in production.

The Golden Rule List takes its keynote from the Will H. Hays' speech delivered before the Ohio M. P. T. O., in convention at Columbus this week, in which Hays pleaded for better feeling and co-operation between producers and exhibitors. The Universal picture policy has always been "live and let live" and during the past two seasons Carl Laemmle has emphasized his friendly-hand attitude toward exhibitors by accentuating a policy of "white pictures and white treatment."

The past two season's Universal pictures have been known as "The White List," and the Second White List. The Golden Rule List follows out this idea and enlarges upon it. The Scriptural Golden Rule:

DO UNTO OTHERS AS YOU WOULD HAVE THEM DO UNTO YOU will be printed on each Golden Rule List contract, and its spirit will be carried out by Universal representatives, Universal asserts.

R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, gives due credit to the Hays' speech for Universal's new product slogan.

"For a week or so before Mr. Laemmle's departure for Europe, he gave much thought to a title for our 1926-1927 product," said Cochrane. "It was desired to get a name which would carry the full significance of Universal's white pictures and white treatment policy, and go further to emphasize Mr. Laemmle's friendly-hand attitude towards exhibitors.

"When I read Mr. Hays' Columbus speech I immediately sent a radiogram to Mr. Laemmle, suggesting that the Golden Rule idea expounded by Mr. Hays exactly expressed our attitude. Mr. Laemmle immediately radioed back—'Great! Splendid! Call new product The Golden Rule List. Print Golden Rule on the contracts.'"

The Golden Rule List will include Universal-Jewel pictures made with such stars as Reginald Denny, Laura La Plante, Virginia Valli, House Peters, Pat O'Malley, Louise Dresser, Hoot Gibson, Mary Philbin, Norman Kerry, Jean Hersholt and others. They will be directed by such well known directors as Harry Pollard, Svend Gade, Edward Laemmle, King Baggot, Edward Sedgwick, William Seiter, Lynn Reynolds and others.

The entire list, although tentatively chosen, is not definitely set and no complete announcement will be made at this time, but the following pictures are sure to be included "The Love Thrill," by Byron Morgan, as a Denny Jewel; "Poker Faces," as a Harry Pollard Production, with Edward Everett Horton; "The Trail of the Tiger," by Courtney Ryley Cooper, all-star picture directed by Sedgwick; "Blister Jones," by John Tainter Foote, all-star, directed by King Baggot, probably with Pat O'Malley featured; "The Big Gun," by Richard Barry, directed by Edward Sedgwick; "This Way Out," by Frederick Isham; "Cap Fallon," by John Morosco; "The Whole Town's Talking," by Anita Loos and John Emerson; "Too Many Cooks," a play by Frank Craven, for Reginald Denny; "The Yukon Trail," by William McLeod Raine, with House Peters; "The Quest of Joan," by James Oliver Curwood, with House Peters, directed by Lynn Reynolds; Laura La Plante in "Brides Will Be Brides," by Lucille Van Slyke; the same star in "A Savage in Silks," by Winifred Eatron Reeve; Hoot Gibson in "Cow Jerry," by Arthur Stringer, directed by Lynn Reynolds; Mary Philbin in "The Rosary," by Florence Barclay, directed by Svend Gade; and Jean Hersholt in "The Old Soak," by Don Marquis.

"Nervous Wreck" Is Christie Special

"THE NERVOUS WRECK" will be an Al Christie special for next season's schedule of releases and will be produced some time this coming Spring, according to an announcement from the Christie Film Company.

Owing to the long preparation necessary for the transferring of "The Nervous Wreck" to the screen and the necessity of casting the production carefully, filming will not be undertaken at once but will be done in time to release the production next fall as a big special heading the Christie feature program for the season of 1926-7.

It will be remembered that "The Nervous Wreck" was one of the catchiest stage plays produced in recent years. The hilarious comedy produced by the situation of the hero, a big pill taker from Philadelphia, who goes out to Arizona to die in peace, there meeting with prodigious he-man adventures, registered so well on the stage that the play ran for a solid year at the Sam Harris Theatre in New York and for almost the same period at the Majestic Theatre in Los Angeles. At the present time road companies are doing big business with the play throughout the United States and abroad and an enormous number of stock rights have been sold.

The story of "The Nervous Wreck" in its book form has been republished by Grosset and Dunlap and its current sales have reached huge figures. All of which points to great expectations from the film version by the Christie organization.

At the present time F. McGrew Willis of the Christie scenario staff is preparing a tentative screen treatment of the Owen Davis play. Willis did the adaptation last year of "Charley's Aunt" for Al Christie and has recently been assisting in the preparation of other Christie pictures and "The Million Dollar Handicap" from the novel "Thoroughbreds" for Metropolitan Pictures.

Al Christie states that a thorough search of the industry is now being made for the most likely candidate to play the feature role of "The Nervous Wreck."

Janet Gaynor, Fox Player, Is Wampas Star

A NEW star now shines on the Fox Films lot. She is Janet Gaynor, delightful young screen personality chosen by the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertising, or the Wampas, as one of the thirteen baby stars. She portrays the role of Ann Burger in Fox Films' realistic production of one of the world's most appealing calamities, "The Johnstown Flood."

Miss Gaynor has not "been due to arrive" at all. In fact, her screen experience is not of great length. It is only a short time ago that the fine little actress appeared for the first time in front of the clicking camera for a salary unbelievably small. Her fate seemed no different from that of hundreds of young girls who trek to Hollywood to win immortal fame "in the movies." True, she possibly had no chance to bring forth her masterful command of emotion.

When Director Irving Cummings set to work casting the various role in "The Johnstown Flood," it was agreed by Fox Films executives that a new face would grace the part of Ann Burger. Applicants from Hollywood came by the hundreds. Tests were made, viewed and more tests filmed. Then came Miss Gaynor.

When the director completed the test of the actress, he moved as if by magic, neglecting to finish testing others who stood waiting.

The test was hurriedly developed and printed for exhibition of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Films. Miss Gaynor was at once signed to a long term contract with the prospect of becoming one of the chosen few to glisten brightly in the films.

To Aid Samuel Goldwyn

Joseph Hergesheimer, novelist, has arrived in Hollywood to collaborate with the Samuel Goldwyn organization in the writing of an original story for the screen.

While nothing definite has yet been decided upon, it is understood that an exotic love drama is to be written by the author from an out-of-the-ordinary conception of his own, and from ideas suggested by Henry King, director, and Frances Marion, scenario writer.

"Laugh Month" Material

By Charles Edward Hastings

"We Have No Argument Against Features," P. A. Parsons Tells Philadelphia Showmen

WE have no argument against features. They are necessary. But so is the short subject necessary."

Thus P. A. Parsons, Advertising Director of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., drove home his argument in favor of greater recognition of the short feature in his address, on Friday, December 11, before a meeting of exhibitors in the Philadelphia territory, called at the invitation of Frank Buhler, Managing Director of the many theatres in the chain of the Stanley Company of America, Inc. Mr. Parsons "explained" NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH.

"Our argument," Mr. Parsons contended, "is against the unfairness of a practice that over-emphasizes the feature to the point of exclusion of mention of the short subject."

In part, Mr. Parsons said:

"The day of the short subject is here.

"One of the trade papers said the other day that the short subject has come back. As a matter of fact it has never been away, in the affections of the public, particularly among the juveniles, who undoubtedly prefer the short comedy to any other branch of product.

"I predict with confidence that 1926 will be the greatest year for comedies this business has yet seen, and that the backbone of the comedy entertainment during the year will be the big little two-reel comedy.

What It's All About

"We have no argument against features. They are necessary. But so is the short subject necessary. Exhibitors, even those who have been devoting their entire advertising space to their feature, have recognized the importance of the short subject by selecting 'balanced programs' in which the short subject has an important place. Our argument is against the unfairness of a practice that over-emphasizes the feature to the point of exclusion of the mention of the short subject. The words 'and a comedy,' put down in the corner of an ad devoted entirely to the feature is neither giving the comedy a square deal nor is it encouraging the producer to improve his comedies. Furthermore, as an advertising man, I question whether such casual and insignificant mention has any advertising value at all. Why not mention names and titles, and get the benefit of the draw they have?

"It was to correct this situation that the advertising, publicity and exploitation men connected with those companies concerned with the distribution of short subjects, together with several men connected with the Short Subject departments of those companies, met informally this last spring and discussed ways and means by which the short subject could get a fair break, and the advertising mention by exhibitors to which it is entitled.

P. A. PARSONS

"These conferences were continued throughout the summer. As the result of them the Short Features Advertising Association was founded a few weeks ago. The purpose of this association is to encourage the advertising of short subjects by exhibitors through proving to them that it is profitable.

First Official Act

"The first official act of the association was to inaugurate January, 1926, as Laugh Month.

"Now there is something in the very thought of Laugh Month that appeals to everybody. Other movements of the sort have sounded selfish. 'Buy an apple a day during December,' 'This is diamond week, buy one,' 'Have you had your iron today?' —all these have a selfish sound, since there is the direct appeal to buy something. On the face of them some one profits. In this thought of Laugh Month, no one is directly invited to spend money; but you theatre men are going to be the ones to get the most benefit because you are the best organized of all businesses to tie up to it and supply the laughter which means dollars to you and satisfaction and word-of-mouth advertising from the public.

"Laugh Month is a big proposition. It is wide in scope. The book publisher with humorous books, the newspaper with its comic strip, the legitimate theatre with its comedy —all can profit by it and many will. They are welcome. The more they advertise Laugh Month and mention it, even though in connection with their own product, the more you men will benefit. When big newspapers like the New York World and the Chicago Tribune give Laugh Month a play as they are doing, you may know that the idea is good.

Amazing Reception

"The reception of the idea has been really amazing. Approval has been general. The comic strip men have taken to it wholeheartedly. Columnists are mentioning it. So far as the committee can, in the time at its disposal, it is getting to the newspaper and magazine men who can help us in getting over the idea, and they have been most generous in their approval and their support. We have made the breach in the dam, and the flood which is breaking through is going to sweep over the country. Unless all signs fail many persons to whom laughter is a stranger are going to get the habit during January. We may assume that having found laughter so good they will make it a point to get their weekly dozen of laughs in your theatres during the rest of the year.

"The benefits of Laugh Month can only come to those who go after them. The exhibitor who sits back expecting that Laugh Month is going to do it all for him is going to be disappointed. What good will it do him if he has the finest two-reel comedy ever made, in his theatre, if he doesn't let the public know he's got it? The well known words, 'and a comedy,' stuck down in the corner of his newspaper advertisements won't do it. The way to capitalize on good two-reel comedies is to come right and mention stars, brands and titles.

Advertising the Comedy

"Is the two-reel comedy worth advertising? It certainly is. Personally, I am of the opinion that the best brands of two-reel comedies today are actually of better quality than the average run of features, and by that I do not mean the so-called 'program' feature. Is assert there has been a bigger advance in the quality of the better two-reel comedies during the past two years than is apparent in any other kind of product. If they are so good, and you must admit they are, why not let the public know about them? You men are showmen. You know the importance of getting the utmost in revenue from your houses. Why not make use then of the last ounce of draw you've got in your programs, and take advantage of the definite popularity of certain brands of short comedies? Why advertise only part of your show? Why not advertise all of it? .

"The Keith-Albee Vaudeville Circuit does just that very thing. They advertise every act on their bills. People don't go to their houses just to see the headline act but every act. They pay to see the whole show and want to see it. This advertising policy of the Keith-Albee people pays, as their success shows.

Lloyd and Chaplin, Examples

"Harold Lloyd and Charlie Chaplin starred in two-reel comedies before they became feature comedy stars. Did they only become great after they went into feature comedies? The history of the business says no. Each was a big draw as a two-reel comedy star and if any exhibitor anywhere did not advertise those stars when he played them in short comedies there's a whole lot of money in the country that could have been his that didn't go his way.

"Just remember this, also. The big feature comedy stars of tomorrow are now playing in your houses in short comedies. I don't think any one in this theatre wants to be in the position at some future time of saying 'Just to think that I played so and so in two-reelers and never gave him a line of advertising!'

"The situation in this respect is improving. Advertising by exhibitors on two-reel comedies is increasing as the experience of Pathe proves. Pathe gives to an exhibitor playing a Pathe comedy a free advertising mat on that comedy, of a size that can be slipped into the corner of his regular newspaper ad. For the first month the average distribution of those free mats was only 50 per comedy. Today, six months later, the number has jumped to 1,500 and it is still going up. Other comedy distributors are having the same experience."

The Prize Contest

Mr. Parsons then spoke of the Prize Contest, and gave the rules and conditions. He also showed samples of the Laugh Month posters, banners and pennants.

Stanley B. Waite, manager of the Two-Reel Department of Pathe, was then introduced and spoke briefly. In part, he said:

"If, by properly presenting attractive programs in which comedy subjects appear and properly exploiting such programs the exhibitors secure one additional admission per week from every ten of their regular patrons, it will mean that Laugh Month nationally will bring in excess box-office receipts of one million dollars per week.

"The average weekly attendance at moving picture theatres is 50,000,000 persons at a conservative estimate, and if one-tenth of these can be induced, through the exploitation of Laugh Month, to go to one more show each week, it will mean five million additional admissions to the theatres of the country. Figured on an average of 20 cents per admission, this will mean $1,000,000. You can figure for yourselves just what this increased business would amount to for your houses.

"Laugh Month will mean to the exhibitors just exactly what they make it mean."

The meeting was held in the Aldine Theatre, attended by one hundred and twenty-five managers of the Stanley Theatres and a representation of exhibitors of the territory. Also present were the managers of the Educational, F. B. O., Fox, Pathe and Universal local branches, and Charles Henschel, District Manager of Pathe.

Mr. Buhler in the Chair

Mr. Buhler presided at the meeting, and awarded "The Exhibitor" cup to Lou Williams, manager of the Family Theatre, for the best exploitation campaign on a short subject. Mr. Buhler directed the attention of the theatre men to the benefits of "Laugh Month" as a means to get additional attendance throughout January by playing up comedy entertainment. He stated that, to a theatre-man, Laugh Month is a sales proposition. It gives him a chance to sell the public a form of entertainment that could not help but be beneficial. It gives him a chance to build better business by an idea which is a good one, and is capable of being made a big proposition. Speaking for himself, he added, he welcomes a sales proposition such as this. He said he is for it, and the Stanley Theatres are for it. He requested particularly the distributors of short comedies to see to it that the comedies for Laugh Month, as well as every other month, are of a kind that the whole family can see—such pictures as the Stanley theatres can show without any embarrassment. He assured those present that the Stanley Co. is committed to the policy of clean pictures only.

Mr. Parsons was then introduced. He was followed by Mr. Waite. Mr. Buhler then called upon Eli M. ("Emo") Orowitz, associate editor of "The Exhibitor," the Philadelphia "regional." Mr. Orowitz spoke of Laugh Month as a great idea, urged every exhibitor in the Quaker City area to get behind it, and pledged his assistance in getting the idea to the public through his radio broadcast chats every Tuesday night at 10:05 o'clock through Station WIP, in Philadelphia.

Again First—in A New Field

THE proposal to set aside a month, during which Short Features would be given special play in Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation, emanated from Moving Picture World.

From the beginning of the campaign, to date, Moving Picture World has thrown its pages open to the National Laugh Month Committee publishing MANY FULL PAGES of helpful material.

It follows that Moving Picture World is squarely back of the "National Laugh Month" campaign, and will remain, throughout 1926, SQUARELY BACK OF SHORT FEATURES!

* * * *

Beginning with this issue (and continuing until "National Laugh Month" has passed) Moving Picture World substitutes "Laugh Month" material for its regular short subjects department, in order to permit showmen to turn directly to these pages for the news and exploitation helps on "Laugh Month."

Full information regarding ALL SHORT SUBJECT MATTER, will be found in "Laugh Month Material," including short subject reviews and "Straight From the Shoulder, Jr."

Since the inauguration of Moving Picture World's enlarged short subject department, under the heading, "Little Pictures With the Big Punch," its development has been truly remarkable. Producers and distributors of short subjects have taken full advantage of this special service. They refer to it as "one of the World's Best Bets."

A greater amount of space has been devoted to short subjects in this department since its inception than in any similar department in any other trade paper. THE DEPARTMENT IS STILL GROWING.

Theatres Throughout America Give Assurance of Their Full Support of Laugh Month Plans

The exhibitors of the country are solidly behind the National Laugh Month campaign, as attested by the veritable avalanche of replies being received from all over the nation.

During the past week hundreds of letters have been received by the committee in charge, assuring wholehearted co-operation in the movement on the part of theatre-owners and managers.

A partial list of the theatres which have expressed their readiness to co-operate in the National Laugh Month movement follows:

The Liberty, Parsons, Kansas; the Best, Parsons, Kansas; Crystal, Atchison, Kansas; Royal, Atchison, Kansas; Lynn, Breeneville, Missouri; Orpheum, Colonial, and the Royal, at St. Joseph, Missour; Auditorium, Marshall, Mo.; Star, Nevada, Mo.; De Graw, Brooke-

Fox Executive Suggests Showmen Try Experiment

NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH, to be observed in motion picture theatres all over the United States in January, will afford exhibitors a wonderful opportunity to test the actual box-office value of short comedies, according to Fred C. Quimby, short subjects sales manager of Fox Films.

Accordingly he has arranged a series of all short subject programs, each designed to give the widest possible range of entertainment, with comedy, of course, as the chief factor.

"The National Laugh Month committee believes," said Mr. Quimby, "that every exhibitor should run at least one program each week during Laugh Month composed of all short subjects, and we feel sure that, with proper advertising and exploitation, the experiment will prove a real box-office success. For instance, let us say that the average picture theatre offers a seven-reel program. Ordinarily this would include a five-reel feature with perhaps a short comedy, one or two reels in length, and a news or pictorial reel.

"I suggest that, as a special program for Laugh Month, the exhibitor try the experiment of eliminating the regular feature and build his program entirely of short films. With the national publicity campaign which has been going on for weeks and which will continue all through the month of January, the public already knows that it is to be an all-comedy affair.

"In order to carry out the spirit of National Laugh Month, I believe that a seven-reel program should include at least four reels of comedy. For instance, here is a sample program which may be varied to suit the individual needs of any exhibitor:

"My Own Carolina;" one reel; scenic.

"The Big Game Hunter;" two reels; Van Bibber comedy.

"With Pencil, Brush and Chisel," one reel; Novelty.

"A Cloudy Romance," two reels; Imperial comedy.

"Fox News," one reel; Pictorial news.

"This, of course, is offered merely as a suggestion. Each exhibitor may lay out his program as he likes, with variety as the keynote of the entertainment. Fox Films will be glad to co-operate with exhibitors who use Fox product in arranging appropriate programs for National Laugh Month—and I might add that our comedy releases for January are the best we have ever made. Not only are they funnier than most short comedies, but they are produced on a scale that compares favorably with many feature productions. In addition we have prepared posters in full color, unusually attractive lobby displays, advertising cuts and, in fact, everything exhibitors need to put National Laugh Month over with a real smash.

"The Committee feels sure that every exhibitor who tries the experiment of an all-short subject program will realize more than ever before the reel box-office value of good short comedies. However, we suggest that every one take advantage of the laugh month publicity campaign by a tieup in his own advertising."

Five Big Bookings On Screen Snapshots

The Columbia Pictures Corporation's screen snapshots which reveal motion picture stars at work and at play, has been contracted for by the De Luxe Film Co., for Philadelphia, New Jersey and Delaware, and by the Exhibitors Film Exchanges, for Maryland, District of Columbia, by the Lande Film Co., for the Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory, by the American Booking Corporation, for the east of Michigan, and also by the Capitol Film Exchange for the territory of Northern Illinois and Indiana.

See End of Slapstick in Fox Comedies Based on O'Henry Novels

ECHOES have been heard in Washington of the success established by the Fox two-reel comedies based on O. Henry stories. The following excerpts are offered from a long review on a short subject, written by Charles A. McMahon of the N. C. W. C. News Service.

"One of the most frequent complaints against motion picture exhibitions," writes Mr. McMahon, "is the showing in connection with feature pictures of so-called comedy films, which for the most part are a travesty of the American sense of humor. With very few exceptions, film manufacturers have dismally failed in this direction. For the greater number of screen comedies are of the cheap, slapstick variety, often bordering on the vulgar, manifesting no cleverness and proving exceedingly uninteresting and boresome.

"But there have been some exceptions to this all too common situation, and it is pleasant to note that the Fox company has come forward with a series of two-reel comedies that may mark the end of the slapstick era in screen comedies. The Fox company will release during 1925-26 eight screen versions of as many gems of fiction by that inimitable and characteristically American humorist, O. Henry. The first of these—'Shoes'—has already been shown and two others—'Transients in Arcadia' and 'Failure' are ready for release.

"'Shoes' is a typical O. Henry tale, delightfully humorous, that loses none of its sparkle or punch in the filming process.

"'Stick to the Story' has been the guiding slogan of the director, Daniel Keefe, in adapting the O. Henry story. If his future efforts are as successful as the 'Shoes' release, O. Henry admirers will have occasion to extend him a vote of thanks.

"O. Henry proved that humor could be entertaining without being cheap or vulgar. O. Henry's freshness of style, keen characterization and penetrating knowledge of human nature, combined with his keen, scintillating humor, place him in the foremost rank of American short story writers. Fox Films deserves credit for bringing his delightful work to the screen. Because of O. Henry's great popularity, the most extensive patronage of movie-goers may be expected."

M. J. COHEN, MANAGER of the Merced Theatre, Merced, Cal., in a tie-up with the Sun-Star, put over the opening episode of the Pathe serial, "Sunken Silver," through a hunt for buried treasure. Captain Kidd, Long John Silver, and other noted pirates, led the kids around town to the vacant lots, where coins and theatre tickets were hidden. The pirate ballyhooers and many of the treasure-seekers carried banners telling what the "stunt" was all about.

Red Seal Booking Fast

Despite the natural tendency for a falling off in the show business about the time of the Christmas and New Year holidays, Red Seal Pictures discovers that business for them has been picking up and that their short features in general, especially their three holiday featurettes, "A Little Friend of All the World," made by Bray; "Ko-Ko in Toyland," an Out of the Inkwell made by Max Fleischer; and "The Magic Hour," made by Cranfield and Clarke, are being booked by the biggest theatres in the country.

Fox All-Comedy Program Makes Strong Appeal to the Reviewers

THE innovation of an all-comedy program, arranged by Fox Films as a special feature for National Laugh Month, proved an instant hit with reviewers who witnessed a pre-release showing recently. The program was one of the regular weekly Fox showings at the home office.

The purpose of the program, it was explained, was to demonstrate the feasibility of an all-short subject show to exhibitors. It was eight reels in length, including three two-reel comedies, a Fox Variety and the current release of Fox News and so diversified was the entertainment that several declared the absence of a full-length feature was not noticeable.

The subjects shown were "Cupid a la Carte," the latest of the O. Henry releases; "His Own Lawyer," fourth of the Helen and Warren married life series; "The Flying Fool," an Imperial Comedy; "The Iron Trail Around the World," a Fox variety, and Fox News.

The reviewers found all three of the comedies easy to laugh at and "Cupid a la Carte," especially brought genuine howls of mirth. The unusual freedom from the usual comedy situations occasioned much favorable comment, as did also the elaborateness of production, several of the sets being as costly as those generally to be found only in full-length features. It was the general opinion of the reviewers that Fox has established a new standard for two-reel comedies in these films and it was also predicted that National Laugh Month will bring to the short film the recognition it really deserves.

Newspaper Feature Syndicates Join in Boosting "Laugh Month"

EXCEPTIONAL support to Laugh Month is being given by the various newspaper feature syndicates, the Short Features Advertisers' Association reports.

Arrangements have been completed whereby the various columnists, editorial writers, cartoonists and other special feature syndicates, are to devote special attention to the Laugh Month idea and to work in references and boost for it wherever possible.

An example of the wholehearted support Laugh Month is getting from these syndicates is the varied Laugh Month activities now being undertaken by the King Features Syndicate. From fifteen to twenty columnists of this service are to make Laugh Month a feature in one of more of their articles.

Two special Laugh Month poems have been written and soon will appear in newspapers all over the country. The King syndicate is going even further in its support of the Laugh Month idea. It is sending out a special broadside on Laugh Month to all the newspapers it serves, calling attention to the wide-spread benefits of the movement and calling upon each editor for liberal support.

At Omaha, Nebraska, the Rialto, the Strand, the Hamilton, and the North Star have fallen in line.

Iowa is also heavily represented among the Laugh Month boosters, with the following theatres taking their places alongside of the houses and circuits previously heard from: at Sioux City, the Princess, the Hipp, and the Tivoli; the Broadway, Council Bluffs; the Casino and Majestic of Missouri Valley; the Royal, LeMare; the American, Cherokee; the Rialto at Boone; the Rialto, Burlington; the Strand and Rialto, Clinton; the Capitol and Garden, Davenport; at Iowa City, the Englert and the Garden; the Strand, Marshalltown; the Palace, Mason City; at Newton, the Rialto; at Fort Dodge, the Majestic and the Rialto; the Fort Armstrong and Spencer Square, Rock Island, Illinois; the Strand and Crystal at Waterloo, Ia.; the Grand, Dubuque; the Twin Star, Aimes; the Royal, Carroll; the Plaza and Rialto, at Waterloo; and the Grand at Oelwein. The Strand, the Capitol, and Rialto of Des Moines have undertaken plans to participate in a very active way.

The Denver Section

From Denver, Colo., word was received by the Laugh Month Committee during the past week that the following theatres of that city have pledged their active co-operation in promoting January as Laugh Month: Rialto Theatre, Victory, Colorado, America, State, Isis, Palace, and Colonial.

The Laugh Month Committe has also been assured of the active co-operation of the following exhibitors: Fred J. Campbell, manager of Keith's Rialto, Louisville; Howard McCoy, manager of Keith's Majestic, Louisville; Sam Switow, manager of the Kentucky, Louisville; Earl E. Payne, manager of the Kentucky, Lexington; Tony Sudekum, manager of the Crescent Amusement Company, Nashville; W. C. Drumbar, manager of the Riveria, Knoxville; G. M. Pedley, manager of the Empress, Owensboro; Leo F. Keiler, manager of the Arcade, Paducah; Ray Frankel, manager of the Temple, Newport; S. L. Martin, manager of the Grand, Ashland; Mose Klein, manager of Lillian, Clarksville and Godfrey Kotzen, manager of the Lyric, Covington.

THE chief prognosticators of our industry said this was going to be a season of comedy. Probably none of them foresaw just how thoroughly their predictions would be fulfilled. Comedy, without doubt, will soon predominate all motion picture entertainment.

The advance of all Short Features has kept pace with the great strides made by Comedy this season. The tremendous momentum with which the Laugh Month movement is going forward is striking testimony to the bigger place that comedies and all Short Features occupy in the plans of exhibitors, both as to the building of programs and their exploitation.

Isn't it significant that in the same season when this trend in picture entertainment is so pronounced, theatre development and theatre building are setting new and staggering records?

Here is a thought that should fill us all with gratitude as the Old Year draws to a close, and inspire us to begin the New Year with renewed faith and increased confidence in the future of Motion Picture Entertainment.

Imperial Comedies

Fox Films Completes Two More Laugh Makers for "Laugh Month"

Fox Films has just finished two new Imperial Comedies and promptly placed them on the schedule for National Laugh Month. "Officer of the Day," first production of the new directorial team consisting of Max Gold and Andrew Bennison, is scheduled for January 10.

Heading the cast is Eugenia Gilbert, the beautiful young woman who won the Valentino Beauty contest and second place in the "Miss America" contest held in Atlantic City. Harold Goodwin is the leading man and Brooks Benedict who was the villain in Harold Lloyd's "The Freshman," plays a similar role in "Officer of the Day."

"A Flaming Affair," the first two reeler produced by Lex Neal on joining the Fox staff after leaving the Buster Keaton lot, is scheduled for January 24. Sid Smith is hilarious in the leading role, and the lovely Consuela Dawn is the heroine. Joseph Belmont portrays a fire chief, and Rodney Hildebrand is a brave firefighter.

New Interest in "Evolution"

Interest has been revived in Red Seal's five reel production of "Evolution," according to President Edwin Miles Fadman, who reports that bookings on this novelty have been increasing during the past few weeks. "When the Dayton, Tennessee, trial was concluded," Fadman explained, "our bookings dropped off a bit, due partially to the warm weather, of course. But of late, stimulated by the interest in this subject on the part of newspapers and the public in general, has made many exhibitors wake up to its money making possibilities."

"In the Air" Started

Production of "In the Air," a Joe Rock-Standard Comedy featuring screenland's heavyweight fun trio, "Fat" Karr, "Kewpie" Ross and "Fatty" Alexander, has been started under the direction of George "Slim" Summerville. Replete with new and unusual gags, the story, it is said, is the best comedy material Rock has ever employed in one of his Standard productions. Lois Boyd, "the typical American girl of the screen," will play opposite the trio of rotund comedians.

"FRAMED!"—A PICTURE worthy of the title with Lloyd Hamilton tacking on the laughs in his usual Hamilton-Educational style.

Roach Comedy and "Sportlight" Head Pathe List for Dec. 27

HIGHLIGHTS of the Pathe short-feature program for the week of December 27 are "Flaming Flappers," a Glenn Tryon two-reel comedy produced by Hal Roach and "Fins and Feathers," a novelty Grantland Rice "Sportlight." Other screen attractions listed for this date are "On the Storm King Road," the fourth chapter of the Patheserial "The Green Archer;" "Noah and His Troubles"; one of the "Aesop's Film Fables"; "Topics of the Day," the reel of laughs from the world press; Pathe Review No. 52, screen magazine; and two issues of Pathe News.

"Flaming Flappers" is a very modern fun concoction based upon happenings of the times. Glenn Tryon is the star of this Hal Roach two-reeler which Fred. L. Guiol directed. Tyron is supported by Jimmy Finlayson. Tyler Brooke, Charlotte Mineau, Yvonne Howell, Sue "Bugs" O'Neill and Sally Long.

"Fins and Feathers" is one of Grantland Rice's most entertaining "Sportlights," revealing thrilling scenes of fishing and hunting that all sports lovers will revel in. The scenes were taken in various sections of the United States.

Pathe Review No. 52 features the one and only Annette Kellerman in demonstration of her prowess as a dancer. The multiple-action made by the "process-camera" provides both merriment and wonder. "Yale" of the new series "American Colleges in Pathecolor" another subject of this issue, which also includes "The Triangle," one of the "Makin's of an Artist" series by Hy Mayer.

"Noah and His Troubles" is a mirthful animated cartoon of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series. "Topics of the Day" and two issues of Pathe News complete the December 27 program announced by Pathe.

Red Seal Release Schedule Increases 600% in Year

RED SEAL PICTURES CORPORATION, today, at the end of 1925 is able to boast of a wonderful growth since 1924, both in the amount of product being released, and in the number of bookings achieved during the same period. This growth has been accomplished firmly and solidly under President Edwin Miles Fadman's able guidance.

The previous year Red Seal released but twenty-six featurettes. The present year's schedule calls for one hundred and forty one reel releases. The year of the twenty-six releases saw only one hundred and fifty theatres booking the Red Seal product. Yet 1925 ends with three thousand houses, all over the country, most of which are first run or very large theatres, already playing such series as the Marcus "Animated Hair Cartoons," "Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes," "Gems of the Screen," "Out of the Inkwells," "Marvels of Motion," "Searchlights," "Film Facts," and "Reelviews."

"Our Growth," Fadman states, "is the normal response to the demands of the exhibitors and public for short subjects of the better sort. Our subjects, no matter how picturesque or scientific, never fail to be simple and thoroughly human. As a result of releasing featurettes which even a child may comprehend without any difficulty, we have obtained an artistic sense of simplicity which has given these short features a broad and really world-wide appeal. As a result, we have distribution throughout the entire world through such international agents as Pathe in Great Britain, I. V. T. A. in South Africa, Gaumont in Paris, UFA in Germany, and Metro-Goldwyn in a number of other parts of the globe.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

"Buster's Nightmare"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

EVERY bit as big a laugh-getter as the earlier issues of the Buster Brown comedies which are being produced by Century for Universal is "Buster's Nightmare." Arthur Trimble as Buster and Pete the dog as Tige, share in the honors with the dog possibly getting a shade the best of it because of the clever and really remarkable things he does. First, Buster throws baseballs at Tige, whose head is sticking through a hole in a sheet; the butler investigates and gets a crack on the head meant for Tige. Buster hides in a trunk and his brother bores a hole through the trunk and pulls off Buster's pants. Mary Jane comes and the children are left alone. They start to make bread and mess up the kitchen. Tige gets locked in the refrigerator and freezes solid then thaws out in the stove and afterwards gets his feet covered with dough. The parrot gets caught in a sheet and the kids think it is a ghost; a lot of funny things happen, including strange animals that pass across the walls. After turning over and breaking furniture and vases and becoming thoroughly scared the children are glad to see Buster's mother return. These two reels are filled with stunts, gags and fast-moving comedy that is sure to please both young and old and should prove a welcome attraction in all classes of theatres.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Magic Hour"

(Red Seal—Novelty—One Reel)

AS this Cranfield and Clark Gem of the Screen deals with kiddies and toys, while its use is not confined to the Christmas holidays, it is particularly appropriate for this season. The idea behind this reel is the power of imagination of the childish mind to make reality out of make-believe. A little boy is awakened by his big teddy bear, they play with toy soldiers and a toy castle and in imagination see a real battle ending with the capture and destruction of the castle. The toy figures are all animated and the battle is pictures. This idea is carried out in a scene where the lad and his bear mount a lounge and take a trip on the Twentieth Century limited. A toy aeroplane furnishes the pair with an opportunity to take a trip by the imagination route to the home of a witch, from which they are glad to escape and return home to bed. A pleasing subject for the little ones.—C. S. Sewell.

"A Peaceful Riot"

(F. B. O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

SLIM SUMMERVILLE is the featured comedian in this two-reeler produced by Joe Rock for Standard Cinema Corporation and released through F. B. O., with Alice Ardell in the leading feminine role. The comedy situations are built around the girl who is the rightful heir to the throne of a mythical kingdom. As she is pursued by the unwelcome prime minister she flees in disguise and meets Slim, a salior, who suceeds in vanquishing the army and marrying the princess. There are some amusing situations in this burlesque and it should prove fairly entertaining.—C. S. Sewell.

"His Own Lawyer"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

THERE is a novel little plot to this issue of the "Married Life of Helen and Warren" series, and it has been handled in such a snappy way that it should register as amusing and pleasing entertainment for the majority. Helen's sister and her boisterous husband and mischievous child plant themselves on Helen and Warren for a long stay. Friend husband inveigles Warren into a speakeasy which is raided, he is caught and gives Warren's name and Warren is arrested and taken to court. Helen and her sister come in and Warren amazes the court by acting as if he were pleading a case instead of defending himself. The situation is saved by the appearance of the hostess of the speakeasy who brings a package containing the trousers of the judge who lost them in attempting to get away from the cops.—C. S. Sewell.

"Tol'able Romeo"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

KATHERINE GRANT has the leading role in this Hal Roach single-reeler for Pathe. The film opens with what is apparently a park scene with an odd lot of characters occupying the benches, including a Shakesperian actor and a blundering chap who is always getting in Dutch. Suddenly it develops that this was all a stage setting and the action is in a theatre. The blunderer finds the background has been changed and he is in a beautiful room. Incurring the enmity of the manager he is bombarded with sand bags from the flies, but they miss him and hit the leading lady. Has some amusing moments and is mildly humorous but the idea is somewhat vague and rather confusing.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Flying Fool"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

A THOROUGHLY amusing stunt and slapstick comedy is this, the newest offering from William Fox under the Imperial brand, featuring Sid Smith. Sid finds himself at a disadvantage with the daughter of an aeroplane inventor as his rival is an aviator. To impress her, he agrees to fly in her father's experimental plane. So confident is his rival that the machine will not fly that he agrees to teach him aviation. Poor Sid has a fierce time going through the "ground work" in a gymnasium fitted with all kinds of "torture" devices to spin him around and turn him upside down to get used to the motion of the machine. Surviving this he gets in the machine, which takes the air backward. He makes it do stunts according to instructions by radio. The dial accidentally gets turned in on a class receiving gymnastic instructions and he has the plane doing all sorts of impossible and unheard of stunts. Finally the rival takes the girl aloft and runs into Sid's machine, which falls. The girl comes down in a parachute and Sid saves her as she is being carried over a cliff. There are a lot of ingenious stunts in this number which are good for a number of chuckles and it should prove thoroughly entertaining for slapstick fans. One of the brightest and best of this series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Felix the Cat At The Rainbow's End"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS is one of the best of the recent series of Felix the Cat cartoons. Not only is it as amusing as usual, but it has a good idea well handled. Felix sees a rainbow, climbs on it and walks to the end where he gets the pot of gold and finds himself in Fairyland where Jill and several other female characters of the story books follow him. A witch steals his gold and a good fairy tells him she will get it back for him. He chases a giant, plants chewing gum in his pathway and finally gets the giant's shoes which he gives to "The old woman who lived in a shoe and had so many children she did not know what to do." For this, he gets back his bag of gold. There are several amusing touches and a good moral here. It should entertain any type of audience and please the kiddies. Appropriate for the Christmas holidays.—C. S. Sewell.

"Cupid a la Carte"

(Fox—Comedy Drama—Two Reels)

HERE is another Fox two-reeler presenting an adaptation of one of O. Henry's bright and amusing stories. This time, the heroine is a girl who runs a lunch wagon at a railroad junction. The hero, a brakeman, falls in love with her and so does his father, the superintendent who is always eating and Mame is an excellent cook. He hires her for his private car. Both father and son prepare for the wedding with Mame, sure that they will be accepted, but she slips off and marries the superintendent's secretary and it turns out that she is really the daughter of the president of the road. Many will not be able to guess the usual O. Henry surprise elements which provides a good punch. A pleasing subject that offers thoroughly good entertainment for the masses.—C. S. Sewell.

"Hotsy Totsy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS Mack Sennett Comedy is the newest of the series starring pretty Alice Day, who appears as a clerk in a department store. No attempt has been made to tell a smooth connected story, rather is it a series of loosely connected situations touching the high-spots, and built up with ingenious gags and slapstick. First there is a bouquet with funny happenings among the guests, in which a big cat figures prominently, and Alice appears on the scene to deliver a loving cup to her employer. She drops sardines in her shoe and is followed around by a lot of kittens. One clever and amusing shot shows a black cat trying to get into her slipper which it pushes along the ground. This is good for a laugh anywhere. There is a lot of fun in the store. In one situation Alice accidently stands over a stocking form and seems to have three legs. There are some good laughs in the sequences where the detectives hold up shoplifters and take everything from cash registers to cook stoves from under their clothes. A monkey, a firework's explosion and other comedy devices add to the merriment and make this a good example of slapstick comedy for the multitude.—C. S. Sewell.

"A Parisian Knight"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

ANOTHER offering in the new series of Van Bibber comedies based on Richard Harding Davis' stories and featuring Earle Foxe. As usual, Van is aided by Lady Luck in winning out against seemingly insuperable odds. This chapter shows Van in Paris with his friends. A child is kidnapped and the French police hearing of Van's exploits request his aid in locating the kiddie. Van seeks to leave town but his friends insist that they visit an Apache cafe. He gets mixed up in a free-for-all battle, dresses in woman's clothes and is made to act as an aid for a knife-throwing act. Escaping, he is seized by the kidnappers who make him quiet the stolen child. He manages to get away and amazes the police by appearing in female disguise with the child. He is hailed as a "marvelous" detective. Fast-moving action and plenty of amusing situations make this a good number of this series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Captain Suds"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

EDDIE GORDON is the featured player in this Century Comedy distributed through Universal, appearing as a young man who is much abused by his stepmother and made to wash clothes and then is abused by his big rival when he calls on his girl. As usual Eddie has some good acrobatic stunts, one being where he is seen lying in a hammcok. When it is cut from under him he remains on a single strand of rope. There is considerable slapstick including the strangling of Eddie by his rival and a burlesque fight in which he wins through the timely aid of a spectator bouncing a brick off of his rival's dome, and another amusing scene for the rough and tumble fans shows Eddie getting all covered with mud and then embracing his girl. This subject is of average amusement value containing quite a few laughs.—C. S. Sewell.

"Friend of All the World"

(Red Seal—Christmas Special—One Reel)

THIS product of the Bray studios prettily illustrates the beautiful spirit of Christmas in its effect on the childish heart. A mother tells her little son of the woodland folks who are without friends. Early Christmas morning he arises and taking his own Chritmas goodies goes out over the snow into the woods and gives them all away to the little wild creatures who show no fear and come up and eat out of his hand. These include rabbits, squirrels, owls, a shy young deer and other animals and even a skunk. A story of charming sentiment which because of its beautiful idea will appeal to the big people, while the kiddies will enjoy the sight of the little fellow feeding the animals and birds.—C. S. Sewell.

"Pike's Pique"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

MYSTERIOUS automobile thefts furnish the idea on which Chapter 6 of the "Adventures of Mazie" are based. George, Mazie's boss accepts a car from Pike in payment of a bill, and is arrested as the car was stolen. Tripp, the detective, notifies Mazie who inveigles him to a Chinese restaurant where he is found and captured by George and the police after a chase across narrow ledges and over roof tops ending in a good fight. Mazie, of course proves the heroine of the occasion. Up to the standard of the series from the standpoint of action and humor, but Kit Guard of the famous comedy team is noticeable by his absence, Al Cooke handling this feature alone. He has an amusing but highly improbable fall from the ledge several floors landing on an awning and getting up unhurt.—C. S. Sewell.

"Tea for Toomey"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

A DISPUTE over a shipment of tea for an importer named Toomey furnishes the background for this number of "The Adventures of Mazie" series. The action involves crooked work on the part of the Chinese defendant who "kidnaps" the expert on whose testimony the case hinges. Mazie and her boss, the lawyer, trace the expert to the Chinese den and after a general mixup succeed in getting the witness in court in time to win the case. There is plenty of action and some bright amusing comedy and it is on a par with the previous chapters in this series. Should prove pleasing to the majority of patrons.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Iron Trail Around the World"

(Fox—Variety—One Reel)

FROM the days of the first dinky little locomotive to the tremendous one of today, and including scenes of railroading in the far corners of the globe, is the scope of this single reel Fox variety. There are shots of various types of steam engines and unique views of the big electric giants, also of quaint engines used in the out-of-the-way corners of the earth. Dogs are shown pulling a car on a railroad in the Arctic and for contrast there are views of railroading in the tropics. This little picture brings out strikingly the dependence of modern civilization upon transportation, that is, the railroads. It is highly entertaining and instructive and should appeal to all classes.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Leopard's Spots"

(F. B. O.—Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS issue of Bray's Unnatural History series released through F. B. O. details a wild yarn told by a suitor to his sweetheart's troublesome and inquisitive little brother. The cartoon pictures a monkey splashing mud on the jungle beasts and then directing them to a laundry where they can be cleaned up. Along comes a white leopard who proves not so docile as the others; he gets all splashed up with the mud which makes spots all over him and then not only turns on the monk, but in the end, is shown invading the room of the story-teller and mussing up everything including the chap, the girl and the little brother. An amusing little idea and a clever combination of cartoon work and photography.—C. S. Sewell.

"Love My Dog"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

AN AMUSING number of the series of "sweet sixteen" comedies made by Universal featuring Arthur Lake. This reel introduces a new girl as the object of Arthur and Eddie's affection. She is so fond of her dog that the boys gladly fall in with father's suggestion that they "lose" the mutt. After several vain attempts ending with the return of the dog each time, which are good for laughs, they "plant" in an auto. The girl is disconsolate and the boys try to find the dog, a doctor is called and when he opens his bag the dog jumps out. There are some good comedy touches such as the boys whitewashing a black mutt which loses its color in the bath. Well up to the standard of the series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Honeymoon Hotel"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

NEELY EDWARDS is cast as a chap who wins a bride from a rival suitor and then spends his honeymoon in a hotel. The rival throws shoes filled with concrete but gets the worst of it. The bride proves to be a sleepwalker and wanders through the rival's room. Neely, dreaming of bathing beauties, dives from bed and plunges downstairs through a hole he makes in the floor. The rival steals the hotel's cash box and accidentally gives it to the bride, but is caught by detectives. Neely finally handcuffs his bride to him and the two go back to sleep. An amusing lot of slapstick that moves at a good snappy pace and proves amusing. One of the best of this series.—C. S. Sewell.

Tennek Film Corporation Enters National Laugh Month Selling

THE TENNEK FILM CORPORATION, of No. 1540 Broadway, New York City, of which Kenneth Bishop is President, is crashing into National Laugh Month with an imposing array of two-reel and single reel offerings, which will go to the exhibitors through the State Rights channel.

The optimism of Mr. Bishop is shared by the personnel of the organization, and the State Right buyers throughout the various territories have reported to Jack Lustberg, Sales Manager for Tennek, that they are putting a big advertising campaign back of their Tennek short features.

As an example of the high class cast selected by Tennek for its comedies, it is pointed out that Stuart Holmes, Clara Horton, Sheldon Lewis, Eric Mayne and Bill Patton were cast for their first All-Star Comedy. This is an excellent two-reeler, designed to fill the requirements of "Laugh Month."

The first Layman Comedy has been completed with Gene Layman and Charles Doherty in the principal roles. This little feature is called "The Inventors," and gives the showman a fine insight of what the balance of this series will be.

The first Jungle Pictures, in which the producers have used the Selig wild animals, has been completed. This little feature has been produced in a manner to bring out strongly the dramatic values of wild animal pictures, and the producers lay great store on their estimate of this picture.

Hank Mann, who has signed with Tennek as one of the corporation's principal stars, is now at work in the studio on his first comedy, which will be a ripping two-reeler of the fast action type.

Chester Conklin is now in New York City to fill a special engagement of three weeks, after which he will hurry back to Hollywood and take up his work for the Tennek Corporation.

The first International Detective Story, "Lightning Strikes," will be the subject of wide attention when it is shown. This is a two-reeler featuring "Lightning," the Wonder Dog, and Eileen Sedgwick will have the principal feminine lead. The picture as shown in its completed state has won exceptional comment from the showmen. Al Nietz directed.

Tennek's first single reel novelty has been completed. It is called "Chuckles," and the finished print is on its way to New York.

The first of a series of travelogues has been released, and Tennek officials claimed an instant hit for this little feature, the New York Captol booking the single reel on its full-week program. The remaining issues in this series will be kept up to the high standard of the initial release. Special attention is being given to the cuttng and titling of the travelogue series.

"We have planned out a campaign to meet the requirements of National Laugh Month," Mr. Bishop said, "and prints of those features now ready have ben shipped to the State Right exchanges. We stand squarely back of our product, and will match it with any program of a like character anywhere in the country. We are extremely pleased to 'land' in the New York Capitol, and we feel that we can maintain this stride with some of our forthcoming offerings. The productions which I have seen, to date, make me believe that we have as fine a line-up as the buyer will find, at this time.

"We shall continue our 'All-Star Comedies' with names just as interesting as those now announced, and with Hank Mann and Chester Conklin, two established comedy stars, we are off to a splendid start. We have sold the foreign rights to our products 100 per cent, and when Mr. Lustberg takes to the road next week on his sales trip, he will have a great deal of valuable booking material to discuss."

The Tennek company has been using the Estee Studios in New York City for some of their productions.

In Big Comedy Roles

Lincoln Steadman, Grace Gordon and Josephine Crowell, all well-known for their work in dramatic features, have been chosen by Hal Roach for prominent roles in new Pathe comedies. The "Laugh Month" spirit is in the air, and all the players are busy.

"LAUGHING LADIES" is the Hal Roach two-reel comedy for Pathe release that includes Lucien Littlefield, Katherine Grant, Tyler Brooke and Gertrude Astor. Littlefield as a dentist will keep your patrons laughing all next month (and a long time after.)

Reviews of Short Features

"Flaming Flappers"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THE plot of this Hal Roach subject, starring Glenn Tryon and directed by Fred L. Guiol, concerns flappers and their sheiks. There are quite a number of them in the picture—in fact, the cast is larger than generally in a two-reeler—and they all assist in turning out a good comedy. The gags revolve around the engagement of Glenn to a flapper and their adoption of a baby on their way to the girl's home. Prominent in the fun are Jimmy Finlayson, Tyler Brooke, Charlotte Mineau, Yvonne Howell, Sue ("Bugs") O'Neill and Sally Long. It is good entertainment though the number of characters obscure the story at times. The best scenes deal with Glenn, his sweetie and the baby in a rattling flivver.—Sumner Smith.

"A Peep Into Siam"

(Service—Scenic—One Reel)

VIEWS of Siam, principally in the capital, Bangkok, make up this reel. They show the quaint architecture, costumes and bridges, and the large number of canals in this city, but also illustrate that after all little boys are-the same the world over, when it comes to finding the old swimmin' hole. The reel ends with an exhibition of the native dancing, which is novel and interesting and different from the dancing of any other part of the world.—C. S. Sewell.

"Noah and His Troubles"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

IN this Aesop's Film Fable Cartoonist Paul Terry has his characters on board the Ark. The poor farmer leads a tough life, with the rapid multiplication of the animals. The crisis comes when an endless procession of storks drop baby elephants on the deck.—Sumner Smith.

Pathe Review No. 52

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

ANNETTE KELLERMAN, famous mermaid, is featured in this but as a dancer. With the aid of the multiple-action camera she goes through a series of intricate and charming dances. "Yale" is the first of a new series, "American Colleges in Pathecolor." The Review starts with "The Triangle," one of the "Makin's of an Artist" series by Hy Mayer.—Sumner Smith.

"Fins and Feathers"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

THIS Grantland Rice Sportlight deals principally with trout fishing in Montana, closing with shots of Ty Cobb shooting quail down South. It is a subject of surpassing interest to everybody interested in the outdoor life, and of surpassing beauty to those whose penchant is for mountain scenery.—Sumner Smith.

Between Ourselves

A get together place where we can talk things over

Merry Christmas, every one of you who has been helping to give the exhibitors of this country and Canada the real showman angle on the performance of the pictures you have run.

You certainly deserve—and my wish is that you get what you deserve—packed houses not only on Christmas Day, but from then on!

Most people put their minds on that "More Blessed to Give than to Receive" idea just around this time; but you folks, who have made "Our Gang" such a splendid name for a generous crowd, put the spirit of that text into practical use every week throughout the year. VAN.

Switching the Spotlight to the Exhibitor

Edited by Sumner Smith

New Year's Party for Kansas Exhibitors

If present plans materialize, exhibitors of the Kansas City territory will attend a big New Year's party at a downtown hotel in Kansas City, according to an announcement this week of C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri. No details of the party will be worked out until the number of exhibitors who will attend can be ascertained. If the attendance justifies it, large space in a downtown hotel will be reserved and many novel features arranged. Exhibitors who contemplate attendance have been requested to write Mr. Cook.

Exhibitors of Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kas., have tied up with the postal authorities of the respective cities in a "mail early" campaign and are running slides gratis in many theatres.

"Call on the old members as well as the non-members," is the slogan of C. E. Cook who just returned from a two-weeks' tour in Kansas in behalf of the membership drive of his organization.

"If an organization is to be held intact, just as much time should be spent with members in good standing as with prospective members," Mr. Cook said.

"Hollywood" and its magnetic dice resulted in but little grief to its proprietor, John W. Flynn, in the North Side municipal court in Kansas City this week, Flynn failing to appear and his $50 bond being forfeited. That ended it. "Hollywood," the central spot of recreation on Kansas City's Film Row, yielded some "queer methods" for making dice "behave" in a police raid last week. Flynn being arrested. As much as several thousand dollars were lost by victims in a night.

After being arrested six times, the Sunday closing fight between J. W. Cotter, manager of the Fourth Street Theatre, Moberly, Mo., and city and county officials has come to a close, an agreement being reached under which Mr. Cotter will cease operating on Sundays. Details of the agreement were not announced at the time Mr. Cotter consented to remain closed on Sundays. In all of his Sunday shows Mr. Cotter had turned over the receipts of the day to various charities.

Arthur Miller, attorney for the Midland Theatre Corporation, went before the City Plan Commission in Kansas City this week seeking approval of the vacating of an alley west of Main street for approximately 200 feet north of Thirteenth street to permit the erection of the proposed $2,000,000 Midland Theatre on the north side of Thirteenth between Main and Baltimore streets. That Metro-Goldwyn will control the booking of the new house is accepted as a fact in Kansas City film circles now, although formal announcement has not yet been made.

In conjunction with the showing of "The Last Edition," F. B. O. production, Earl T. Cook, manager of the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, staged an exploitation stunt which required no expense and took about two minutes of his time. He simply called the Kansas Star on the telephone and announced that all Star newsboys would be admitted Tuesday night free. The Star did the rest.

Bandits, two women and a man, who entered the Royal Theatre, Atchison, Kas., late Thursday night, after being convinced that Don Klausman and Earl McClellen, projectionists, were unable to open the safe, took the latter on a wild ride which terminated with the wrecking of the car and the escape of the prisoners. The theatre is managed by A. R. Zimmer, it being a Universal house.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week: Rube Melcher, Waldo Theatre, Waldo, Mo.; Ben Levy, Hippodrome, Joplin, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.; L. M. Miller, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.

The Empire Theatre, the largest house in Maryville, Mo., was destroyed by fire this week, according to word reaching Kansas City. The house, which is said to be valued at $30,000, was owned by Fuch Brothers.

The all-comedy "circus" program, which was an experiment on the part of Walter Fenny, manager of the Best Theatre, Parsons, Kas., last week was a great success, according to Mr. Fenny, business being better than in several months. Three Pathe comedies composed the program. Seven Kansas City theatres have contracted to try the experiment, according to J. A. Epperson, Pathe branch manager.

Denver Manager Goes To Milwaukee

HARRY LONG, for thirteen months manager of the America Theatre, Denver, has been transferred to Milwaukee, where he will manage the Alhambra Theatre. Both are Universal first-run houses. The promotion of Mr. Long was not surprising to his many Denver friends, but his transfer at this time came as a surprise. Mr. Long has been recognized as one of the leading managers among the first-run houses here. He came from Salt Lake City to Denver. Prior to that time he was associated with Universal in their studios on the West Coast. Mr. Long's successor is L. Lanning. He comes from Salt Lake City.

H. D. McBride, manager of the new State, has announced his resignation, effective December 28. Mr. McBride has managed the new theatre since its opening a few months ago. He came to Denver from Santa Barbara, Cal., where he had been publicity manager for a local theatre company for a number of years. His future plans have not been announced.

A. J. Hamilton, Board of Arbitration member and owner of the Ivy Theatre, announces that he has taken over the management of the Mena Theatre at Alemeda and South Pearl streets.

An unusual number of exhibitors visited Denver during the last week. Among them were Mrs. W. R. Logan, Rex Theatre, Basin, Wyo.; Mrs. Gertrude McKay, Bighorn Theatre, Greybull, Wyo.; James Lynch, Empress Theatre, Laramie, Wyo.; Marie Goodhand, American Theatre, Kimball, Neb.; J. E. "Tommy," Tompkins, American Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo.

"All-Canadian" Program in Montreal Requires Editing

HOW several pictures were changed to suit the "All-Canadian Week" program which was presented at the Palace Theatre, Montreal, Quebec, has been described by Manager George Rotsky. The feature was First National's "The Knockout," starring Milton Sills, but this required no change as it had been produced in Northern Quebec. A Felix comedy had a new introduction with the cat making a bow to the audience and expressing his pleasure at being in Montreal for the Canadian Week. An "Our Gang" comedy was revised so that the scenes in Arizona became Saskatchewan and an American city became Toronto, Ontario, in one of the subtitles. The news weekly had nothing but Canadian scenes, several scenic bits being added to pictures of current events.

Following the presentation of "The Phantom of the Opera" at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, for two weeks, Manager Leonard Bishop decided upon a reduction in admission prices. The orchestra floor seats were reduced from 50 cents to 40 cents. The Regent offers picture programs exclusively and is a downtown house.

The Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, will have a swell New Year's Eve performance, judging by the splendid program arranged by Manager H. E. Wilton. The show will start at 11:15 p. m. with a couple of comedies, after which vaudeville specialties will be presented. Then comes a New Year's pantomime and, just before midnight, Father Time is to appear to herald the change of years. The orchestra will play "Auld Lang Syne" and the audience will make use of horns, rattles and other noise-making devices.

Manager Peter Kehayes of the Capital Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, abolished vaudeville from the bill at this house starting with the week of December 7 and provided special picture attractions instead, the feature being "The Pony Express," followed by a double feature program during the week of December 14 comprising "The Limited Mail" and "Simon the Jester." This was one instance where five acts of vaudeville did not pan out as expected.

Manager Walter H. Golding of the Imperial Theatre, St. John, N. B., has added to the attractiveness of that well known theatre by the installation of a large Wurlitzer pipe organ at a cost of $25,000. The Imperial orchestra has been retained.

Every orphan in Ottawa, Ontario, is having a special treat on Saturday morning, December 19, when a special Christmas performance is held at B. F. Keith's Theatre through the kindness of Manager J. M. Franklin, who is an officer of the Ottawa Rotary Club. Mr. Franklin arranged to have every child in local institutions, both Protestant and Catholic, attend the extra show under the auspices of the Rotary Club, and transportation to and from the theatre was provided by the Ottawa Electric Railway and automobiles provided by Rotarians.

Cincinnati Theatres Are Reopening

LICENSES have been obtained by the Pekin Theatre on West Fifth street, Cincinnati, and the Dolly Varden Theatre on Central avenue granting them authority to reopen, both houses having been closed recently upon orders from the city auditor's office on account of the management not complying with certain of the city's requirements, it is claimed. Harold Stevens, manager of the Dolly Varden, was fined $5 in police court for having operated his house without a license, according to reports.

The Ashtabula Palace Theatre, Ashtabula, Ohio, has been incorporated, as has also the Westway Theatres Co., Toledo, Ohio.

The Aloma Company, Cleveland, Ohio, expects to erect a new house on Pearl road, at an estimated cost of $200,000.

Proof of the fact that exhibitors as well as other mortals can be versatile is found in the fact that Kermie Frecka, who has the Easton and Grand Theatres, at Ironton, Ohio, is halfback on one of the local football teams. Incidentally, Frecka is the cat's whiskers when it comes to chasing the pigskin across the grid. He possesses every requisite but red hair.

Congratulations are being showered upon Peter Smith, head of the Sylvia and Avonel Theatres, Bellevue, Ky., just across the river from Cincinnati. Mrs. Smith, too, is sharing the felicitations. Smith says the new boy may be one of the country's foremost exhibitors some day.

Richey's Michigan Tour Ending

H. M. RICHEY, general manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, has about completed his ten weeks' sojourn among exhibitor members of his organization in the State. Richey mapped out an itinerary during the summer and then carried out his plan of visiting every exhibitor possible in the lower peninsula. Each exhibitor was advised by postal card of the date of the manager's arrival. Richey's conferences with exhibitors were devoted to matters pertaining to exhibitor organization that might not have been clear to some of the members. He will issue a report on his trip within the next two weeks.

Walter Fritchie, 22 years old, former head usher at the Grand Riviera Theatre, will not be prosecuted for theft, according to announcement by the Munz Theatrical Enterprises, from whom Fritchie stole receipts amounting to $10,000 a few weeks ago, the police say. Fritchie's parents made restitution of half the amount and the owners agreed not to prosecute.

Otto W. Bolle, Robert Rowan and Frank E. Stuart are exchange managers who have been named to represent the exchanges on the local board of arbitration. The exhibitor committee still consists of Edgar E. Kirchner, James C. Ritter and Harlan T. Hall.

George Wilbur, general manager of the A. J. Kleist Enterprises, Pontiac, spent several days in New York last week on business.

MORE SUNDAY TROUBLE

The Federation of Churches in Waltham, Mass., has started a campaign against the exhibition of motion pictures in Waltham on Sundays. The committee on public morals, recently appointed by the federation, contends that Sunday film shows are illegal. Efforts are being made by those opposed to the shows to persuade Mayor Henry F. Beal to conduct a public hearing on the matter.

Watchman Foils Burglars in The Imperial, San Francisco

A NIGHT watchman who lived up to his title probably saved the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, from a heavy loss on the night of December 7. Cracksmen effected an entrance to the theatre and cut the telephone wires shortly after midnight. The watchman heard them arranging their tools on the floor beside the safe and notified the police. A squad of police was rushed to the theatre, but the yeggs scented danger and escaped through a skylight.

Cecil Grissell, formerly with the Hippodrome Theatre, San Francisco, has joined the staff of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and has been placed in charge at Santa Rosa, where two theatres were recently acquired. He has been succeeded at the Hippodrome as manager by Ward Morris.

Alex E. Levin, and associates, who recently acquired property on Twenty-fourth street, between York and Hampshire, San Francisco, have ordered plans rushed for a theatre to seat 1,500 and will award contracts for the construction of this early in the new year. The site is in one of the oldest sections in the Mission District and overlooks Mission Dolores, founded in 1776.

E. J. Roemheld, who came from the East recently to take charge of publicity work for the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, and to build up an orchestra of merit, is directing the musical organization, being a talented musician.

Kaufman of the Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal.; John Di Stasio of the Liberty Theatre, Sacramento, Cal.; B. Harris of the Rialto Theatre, Stockton, Cal.; Sam Gordon of the Hippodrome and Empire theatres, Napa, Cal., and Joe Kenneaster of the Mystic Theatre, Clovis, Cal.

Harry Arthur, formerly with West Coast Theatres, Inc., as general manager and now with North American Theatres, was a recent business visitor at San Francisco.

A. S. FRANK, who has been manager of the Paulina Theatre for the Gumbiner circuit on the Northwest Side, Chicago, has been appointed manager of the Star Theatre at 1453 Milwaukee avenue belonging to the same circuit, succeeding Frank Miller, who has become house manager of the Ambassador Theatre. The Senate Theatre of Lubliner & Trinz is trying out a combination program. One week they use the regular Balaban & Katz presentation and the second week Art Kahn and his orchestra put on a stage show of their own.

The Balaban & Katz theatres are planning for extra shows for New Year's Eve and at the Roosevelt Theatre community singing will be staged in connection with the regular movie bill.

Harry Marks has returned to Balaban & Katz' New York offices and will specialize in house operation under the new management.

Ben Cooney of the National Theatres Corporation has returned from an eastern business trip.

O'Keefe Prevents Panic in Leominster, Mass., Theatre

WHEN film in a projection machine in the Sunshine Theatre, Leominster, Mass., caught fire there was a rush for the exits by more than 300 patrons, mostly children. Manager Daniel O'Keefe kept cool, however, and aided greatly in preventing injury to the throng. James Doherty extinguished the blaze. Damage amounted to approximately $1,000.

A theatre project involving fully $100,000 is in prospect in Westfield, Mass., as a result of the latest transfer of the Parks' Block. Papers in the transaction transferring the property from B. H. Sheketoff of Hartford, Conn., to a Rockland, Conn., man have not been passed, but it is said on good authority that the deal has been closed.

Moe Silver, auditor for the Mark-Strand theatres in Lynn and Worcester, has recovered fully from his recent operation for appendicitis and "Moe" again is on the job as busy as ever with none of his well-known "pep" lost.

One of the busiest men in the Boston film district is Philip Berler, booker for the E. M. Loew circuit of theatres. "Phil" also has to see to it that each house is supplied with the proper advertising matter, so he's on the job virtually around the clock.

The Dorchester Theatre in Dorchester was menaced by a fire that swept through the two upper stories of the left wing of the structure. The blaze was caused by the overheating of the chimney of the theatre's heating plant.

Harvard University benefited handsomely under the will of M. Douglas Flattery, late managing director of the Marcus Loew theatres in Boston. Twenty-five thousand dollars is left to Harvard to be held in trust for the benefit of the M. Douglas Flattery Fellowship and the M. Douglas Flattery Research in Medicine. Similar amounts were bequeathed to Mr. Flattery's widow and daughter. The remainder of the estate is left in trust, three-eighths of the income to Mrs. Flattery; one-eighth to the daughter and four-eighths to Harvard.

Benjamin and Al Laurie are now managing Keith's Theatre at Campello. The latter is the son and the former a nephew of Jacob Laurie, head of the Laurie circuit of theatres in suburban Boston.

THE directors of the Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., have declared an extra dividend of $1 a share on the $100 par capital stock in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of $2.50 a share on the issue. This makes a distribution for the year 1925 of $11 a share.

Nick Vassiliadis, manager of the Clinton-Strand, was initiated into the mysteries of Ismailia Temple, A. A. O., N. O. T. M. S., the other night. Nick got a warm reception. Several exchange managers, also Nobles of the Shrine, were on hand to enjoy the proceedings

Argument on the appeal of Allan S. Moritz from a decision dispossessing him of the lease of the Ritz Theatre, Niagara Falls, and giving the house back to M. Atlas, owner, will come up for hearing before the Appellate Division in Rochester soon after the beginning of the new year.

Ray S. Averill of the Olympic has completed arrangements for the broadcasting of his music programs from the stage every Monday evening by the Norton Laboratories station W.M.A.K., which is in the Lafayette Hotel.

The new Kenmore Theatre, which Mitchell Fitzer of Syracuse has leased, will open in Kenmore, N. Y., about January

Joseph Schuchert, Jr., has completed redecorating and remodeling the Columbia Theatre in Genesee street. Several rows of seats have been added and some beautiful new carpets laid.

Harry Long Arrives In Milwaukee

HARRY E. LONG, new managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, succeeding Howard Waugh, and his wife, arrived in Milwaukee last week during the height of a snow storm, from the sunny South. Mr. Long has just completed a number of years as a picture theatre head in Florida, California and several other of the southern states. He has been a member of the Universal Theatre unit for more than three years. Previous to that he was associated with the Paramount organization. He holds claim to being a middle westerner by birth, having been reared in Detroit. He left Detroit for New Orleans where he managed a theatre and since then has always managed theatres in the extreme South.

Plans for the installation of a new $25,000 organ in the Alhambra has been announced. The new organ will be a Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones. Harry E. Long is the new manager of the theatre.

The Tower Theatre, being erected in Milwaukee by the Saxe Amusement Enterprise, is showing rapid signs of progress. It is expected that the new theatre will be completed by March 1.

An elaborate program is being prepared by the Saxe Amusement Enterprises for the grand opening of their new picture playhouse, the Retlaw, at Fond du Lac, Wis., December 26. While the program is not completed, it has been announced that the entire Wisconsin Theatre Orchestra at Milwaukee will be taken to Fond du Lac for the opening night. Bernard Cowham, the popular Wisconsin Theatre organist, will have an important part on the opening night program. City officials and prominent business and professional men will be among the guests of honor.

Jimmie Keough, the "million dollar fi' buyer," who had been with the Saxe Enterprises, is now with the Silliman's Theatres.

Abe Stone Plans New Albany Theatre

WHEN Abe Stone of Albany, N. Y., does anything, he believes in doing it well. This policy has held true ever since 1906, when Mr. Stone started in the business back in Syracuse, and has held true year after year. Furthermore, it will hold true in the erection of a 1,500-seat neighborhood house in this city next spring. After working for others for some fifteen years or so, Mr. Stone blossomed forth as an exhibitor on his own hook in Schenectady when he acquired the Rialto in 1921, later disposing of the house and leasing the Arbor Hill and Delaware theatres in this city. Mr. Stone is still operating the Arbor Hill house, the lease of which has four years to go. When Mr. Stone took over the house, it became known better than ever before and has proved a veritable mint under his guidance. Now Mr. Stone will erect a new house on a site purchased the past week on Northern Boulevard and First street, which he firmly believes is one of the best possible locations of its kind in the city. Mr. Stone plans to have not only the finest and most modern theatre in the neighborhood sections of Albany, but also one that will rank with the best of the downtown houses.

Julius J. Byck, who has the Rudolf Theatre in Tannersville, carries on the back of his business cards the fire alarm signals of the Tannersville department and cautions the holder of the card to retain it as a reminder, presumably of both the fire alarm signals and the fact that Mr. Byck's theatre, as the card says, is "the home of high-class photo plays."

The Schine boys in Gloversville may be heard crying "Extra! Extra!" before long, for they have a new house organ known as "Schine Pep" which made its appearance a week or so ago. Making sure that all their house managers might contribute, a list of about twenty-five associate editors have been named.

Pop Linton in Utica will stop work on Christmas Day as well as New Year's but only because these days are nationally observed holidays. The veteran exhibitor is hustling his new house along at a rapid rate, and in fact hasn't taken the time off to even buy so much as his usual Christmas present.

Julius Berinstein hustled down to Elmira and back for over the week-end, taking the sleeper both ways. Mr. Berinstein reported business as being good with his brothers in Elmira, and said that the new Keeny Theatre was slated to open December 31.

Along Film Row they say that the Strand in Watervliet has had more names than a stray dog. Anyhow, it's the "Strand" now, and with Eddie Christie doing the booking the house is showing some exceptionally good attractions these days.

Exhibitors and others through these columns are sending their season's greetings to Ben Apple, who is down in Florida, selling real estate without so much as a single worry over contracts or super-specials. Ben has been remembering the boys around Albany and Troy with postcards.

Bill Benton of Saratoga Springs is evidently a believer in the old saying that the early bird catches the worm. The other day Mr. Benton was in New York City and was discovered in front of one of the booking offices in Broadway, waiting for some of the executives to show up. And it was exactly 9 a. m., which isn't early in Saratoga Springs.

Uly S. Hill, managing-director of the Strand houses in Albany and Troy, declares that he will have a turkey for Christmas. And the chances are that he will, for Uly lives out in the country and drives past several farms where turkeys are raised. He believes that whatever he hits with his car rightfully belongs to him, especially if it's a plump gobbler.

Tony Veiller, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, likes to be obliging but the limit was reached the other day when he was called to the phone and a voice asked him if he would call a woman to the phone who was "thought to be standing in the lobby and wearing a brown coat and a black hat." It was the rush hour and Tony found that there were no less than a half dozen or so women similarly garbed. After inquiring of one or two if they expected a telephone call, he gave it up as bad business.

Morris Silverman returned from New York City last week as hoarse as the proverbial frog. He explained his condition by saying that he had argued for three straight hours with a producing concern, but managed to receive an $81 adjustment and the hoarseness was well worth it.

Thomas Norris has been named manager of the Palace Theatre in Troy. He has been associated with the house for some time.

Bill Donovan of Tupper Lake—and it's "Bill" with everyone who knows him—will leave on January 4 with Mrs. Donovan for two months in Florida. Sometime ago Mr. Donovan bought several parcels of land in Miami, and as the city has expanded and grown so has the value of Mr. Donovan's lots grown by leaps and bounds. Before Mr. Donovan returns north he will probably be many thousands of dollars wealthier than at present.

Vic Warren of Massena is interested in the building project in the northern village calling for the construction of many new residences for employes of the Aluminum Company of America.

B. W. Harriman, who has been managing the Strand in Schenectady, has now branched out on his own hook and with H. A. Kyler will cover the territory during the weeks to come with "The Passion Play." John Sullivan will accompany the picture as soloist.

Last Sunday night was a banner event in the life of Jake Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre in Troy, for he was one of the speakers at the Synagogue in connection with the burning of an outstanding mortgage.

John J. Doocey, who was recently named as manager of the King Theatre in Troy, admits that he feels perfectly at home in the house. But, then, why shouldn't he, for he served as manager of the theatre for six years before he went with the Griswold? Mr. Doocey is running double features on Monday and Thursday nights and doing plenty of lobby display.

Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre, knocked off his duties on Sunday afternoon in order to take part in the Elks Memorial services, which were held at the theatre. Mr. Roberts joined the lodge some little time ago. The theatre is being touched up by the painter's brush these days around the lobby and elsewhere.

In the words of Ben Stern, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, his bowling of late has been "lousy." Ben goes on to say that he turned in the low score of 117 in one game a few nights ago, which is decidedly off for Ben, who is regarded as one of the best pin toppers in the Collar City. Al Lemay, also of the Lincoln, has taken up bowling and is swinging them down the alleys in the theatrical league.

Ten years of partnership and never a single word of difference is the record of Tobin and Quinlan, who run the theatre in Chateaugay. Death has deprived both men of their wives during the last few months, and the sympathy of their many friends in Albany and elsewhere is extended through these columns.

The latest thing at the Griswold Theatre in Troy is an inter-city song contest being engineered by Jake Golden, the manager. Contestants are entered from Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Cohoes and other places, and each have their own following. The finals are set for January 7.

The past week has been a worrisome one for Edward Trembley, manager of the American Theatre in Troy, for his aged mother has been threatened with pneumonia.

W. W. Farley and C. H. Buckley, well known exhibitors of Albany, were included among the guests at a dinner given at the Fort Orange Club in Albany one night last week to S. T. Rothapfel.

The 14-years-old son of C. R. Halligan of the Universal exchange took part last week in some home talent minstrels in Green Island. It was a great night for the Halligans.

The annual report indicated that the organization is in a splendid condition, with many worth-while accomplishments to its credit during the past year.

H. W. Osborne, well known in San Francisco film exchange circles, has joined the Universal exchange in charge of the special short subject division.

C. H. Baker, recently appointed assistant manager of the San Francisco Universal exchange, now has his family with him. What makes this news is the fact that since he left Des Moines the family has increased and he recently had the delight of looking upon a bouncing baby daughter for the first time.

Charles Muehlman, manager of First National, San Francisco, recently journeyed to Los Angeles with Ned Marin, sales manager of the Western Division, who paid the local exchange a visit.

Jack Frazier, with the San Francisco Universal exchange, is making a tour of Nevada before the heavy snows of winter descend and is expected home before Christmas. Joe Huff is touring the sunny San Joaquin Valley, from which come the early oranges, while Harry Goldberg is visiting the South Coast and enjoying the charm of the Monterey peninsula, one of California's beauty spots.

Reorganize Paramount's Western Studios

FINAL steps in the recent reorganization at Paramount's Hollywood studio were taken recently with the announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, of the assignment of producing units to work under Hector Turnbull and B. P. Schulberg, asociate producers.

Under the new alignment Mr. Turnbull will have direct charge of all productions of the follwing directors: Clarence Badger, Malcolm St. Clair, Edward Sutherland and George B. Seitz. The starring pictures of Raymond Griffith and Bebe Daniels will also come under Turnbull's jurisdiction. In addition he will produce "The Rough Riders," Paramount's super-epic of Theodore Roosevelt and the picturization of Zane Grey's best sellers. Also, Turnbull is handling all production details of Raoul Walsh, who is completing "The Golden Journey."

Mr. Schulberg will act as producer for Paramount of all pictures of James Cruze, Allan Dwan, Dimitri Buchowetzki, Victor Fleming and William Wellman. The production of the starring pictures of Pola Negri, Adolphe Menjou and Betty Bronson made on the West Coast will also be under his guidance. In addition, Mr. Schulberg will attend to the production of all stories writen for Paramount by Ernest Vajda, the Hungarian playwright, who is now in Hollywood preparing an original screen story for Pola Negri which Buchowetzki will direct.

Assisting Turnbull and Schulberg in the West Coast production work are Lucien Hubbard, Walter Woods, Garnett Weston and Kenneth Hawks, production supervisors. Turnbull and Schulberg also each have a personal asistant who works directly with the associate producer, not being designed to any particular unit. William Griffith occupies this position with Turnbull, while Sam Jafee is Schulberg's assistant.

"The First Year" About Ready for Screening

"THE FIRST YEAR," the uproarious comedy produced so successfully on Broadway by John Golden and directed for Fox Films by none other than Frank Borzage, is due to come out of the cutting room almost any day.

Matt Moore, who plays the part of Tommy Tucker, has given one of the best performances of his career. In fact, many who watched the picture in the making declare that the situations and the treatment would make the picture even better than the play.

Kathryn Perry, who plays opposite him, is ideally cast in the part. She makes a very wilful little sweetheart and a most appealing little bride.

A new and dusky discovery, Carolynne Snowden, provides most of the laughs at the end of the comedy, with her characterization of Hattie, the maid, who "serves," but "washes best."

Frank Currier as the kindly old bachelor uncle who enginers the romance and then straightens out the kinks at the end of "The First Year," adds another lovable character to his list.

The rest of the all star cast consists of Margaret Livingston, J. Farrell MacDonald — who appears clean shaven and in business clothes—Frank Cooley, John Patrick and Virginia Madison.

Frank Borzage directed the production, putting in every little individual touch of comedy he could in a true Borzage-like fashion.

G. Howe Black Appears in Four Chadwick Pictures

G. Howe Black, the sensational colored comedian, who was heralded by critics of the trade and daily press as the comedy find of the season in Chadwick Pictures Corporation's "The Wizard of Oz," has appeared in four pictures for that company this season. The first was "The Wizard of Oz," in which Larry Semon was featured as The Scarecrow, the part made famous on the stage by Fred Stone. Following his success in this first production, he was chosen by Director Scott Dunlop for an important part as George Walsh's valet in "Blue Blood," which is released this month. Black will also be seen with Walsh in "The Prince of Broadway," a romance of the prize ring, which was directed by John Gorman with a supporting cast of more than twenty champion and ex-champion fighters.

Black's fourth picture of the season is "The Perfect Clown," another of Chadwick's December releases, in which Larry Semon is starred. Playing opposite Semon throughout the picture, Black is said to have the best role of his career in this production.

John Meredith in "Blue Blood"

Joan Meredith, 1925 Wampas Baby Star, who has been signed to a long term contract in "Blue Blood," the star's second modern, by Chadwick Pictures Corporation, plays a prominent role in support of George Walsh action romance of the season for that company. "American Pluck" was the first of the series.

To Direct Betty Bronson

The "Youth Unit" was announced by B. P. Schulberg, associate Paramount producer at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. The phrase means that William Wellman, youngest director of regognized ability, will direct youthful Betty Bronson in her next Paramount production.

Miss Bronson is scheduled to return to Hollywood in a few days for the new picture, which is as yet untitled.

Brenon Selects Cast for "Dancing Mothers"

FEW pictures have exhibited a more brilliant cast than that which Herbert Brenon has gathered together for "Dancing Mothers."

Conway Tearle, whose magnificent restraint in the big emotional roles he has played, has made him the idol of thousands of fans, has the male lead. Of the role of Jerry Naughton, the bachelor in "Dancing Mothers," Mr. Tearle has said it is one of the most satisfying parts he has ever portrayed and he has given it his enthusiastic best.

Starred opposite Conway Tearle is Alice Joyce, whose beauty and charm and ability have made her following legion. Her role as Mrs. Westcourt, the lonely wife who begins flirting with Mr. Tearle to divert his attention from her daughter and awakes to the fact she is in love with him, produces a situation which gives full scope to the powers of both Miss Joyce and Mr. Tearle.

Those who saw Mr. Tearle and Clara Bow in "Black Oxen" will not soon forget the delightful romance between the bachelor and the flapper. Miss Bow, still the unforgettable flapper, with her marvelous youth and vivacity, again appears with Mr. Tearle in "Dancing Mothers." In this picture she is the adventurous daughter of Mrs. Westcourt and her infatuation with the bachelor not only has spice and sparkle but is fraught with drama by reason of the contest between her and Miss Joyce for the affections of Mr. Tearle.

Thus a tremendously dramatic situation is created which the husband and father must face—a situation strengthened further by the fact that the husband is involved with a beautiful and vampish young woman. Obviously only a great actor could do justice to these possibilities. For this role Mr. Brenon could hardly have made a better selection than he has in Norman Trevor, a screen and stage favorite in both this country and England.

The girl who has lured the affections of Mr. Trevor from Alice Joyce, as his wife, is the fragile and alluring Elsie Lawson, while Dorothy Cumming plays the role of Mrs. Massarene, the dashing widow and friend of Miss Joyce. The youthful admirer of Miss Bow, who watches jealously her fascination with Mr. Tearle, is Donald Keith, whose work in various pictures with Miss Bow already has made them a popular combination.

Chadwick Completes Twelve Features

WITH the completion of "The Test of Donald Norton," George Walsh's fifth modern action romance of the current season, which is now in work, Chadwick Pictures Corporation will have twelve of its fifteen features on the 1925-26 program finished. Two additional productions, "Winning the Futurity" and the sixth George Walsh feature will be started immediately on the arrival of I. E. Chadwick, president of the company, in Los Angeles next week.

Six of the twelve productions have been released, and two others, "Sweet Adeline" with Charles Ray, and "The Prince of Broadway," a George Walsh feature, will be released in January.

"The Wizard of Oz," Larry Semon's screen version of the L. Frank Baum fantasy, was the first release of the year, following its showing at the Colony Theatre on Broadway. "The Wizard of Oz," which is called a spectacular fantasy, has a cast of several stars including Bryant Washburn, Charles Murray, Mary Carr, Virginia Pearson, Dorothy Dwan, Oliver Hardy, Josef Swickard, Otto Lederer, Frederic Kovert and G. Howe Black.

"Paint and Powder," a Hunt Stromberg production, released in October, was the first Chadwick special production of the year. Elaine Hammerstein in the leading role is supported by several favorites including Theodore von Eltz, Stuart Holmes, Derlys Perdue, John Sainpolis and Charles Murray.

Two George Walsh productions, "American Pluck" and "Blue Blood," have been released. The first of these is Ralph Spence's adaptation of "Blaze Dorringer," a popular novel by Eugene P. Lyle, Jr., which was directed by Richard Stanton. Wanda Hawley played the leading role opposite Walsh. Others in prominent parts were Frank Leigh, Tom Wilson, Leo White, Dan Mason and Sidney De Grey. "Blue Blood" was written especially for Walsh by Frank H. Clark and was directed by Scott Dunlop. Cecille Evans, of Mack Sennett fame, played opposite the star. Joan Meredith, Philo McCullough, Harvey Clark, Robert Boulder, Eugene Borden and G. Howe Black complete the cast.

Charles Ray's first production for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, "Some Pun'kins," was released on November 1st. His second, "Sweet Adeline," will be released on January 15th. Both of these Ray pictures are said to be typical of his early rural comedies in which he first gained his screen popularity. Jerome Storm, who directed more than twenty of Ray's best pictures, directed both of these. The cast of "Some Pun'kins" includes Duane Thompson, 1925 Wampas Baby Star, Bert Woodruff, George Fawcett, William Courtright and Fanny Midgeley.

One of the outstanding of the Chadwick releases to date is "The Unchastened Woman," Theda Bara's first production since her retirement at the height of her career. "The Unchastened Woman," a recognized classic of the American theatre by Louis K. Anspacher, was adapted for the screen by Douglas Doty. James Young directed. Wyndham Standing played the leading role opposite Miss Bara. Others in the cast are Dale Fuller, John Miljan, Eileen Percy, Mayme Kelso, Eric Mayne and Frederic Kovert.

Select Title for Mrs. Valentino Picture

WHEN Love Grows Cold" is the title of the production in which Natacha Rambova (Mrs. Rudolph Valentino) has been starred by F. B. O. "When Love Grows Cold" was adapted by John C. Brownell, home office scenario chief, with continuity by Harry O. Hoyt, director of the film, from the well known novel by Laura Jean Libbey.

The production, which boasts some of the most lavish sets ever constructed in a motion picture studio, is an intensely gripping drama of modern life. Although the action of the story adheres closely to the Laura Jean Libbey plot, the costumes and mountings have been modernized and brought up to date. Miss Rambova provided herself with a very gorgeous and expensive wardrobe during her sojourn abroad, and frocks, hats and shoes from the smartest coutourieres in Paris will be seen in profusion in the film.

Clive Brook, who played opposite Miss Rambova, was loaned to F. B. O. by Warner Bros. for this film, while Sam Hardy, well known stage heavy, Kathlene Martin, late of "Sally" and "Lady, Be Good," Kathryn Hill, Johnnie Gough and little Russell Griffin supported the queenly Natacha.

The picture is now in the cutting room, where, under the supervision of Harry O. Hoyt and Daniel Carson Goodman, who personally supervised the production, it is being cut, edited and titled.

Before he left for the Coast Studios of the company, J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of production, expressed himself in the most enthusiastic terms about this newest F. B. O. Gold Bond production:

"The rushes of the picture have proved conclusively that Miss Rambova is an actress of charm and ability. She belongs definitely to the new school of screen artists who repress rather than express their deepest emotions. She is a stunning, gorgeous woman, and can wear clothes more gracefully, I think I may say without reservation, than any other woman on the screen today.

"The production is an intensely interesting drama and although I have not yet seen it in its finished state, promises to be one of our biggest offerings in point of star and story values.

"The works of Laura Jean Libbey, which still have a very considerable sale in this country and abroad, were perhaps more widely disseminated in her heydey than those of any other living writer. In addition to the sale of her novels, which was tremendous, newspaper syndicates took up the distribution of her stories. Their author was the first writer, in fact, to have her novels thus distributed on such a vast scale."

Rork Starts Work on "Desert Healer"

SAM E. RORK returned last week to Hollywood exulting in the success of his latest First National picture, "Clothes Make the Pirate," starring Leon Errol, supported by Dorothy Gish.

Reports from Indianapolis, Atlanta and other cities where the picture has showed echo the approval of New York, which confirms Firt National's contention that Mr. Rork has turned out the greatest box office success of his years as a producer and one of the biggest comedy hits of the year. The success of "Clothes Make the Pirate" not only preserves intact this producer's unbroken record of box office successes, but marks Mr. Rork's advance in the production field as a maker of big feature films.

Immediately on his arrival in Hollywood, Mr. Rork will assist Marion Fairfax in getting her first production, "The Desert Healer," under way. This is in accordance with the recent arrangement whereby Sam E. Rork Productions and Marion Fairfax Productions, while functioning as independent companies, will use the same producing organizations, alternating in production.

"Clothes Make the Pirate" has proved the feasibility of this dual production system. In carrying out her share of the arrangement, Miss Fairfax adapted and supervised the filming of this well known Holman Day novel. Rork will reciprocate by supervising business details in Miss Fairfax's production of "The Desert Healer." The technical staff which worked on the pirate comedy in New York has been taken to Hollywood in toto for the filming of the forthcoming romance of India which Miss Fairfax has adapted from the novel by E. M. Hull, who wrote "The Sheik."

Johnny Fox Signed

Clever Player in "Covered Wagon" Cast for "Bar-G Mystery" Serial

Johnny Fox, the clever freckled-face lad who distinguished himself in the "Covered Wagon," is a member of the cast of the forthcoming Patheserial "The Bar-G Mystery," which C. W. Patton is producing with Dorothy Phillips and Wallace MacDonald in the featured roles.

Fans will recall that in his characterization of a tough youngster in the "Covered Wagon," Johnny chewed tobacco continually —at least it was supposed to be tobacco, but in reality it was harmless licorice. Nevertheless, the youngster has received many letters pointing out the error of his ways if he should continue to chew the weed.

"Just because a fellow has to chew tobacco in front of the camera is no reason why nearly everyone should preach to him about tobacco chewing," objects Johnny.

Gold Medal Officially Given "The Voice of the Nightingale"

THE RIESENFELD GOLD MEDAL for the Most Novel Short Subject of the Year was officially presented to "The Voice of the Nightingale," a French cameo, produced by L. Starevitch, at a luncheon in the Hotel Astor, New York City, on the afternoon of December 16.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., made the presentation speech. The medal was accepted by Earl W. Hammons, President of Educational Pictures, Inc., on behalf of the producer.

The distinguished token will be forwarded to Starevitch, in Paris, whose work in this one little gem has focused the eyes of the world upon him and his artistry.

The Riesenfeld Gold Medal for the Most Novel Short Subject of the Year will be a permanent institution in the motion picture industry.

Joseph Dannenberg, as secretary of the committee of award was the toastmaster. Mr. Dannenberg introduced Mr. Hays, who spoke in praise of the little feature that has swept "hard boiled" showmen off their feet and at the same time left audiences thrilled as few big features have thrilled them.

"Art is sunshine," Mr. Hays emphasized, as he reviewed the picturization of the story of the nightingale which gave its voice to a child in return for a simple act of kindness, although only until sundown was the child enabled to use this voice, at twilight the nightingale again taking up its melodious song.

Through sixteen months of labor — evidently a labor of love—Starevitch worked to achieve the result that has brought such an amazing response from the press and the public.

Mr. Hays said he first saw "The Nightingale" at the New York Criterion, when it was presented on the program with "Grass," the Paramount novelty feature. Mr. Hays said he was instantly struck by the beauty and appeal of the little feature.

Mr. Hays expressed, to Mr. Hammons, the hope that something of the happiness which was his in making the presentation, will be felt by the producer upon receiving the Gold Medal.

Mr. Hammons responded to the address by Mr. Hays, and assured the industry's moderator that the gold medal will be forwarded to Mons. Starevitch at an early date, together with ample information regarding the selection of "The Voice of the Nightingale" for the honor of winning the first Gold Medal to be offered by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld. Mr. Hammons said that pictures of the type of "The Voice of the Nightingale" are not given the financial recognition due pictures of this high calibre, and he urged that if exhibitors sincerely wish to build up their business and encourage the producers of short pictures of an exceptional character, they should give greater attention to bookings of this type.

Dr. Riesenfeld was present and was called upon by the toastmaster. He told in his usual fascinating manner of address of how Mrs. Riesenfeld had sen the charming little picture, in Paris, and had called his attention to it, and he said he was instantly struck by the beauty of the thing.

Dr. Riesenfeld told of the difficult problems faced by him with an abundance of big features growing larger constantly to select from, in booking acceptable short features. It was with the thought of encouragement to the producer uppermost in his mind that he hit on the plan of offering his Medal for the little feature selected by the committee having the choice in their power.

Harold B. Franklin, of the Paramount organization, and a member of the committee on award, was present. Others on this committee were Joseph L. Plunkett, Harry C. Arthur, Jr., Jack Partington, Frank L. Newman and Fred S. Meyers.

About seventy guests attended the luncheon, which included the personnel of the Educational exchanges in this city, editors of the trade papers and fan magazines, and distinguished showmen.

The "Midweek Pictorial" Devotes a Page To Educational's Jungle Picture

Taking for its subject "Live Cowards," an Educational Pictures Laugh Month release in the Mermaid Comedy series, the Midweek Pictorial (a New York Times pictorial publication having a world wide circulation of well over 100,000) devoted a whole page of its December 10th issue to an article headed "Among the Roaring, Snarling Jungle Actors of the Movies," and illustrated with stills of Al St. John, Phil Dunham and Virginia Vance in some of the most awe inspiring wild animal close-ups.

This Short Feature contains some of the most realistic animal "shots" and perhaps the greatest number of animals ever used in a comedy. The sequences of the film are laid around the escape of numerous lions, tigers, elephants, leopards, and even a crocodile from an itinerant circus menagerie.

All the comedians, including star, leading lady and cast, of this thriller have parts calling for plenty of nerve and stamina. "Live Cowards" is a Mermaid Comedy that will long stand out as an animal thriller par excellence.

YOU CAN SEE that in the Educational-Jimmie Adams newest laughster, "Fair But Foolish," there are situations to stimulate shouts of merriment.

"The Voice of the Nightingale" Returns to New York's Rialto

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD, whose Gold Medal for the Most Novel Short Subject of the Year was recently awarded to "The Voice of the Nightingale," is presenting this single-reel fantasy in color for a return showing at the Rialto Theatre, New York, this week.

Since the announcement of the award of the medal was made by the jury of six of the country's recognized showmen, chosen to pick the year's finest Short Feature, this Educational release has been in constant demand for return engagements at many of the biggest theatres in the country, and Educational has had to order a big new supply of prints from Paris, where all prints of the Fables in Color, of which this was the first release, are made and colored by hand.

The laudatory editorial comments and reviews which appeared in such great numbers in the newspapers during the earlier showings of "The Voice of the Nightingale" have started to appear again since the announcement of the award. Typical of these is the comment which appeared a few days ago, set in two columns measure, in the Denver Post.

"That wonder Short Subject, 'The Voice of the Nightingale,' which was recently declared to be the greatest single reel ever filmed," says the Post, "is scheduled for presentation at the State Theatre beginning next Saturday, and Managing Director H. D. McBride is going to give the one-reeler a presentation just like a feature—for it has as much entertainment value as a feature. And I know, for I pre-viewed it recently."

Harold Grange Develops His Exploitation Into a Wonderful Whirlwind Campaign

EXPLOITATION is not the invention of the motion picture business. It is merely that the exhibitors have taken an idea of the ages and given it an intensive development such as no other line ever has known. P. T. Barnum was an exploiteer when Edison was still a telegrapher and away back in the Garden of Eden the Snake exploited National Apple Week so successfully that we are still reading about it.

As Eddie Bonns recently pointed out in his new book, exploitation is universal and eternal, and one of the nicest examples of well-timed exploitation is to be found in the news stories of Harold ("Red") Grange. The picture manager may study with profit the angles of this campaign.

Had the Foundation

In the first place Grange, in current phrase was "the goods." That was the start of the whole busines. He was one of the best if not the best football player developed by the college elevens this season. The chances are, however, that he was not materially better than ten or fifteen other players. It is merely that he was better material for exploitation.

This gives the two fundamental rules for exploitation. The subject must be capable of making good and it must lend itself to such treatment.

In the first place Grange had red hair, which gave him a nickname that lifted the curse from the "Harold." For some illogical cause "Harold" is in a class with "Percy" and "Clarence" as fit food for the humorist, and Harold Grange never would have attained the publicity that fell to "Red."

More Than That

But the nickname alone was nothing. There are thousands of men in the country who are known as "Red" or "Reddy." That merely lifted the handicap, it did not yield much exploitation.

But Grange had worked for an iceman last Summer. That appealed to the reader. The college boy on an ice route was picturesque. He was better "copy" than his fellow players.

He had the vitality and speed usually displayed by red headed men, and he easily was the best player on his team. Because he was, he was given the opportunity to make the spectacular runs, the valuable gains. Ten other men on the field were working for the common good of Alma Mater to give him his chances, and he made spectacular use of those opportunities. By mid-season Red Grange was the most frequently mentioned player in college football, not because he so greatly excelled all others, but because he was a brilliant, showy player.

All of that was purely a natural development. We do not believe that Grange consciously showed off. It was merely his manner, but his style of play gave the sport writers a chance, and they boomed him into the leading position in the news. In a general way this was automatic and unplanned.

But here begins the real exploitation; the capitalization of opportunity; the making of opportunity, for that matter.

In ordinary course Grange would have dropped out of sight shortly after Thanksgiving. He would have been scheduled for some All-America elevens. He would have been omitted from others, and that would have called forth mild protests from his admirers.

By Christmas, under ordinary circumstances, Grange would have been back in the moth balls. Next spring he would have graduated and someone would have given him a better job than delivering ice because a college star always is an object of interest for a year or two. He might have jumped into as much as $5,000 his first year, or even a little more.

But as a football proposition he would be an ancient in the fall of 1926. But Grange evidently knew exploitation or else he was guided by his manager, a motion picture exhibitor.

Getting Them Talking

A few days before the end of the college season it was hinted that he would turn professional. Overnight he jumped from the sporting page to the front, top of column. For the moment he crowded the latest murder and the most salacious divorce case.

It was rumored he would, and it was rumored that he would not. Finally he admitted that he had signed to play professional football. The backers of the professional game were willing to pay him handsomely to exploit the professional league.

The professional game was languishing. It lacked exploitation. Most persons who buy for the college games get more satisfaction out of their tickets than they do from the games to which the ticekts admit them. They get their kick out of being able to brag over their less fortunate friends. Tickets are valued because they are difficult to obtain.

There was no such charm to the ticket for the professional games. The deadwood was heavy; as heavy as the losses.

A Life Saver

Then came Grange, fresh from his college triumphs, and in New York he played to a larger gate than was drawn by any college game held here this season including the Army-Navy clash.

If Grange had waited until 1926 to turn professional he would not have added a thousand dollars to any gate. Coming straight from his college triumphs, plus the additional publicity the jump had gained for him, he was able to pull an extra $65,000 on a single game.

His ethics, from the college viewpoint, may have been bad, but his exploitation was flawless. Setting aside his motion picture contract, which probably is not for the $300,000 the newspapers give as the figure, Grange probbly has taken in about $200,000 by going into professional football this year instead of after his graduation.

He has advanced the cause of professional football by five to ten years. He has made more money in one month than he could have earned in a lifetime had he let his publicity grow cold. It was perfect exploitation perfectly timed.

Miller Made a Production of the New Victrola

Something for You

Frank J. Miller, of the Imperial Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made an advertising stunt into a prologue, pleased his patrons, saved the cost of a production act and got slathers of free advertising.

You can do the same thing.

On a draped stage, darkened, a spotlight brought up an old style Victrola on which a selection was played. Toward the close of the selection the light was dimmed down again, to be brought up on a new Orthophonic, on which a selection was played.

As the selections were both high priced records, the audience enjoyed the music and accepted it as an act and not an advertisement.

while the Victor dealer was bursting a blood vessel in the newspapers announcing the demonstration and Lights of Old Broadway, contrasting the improvements in talking machines with the improvement of Broadway then and now.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

There was only one stage presentation with Leon Errol's first starring production, "Clothes Make the Pirate." This was the first stage appearance of the International Novelty Orchestra of Victor recording artists. In addition to these two attractions, which were billed "50-50," there was an overture by the orchestra, and the customary Mark Strand Topical Review. Together, this brought the show up to 2 hours and 14 minutes, of which "Clothes Make the Pirate" took up 1 hour and 28 minutes. The Topical Review required its accustomed 8 minutes, while the Victor orchestra was given 30 minutes in which to do its stuff. The remaining 8 minutes went to the overture.

The overture was Wagner's "Tannhauser," played by the orchestra, conducted by Harold Stern. The lights for this included a flesh colored Mestrum flood from the dome on the musicians; foots and borders of large stage in blue; steel blue Mestrum floods from the dome on the purple spangled drawcurtains which were closed over the production stage; 4 steel blue arch spots on the pleats of the production draw-curtains.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came the first appearance of the International Novelty Orchestra of Victor recording artists in an especially arranged musical program. The orchestra is composed of 15 picked musicians and the arrangements are the same as this organization has done on Victor phonograph records. Nathaniel Shilkret directed, with vocal interpolations by Theodore Alvan and ballroom dances by Mlle. Moskovina and Alexander Vlad. The setting for the orchestra included a black cyclorama used as a backdrop, in front of which were arranged tiers of steps. The orchestra was placed in three tiers in this setting. The repertoire was as follows: "La Paloma," orchestra; "Midnight Waltz" and "When the One You Love Loves You," a dance; "Oh Boy What a Girl," "Wicked Tango," "I Wonder Where my Baby is Tonight," "Save Your Sorrow for Tomorrow," "Nola," a dance, "Rhapsody in Blue" (excerpts); "Remember," a song; "Keep on Crooning a Tune." There was a change of lights for each presentation, these for the most part being floods from the projection room and the dome. There was a baby spot from overhead picking out the conductor and another one to pick out the tenor soloist.

Peanuts for Sally

Small bags of peanuts, the cover printed for Sally of the Circus, were distributed by a clown to advertise that attraction at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham. It was the better because the idea strengthened the circus suggestion.

For the lobby D. Roscoe Faunce made an elephant in profile, the head being swayed from side to side by a concealed motor. The animation very greatly aided the attraction. Circus paintings on the three sheet boards further helped the picture over. Carol Dempster, cut from a lithograph, rode the elephant.

Trains Again

One of the best displays on The Limited Mail is reported from the Rialto Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., where H. C. Cravens made a deep shadow box for the lobby with a landscape ending in a mountain, from a tunnel in which a toy train ran down to the foreground. There was not enough space to permit motion, but the train added decidedly to the realism. A miniature signboard carried Blue's name and the play title. The chief charm of the display was the excellence of the work of the artist.

Wild West Helped

Things broke easy for H. C. Farley of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., on The Pony Express. The State Fair was on, and one of the riders tour the two mornings and between shows with an advertisement for The Pony Express on his saddle blanket. The blanket was also used in one act in the arena and was carried when the entire organization turned out for the Armistice Day parade.

Backed by other stunts this made for the best opening day the Empire ever drew.

PUTTING OVER THE GOOSE WOMAN IN DENVER WITH FREE SHOES TO LUCKY BABIES

To get attention for The Goose Woman at the American Theatre, the Universal exploitation man persuaded a baby shop to give a pair of shoes free to every child fortunate enough to be born in Denver on the Saturday or Sunday of the opening. The cut shows the window display and one of half a dozen moving vans bannered for the stunt and used as perambulators.

This was designed by James Henson, of the Pine Tree Theatre, Klamath Falls, Oregon. The poster cutouts are backed by a foliage border and with all green lighting made the lobby a fearsome but decidedly interesting adventure. Simple but very good.

Cleaned Up Big in 10,000 Town

Dover, N. J., is not exactly a metropolis, but it is the centre of a lot of small towns, and while the population is only 10,000 and it looks like a 5,000 town, the Baker Theatre made a cleanup with The Iron Horse recently. The Baker is run on big time lines and even in the little 200 towns fifteen miles or so down Long Valley they were planning to motor up. They had to motor because the Jersey Central is so darned stingy with its branch line trains.

The smaller towns were reached through the bi-weekly newspaper, though fourteen of the nearest towns were posted as well as Dover. Extra newspaper space had the farmers all excited.

All Night Museum

An Iron Horse Museum was opened in a vacant store and night lighting kept the stunt effective as long as Dover stayed awake. The high school pupils and those of the four grade schools were lectured by their teachers, and the school patronage was further interested through the use of football schedules.

Railroad and trolley employeers were specially circularized and several copies of the book were given the public library in return for the use of 5,000 book markers and a window poster announcing that the book was to be had from the library.

A hardware store, specializing in sporting goods, gave a window to a miniature electric railroad, running through an improvised landscape setting, and another store had a locomotive and tender frozen into a cake of ice. Six other windows also made displays of stills.

A special drive was made on the factories and foundries around the town, and the business stood at high water mark, with strong opposition to be faced.

Still "There"

Proving that the last-line limerick contest is still alive, E. P. Briggs made it work for him at the Rialto Theatre, Pueblo, Col.

A pass for two was the daily reward for the best last line to a Freshman Limerick, while two singles were awarded the two next best.

He also stirred up a riot when 300 children gathered to catch 200 inflated balloons tossed from the top of a department store.

The stunts, plus the picture, were good enough to sweep up all the house records.

Father and Son

Looking for a new kink, Charles R. Hamerslough, of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, found one for The Son of His Father.

This was a street perambulation in which a man on horseback was followed by a boy on a pony. The latter carried a banner reading "I am a son of my father, now playing at the Broadway Theatre."

Backed by a prologue that drew from three to five encores at each show, the play went over.

KEEP THE TICKET BOOKS GOING AFTER THE CHRISTMAS SALE

Wins Encores for Stage Bill Poster

You have to hand it to Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City. He made a production number out of a pasted six sheet. He got encores for an out-and-out advertisement. But he did it nicely.

He used a street set, showing the skyline of the town, with a board fence in one. As the curtain rose, two bill posters were slapping a six sheet on the fence, telling of The Pony Express. Only four of the six sheets were pasted on.

When the curtain was up the men turned from the fence and sang Blue Eyed Sally, and at the end of the song turned and slapped a "Criterion. Next Week" on the poster. They had to take two and three chorus encores at the night shows.

Sent Telegrams

Three weeks in advance he put a shadow box into the lobby, showing a pony express rider galloping across the plains, and about the same time he gave a preview to the press and others. Later he put out 5,000 fake telegrams in conjunction with the Postal Telegraph. He had the blanks printed and the company made free distribution. A house program was enclosed.

Another good stunt was a card carrying the cheers of the three Senior High Schools and text about the coming picture. Five thousand of these were given to the students and more were wanted.

Hula Dancers

A float on which girls in hula costume did their stuff was used for three days in Evansville, Ind., on Never the Twain Shall Meet at the Strand Theatre. By the end of the second day's tour most everyone had decided to go, but they ran it a third day to clinch things.

A music store put all the ukes in stock into the window, and the float material was used for a lobby dipslay.

Vogel Gettier, of the Majestic Theatre, Grand Island, Neb., planned this window work, the painting being done by a local artist in default of oil painting from the exchange. The fact that a local artist did the work got more attention.

Slave of Fashion Won Difficult Window Show

Broom Factory Aided Sale of New Brooms

Acting Manager A. M. Avery, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, raided a local broom factory and got up a striking lobby of new brooms. He got big ones for the floor display and toy brooms for a frieze for the top of the lobby, with the title spelled out in broom straw, and the father of all brooms for a special attractor.

This last, which can be seen over to the left of the lobby, was kept on display at the curb, where was a socket for a flag staff. Now and then the porter would be sent out to sweep the sidewalk with the giant, and that always was good for a traffic job.

There were more brooms atop the marquise, which do not show in the picture, and these were supplemented by cutout three sheets.

Not every town has a broom factory, but most grocers will be glad to loan their stocks in return for a credit card, and if it works as well for you as it did for the Capitol you'll be glad you went to a little trouble.

MAKING A CLEAN SWEEP WITH NEW BROOMS FOR NEW BROOMS

Runs a Weekly

Not since before the war has a theatrical organization put out such a complete publication as is issued in Chicago by Lubliner & Trinz.

This is a twelve page weekly, in the general form of the tabloid newspaper, with ample illustrations, theatre talk and trade ads. It is well edited and with proper circulation scheme should be a powerful advertising aid.

Circus Opposition

The first circus of the season hit Charlotte, N. C., the opening day of Harold Lloyd in The Freshman. Warren I. Irvin bought the blankets on the first two elephants to advertise to the crowd watching the parade.

That helped some, but he hadn't squeezed the lemon dry. He had a photographer take a photograph of these two elephants and the next morning the newspaper carried a cut with the line: "The circus is gone, but Harold Lloyd in The Freshman is still here. Don't miss it.'"

Slave of Fashion Wins Nice Window

They all fall sooner or later, but some of them fall slowly. For time Warren Irvin, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., has been trying to break into the most desirable dry goods window, but the owner could not see it.

When A Slave of Fashion was booked, Mr. Irvin decided to try it again, and pointed out that a Slave of Fashion should interest the women in both the play and the store.

That sounded reasonable, so Mr. Irvin had his artist mount some of the stills on artistic cards; the stills being those showing the gorgeous gowns, and the display got so much attention that the store is now willing to take in another display whenever the stills will fit.

A second window was given to a display of sport clothes, and here, again, the stills sold the merchant.

In addition to the Metro-Goldwyn picture he had a locally produced film with practically every merchant in town advertising in his own space to put over the whole show, since there was a quiet advertising angle to the production. It cost nothing and materially bettered business.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

A SUN-UP LOBBY FROM THE STRAND, ASHEVILLE, N. C.

A. S. Grist completely filled his lobby with a setting typical of the play. The curtained doors lead into the theatre and the box office is back of the middle section, a blanket being thrown over the railing to disguise it. Pine needles carpet the floor.

Just a Prologue

Making a Spanish prologue the talking point for Don Q, put the Fairbanks picture over in Newburgh, N. Y., at the Broadway Theatre. Charles Hammerslough knew that the town was close enough to New York to ride on the Broadway run, but a local prologue doubled the appeal, and he was able to save on newspaper space.

The Kiwanis Club of Greeley, Colorado, gave a ladies' night lately, and C. T. Perrin asked them over to the Sterling for the last show of He's a Prince. They came in a body and after the performance the stage was cleared and the orchestra played for the dancing.

Put an Indian Rider on This Ohio Iron Horse

A Universal Release

A NOVELTY 24-SHEET MADE FOR THE CAPITOL, DALLAS

Using a special backing, the standard 24-sheet was given a fresh appeal and made a striking banner for the top of the lobby display. It tied up to the posted paper and yet it had a fresh punch because it was different from the others.

Indian Revere Rode On the Iron Horse

Pony Express Riders have competition in The Iron Horse in the stunt pulled lately by the Mozart Theatre, Canton, Ohio.

An Indian was posted just outside the city limits on top of a locomotive ballyhoo car arranged for the showing. When the crowd watching the World Series returns was the thickest, the outfit was telephoned to start into town, while the police cleared the road to give the perambulator the right of way.

Ignoring the speed laws, the pseudo engine dashed up to the steps of City Hall where it stood while the Indian dashed up the steps to deliver to the Mayor an invitation from William Fox to attend a showing of the picture at the Mozart.

No one was hurt, so it was a good stunt, but if you break the speed laws, even with police consent, and happen to bump off some innocent bystander, it is going to cost you more than you'll make on The Iron Horse. Play safe and figure on something more controlable.

Of course there was the usual newspaper publicity connected with the stunt which was enjoyed both by the Mayor and the Mozart.

Advantage was taken of a conviction of the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad Veterans' Association. The delegates were met with forty bannered cars, and with the engine at their head moved in parade through the town to the City Hall, where the Mayor welcomed the visitors.

He must have been busy that week.

Red Inks

After a long rest the red ink extra is commencing to reappear. In Omaha the Sun Theatre red inked the Bee with "Extra! Extra! Husband borrows neighbor's wife. Details on page 7." On the latter page was a four tens repeating the first page copy as the heading for a display ad on Exchange of Wives.

Over in Astoria, which is a part of Greater New York, the Garrick Theatre red inked a tabloid paper for The Iron Horse.

Looks as though the stunt is due for another swing over the circuit.

Cutouts Are Given Special Backdrops

At the Mosque theatre, Newark, there is a long corridor leading from the street back to the auditorium, and on either side are five bronze frames for displays. These are not planned to take regular sized paper, but are hand painted for each attraction.

For The Phantom of the Opera, cutouts from the smaller sheets were used for figures against painted grounds showing scenes from the play, the one reproduced carrying a cutout of Chaney standing in his underground den. Using two and three planes, an effective tableau was created with a minimum of work, and the layout was one of the most effective yet shown on the Phantom.

Folding frames were used along the lobby and for the outside there was a frame 40 by 60 covered with cutout figures. As the house stands on Broad street, this carried a maximum of appeal to the passer-by.

A Re-cut 24-Sheet Made Into Banner

Stinnett and Charninsky, of the Capitol theatre, Dallas, Texas, made a radio stunt their chief seller on The Phantom of the Opera, but they did not overlook the front of the house, and they recut the standard 24-sheet into a very effective banner, with a painted backing.

The radio stunt was the Phantom Voice, a different singer being used each night for a week before the engagement. The announcer told that the selected singer would be employed in the prologue of the picture As the singers were designated only by number, there was an air of mystery, but as they were sponsored by the various local musical societies, the latter were all out hustling for their favorite.

The stunt cost a $50 salary, but proved to be well worth the money, for 1,000 tickets were sold in the first 25 minutes after the opening and 1,500 were turned away the first night.

The Home Office tie-ups gave a number of windows that had hitherto been inaccessible, chiefly through the Phantom Red tie-ups, and each member of the Universal Dallas office was pledged to write ten letters and plant two window cards to help things along.

New Auto Cards

Credit the Capitol Theatre, Altoona, Pa., for a new auto card. These read "Back Up" on one side and "Excuse Me" on the other with the added information that Excuse Me was at the Capitol.

And for the first time in several months we get a report of the posting of the trash receptacles along the business streets. For a time that was part of the standard campaign, but the idea seems to have blown up recently. It's a useful thing to remember, for the trash cans are good locations.

CUTOUTS FORMED SPECIAL DESIGNS ON THE PHANTOM

two samples of work from the sketch. The first is a two sixes and the other is a down-the-page across seven columns on an eight column page. This is the old stunt of getting a page effect while paying for only seven columns instead of eight—and even in the smaller towns a column saved means money. The cuts are made from the same drawing, but because of the possibilities, a half tone was cut in on the larger space to show the explorers. The comparison is interesting as showing what can be done with a single design. The drawing is practically the same no matter what the dimensions, and Mr. Raleigh writes that he had used it in various sizes in between. He could not find just what he needed in the press book, so he drew the design himself and made it standard, though generally he used the house signature in the upper right hand corner instead of where it shows in these Seattle designs. It gives maximum strength with minimum space, and it helped him to break a lot of records. Generally he went into a town and smashed the entire set, but always he came away with at least one new scalp dangling from his belt. In case you don't remember that far back, it was Mr. Raleigh who made himself a pair of red velvet bloomers from an old box curtain, put on a wig and as a "lady" sign painter did the first woman sign painter stunt down in Butte, Montana, at the American. The stunt has been used hundreds of times since then, but he was the originator. Now that he has found his way in again, we hope he calls more frequently, for he has a lot of good ideas.

tells that it is a whale of a picture, gives the showing times and urges them to attend the matinees, adding a remark about the enlarged orchestra. If he can do that all in seven inches it is useless to pay for more space, even though that's less than one inch per commandment. We'll bet Cliff could put over fifteen commandments in the same space. But it should be remembered that he invaded the State Fair with his stunts, and he did not have to pay inch rates on that. Cliff plans good displays in small faces and saves money while selling just as hard.

Circle Scatter is Good Sales Help

A set of these two-inch scatters helped "Up the Ladder" at the Opera House, Warren, Ohio. It gives the most display for the money, and the copy is going to get attention. Upper and lower case would have helped a little, but there is so little copy that this is comparatively unimportant. There is no connection between the superstition and the play, but the idea will get a smile

Real selling is done on Dangerous Innocence in this two fours from the Mozart Theatre, Canton, Ohio. The reverse takes care of the title and sells that, but just above is the line: "Girls, if you want to know how to keep a man guessing, see——" That's going to sell to all unmarried women too, so you get most of the town. This is not a flashy display, and may be looked down upon by many who feel that cuts and art work are essential to a good display, but this really is a sound advertisement. It puts the story over for sales, and that is all you can ask for.

Cactus Letters Something New

Frosted letters for Summer use have been popular ever since there were theatre advertisements, and we have seen rustic lettering on a woods title, but Loew's theatre, Newark, N. J., springs a new one in this display for Buster Keaton in Go West. That signature is a western scene with Buster and a couple of cowboys in a wilderness of giant cacti which spell the word. It's a nice little stunt and better than the display cut below though that two-car freight train makes a good enough attractor. The portrait on the right is announced as Buster's "cow-star," which is a pretty poor one; though good enough for Newark.

Larmour Suggests Sample Layout

M. W. Larmour, of the National theatre, Graham, Texas, makes the suggestion that we print a few sample layouts to guide the man who doesn't know. The idea came to him while he was talking to his own printer who showed him some samples of atrocious copy. One was written on a slip from a memo pad about three by six inches, and in lead pencil, at that. No effort was made to indicate the display or even the display lines. It was all straight run in. A second was pretty nearly as bad, but it was typewritten and at least was legible, though the first line ran three display lines on the single line. He suggests that we could help the managers AND the printers by giving some good sample layouts. In Picture Theatre Advertising there is a carefully made layout from the late John William Kellette, who was a practical printer as well as a house manager, but we will be glad to give space to some sample layouts if we can get just what we want. We want the original layout, marked for display and sizes, together with the ad which resulted from the layout. We cannot use the layout without the result. Won't some of you shoot in your best and let us show the others. The layout and the advertisement together. They should be on white paper, please, and not yellow copy paper, which will not reproduce. In some offices a careful layout is not necessary if you know how to write to space. In our own work we simply type the copy bank by bank, put from one to four underlines under the display, according to the relative values, mark the space it is to occupy and shoot it in. But then we are set in one of the most careful offices in New York, and even at that we may indicate the relative sizes by points instead of underline, if we are particular. In most offices it is almost necessary to mark in

Then the printer knows just how much to set to a line and what size to set it in. But we hope to be able to show you some real layouts presently. In Mr. Larmour's ad he was unable to get a cut for The Coast of Folly. He turned to his scrap book, and found this design in a half page of small ad samples Lem Stewart sent in several months ago. He made it a two sixes, which is rather larger than the original, and got a very pretty display. It really stood out better than would the average cut. The moral is to keep a scrap book of these pages and turn to them when you are stumped, and you'll have hundreds of managers all ready to help you, for these reproductions are the cream of the advertising from all over the country.

A Crossing Signal Is Made With Rule

For the second week of The Iron Horse at Fox's American Theatre, Paterson, N. J., the manager wanted something different. The big point was to put over the second week and he did not want to spend the money for a large space just to let in a cut. He got the idea of a crossing signal, but there was no time for art work and engraving, so he just took his copy to the newspaper office and they fixed him up with some rule work that did well enough to get the idea over. Even if you do not immediately catch the idea of the design, the form is arresting, and the three words at the top of the space gave a clue to the design. This is only a two fours, but larger space would not have brought any better returns, so the manager saved money without losing sales. You can save money, too.

Blames Charleston Onto Lillian Gish

Lillian Gish is about the last star we would hook up with the prevalent dance craze, but the Hollywood Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., made extremes meet by announcing Miss Gish as the donor of a set of prizes for a Charleston contest during the run of Romola.

The Charleston and Romola are as oil and water, but the picture played a cleanup and no one complained of either.

"Time, The Comedian"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Robert Z. Leonard Uses Novel and Effective Treatment and Camera Effects to Advantage

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A UNIQUE idea has been used by Director Robert Z. Leonard in filming "Time, the Comedian," a Metro-Gold- Kate Jordon, with Lew Cody, Mae Busch and Gertrude Olmstead heading the cast.

The story covers a period of a number of years and is based on the pranks that Time sometimes plays in human lives. Both angles of this idea have been very effectively put over by Mr. Leonard by the introduction of a miniature figure representing the idea of the title, who turns the big book of years shows the blot made by the mother's desertion, erases it on the occasion of her sacrifice, and all through the story acts as a sort of guide pointing out the development of the action. The plot deals with a discontented mother who leaves husband and baby to go with a wealthy idler. The husband commits suicide and the idler leaves her. Later we find the woman a successful opera singer.

The man again appears and falls in love with the daughter, now grown. To save her when she refuses to listen to her advice, the mother goes to this man and feigns love. The daughter finds her and guesses the truth, and finally finds happiness with a faithful suitor.

The action is smoothly developed and holds the interest well. Despite its improbability the situation of the same man winning the love of both mother and daughter brings about a forceful situation that has good dramatic punch, and the allegorical idea showing "Time, the Comedian" playing with life adds to the enjoyment of the picture. These scenes introduce clever trick photography for Time is shown as a miniature figure, laughing and dancing about among objects and persons many times his size. It will have many guessing how this is done. While the ending is rather abrupt, "Time, the Comedian" as a whole is pleasing entertainment.

Mae Busch gives a fine performance as the wayward and penitent mother and Gertrude Olmstead pleasingly portrays the daughter. Lew Cody is effective as the polished and none too moral man of the world, though the role is less villianous than usual. A good supporting cast handles the other parts.

Dorothy Mackaill in Newspaper Serial of Girl Who Gets a Million, Is a Good Box-Office Bet

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

ADAPTED from a newspaper serial by H. L. Gates, the First National production, "Joanna" features Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall. The same angles which made the novel appeal to the masses should make this picture a good box-office attraction.

Like "Chickie," a previous offering featuring Miss Mackaill, "Joanna" also deals with the experiences of a working girl among the jazzy ultra-rich class but the story has been handled from a different angle. In both of these pictures Paul Nicholson is cast as the idle rich chap.

Joanna, a poor saleswoman in a swell establishment is suddenly notified that a million dollars has been placed to her credit. This gives her an entree into the fast wealthy set but results in alienating her real sweetheart, a struggling young architect. There follows an era of gay parties and reckless spending and in a couple of years the million is gone. Her wealthy admirer makes a proposal without mentioning marriage and she almost kills him. She then learns it was an experiment resulting from a discussion among wealthy men as to whether the modern girl would remain "good" in the face of temptation after acquiring a taste of luxury and she was selected because one of the men who formerly loved her mother, believed in her. This man adopts her as his daughter and her sweetheart comes back to her.

In the role of Joanna, Dorothy Mackaill is congenially cast and gives a fine portrayal of the modern lively girl who has the faults of her class, but remains good at heart, and succeeds in keeping your full sympathy. The scenes giving an insight into the supposed manner of living of the wealthy fast set will prove interesting to many and there are some scenes of a Fifth Avenue shop with models in beautiful gowns that will take the feminine eye. The climax is unexpected and effective and there is good human interest in the development of the story with a pleasing ending. Girls especially will be interested in Joanna's adventures for many will picture themselves in her place and have had dreams of what they would do under similar condi-

"Skinner's Dress Suit"—Universal Pictures Corp.

Good Story, Very Amusing Comedy and Realistic Human Touches Make Newest Denny Film a Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

THERE ought to be a boom in the market for gentlemen's evening apparel when the Universal-Jewel production "Skinner's Dress Suit" starring Reginald Denny is released, for many a young wife, when she sees what an outfit of "open-faced" clothes did for Skinner will vision similar possibilities for her own husband. More important, however, for the exhibitor is the fact that this picture will afford thorough enjoyment for patrons

"Skinner's Dress Suit" is a peach of a picture founded on a corking good idea that gets its laughs from familiar and homely traits of human nature. While for laugh purposes the situations have been given a farcical twist, the story is thoroughly human and possible if not entirely plausible and is of the type that reaches right down into our daily lives. In Skinner and Honey, each of us will see either a lot of our own traits or those of our acquaintances, for Skinner's experiences strikes pretty close to home. He and Honey and the others are real people.

The story is all based on the fact that his wife, Honey, idolizes Skinner and makes him demand a raise which is refused as Jackson the biggest customer, has withdrawn his business. Honey has already told friends and Skinner has not the heart to tell her the truth. She starts spending the "raise" by making him buy a dress suit. This opens the way to social triumph which means more spending. As the bills begin coming due, Skinner is fired but before he has a chance to tell Honey she whisks him off to a society dance at a swell hotel. Jackson is stopping there and his pampered wife insists she wants to go to the dance and he must get someone to invite them. He finally picks on Skinner and before the evening is over Skinner has landed the big contract. The next morning his ex-bosses are camping on Skinner's trail begging him to come back as a partner in the firm.

As a novel, this story was a big success. In transferring it to the screen Universal has retained the groundwork of the story all the way through but has made it even more humorous and brought the situations right up to date. For instance, there are a lot of good laughs when plodding Skinner starting to blossom out has the stenographer teach him the Charleston and gets caught by the boss. His social triumph comes when he and Honey teach these jazzy steps to the village "society swells." These scenes with the odd assortment of human beings of all shapes, types and sizes lined up trying bravely to master the intricacies of this peppy dance is a scream.

Reginald Denny is excellent as Skinner and Laura LaPlante is delightful as Honey. Next to these comes Lionel Braham as big blustering Jackson. His performance is especially fine, and William Strauss as the Hebrew tailor is a fine laugh-getter.

Without disparaging the fine work of the players, a great deal of the credit must go to Director William A. Seiter who has so effectively played up the thoroughly human angles for comedy effect. So true to life are the characters and their actions that even the farcical situations seem thoroughly plausible in watching the picture and you take Skinner and Honey right to your heart.

From the opening scenes showing Skinner hustling for the train, which he misses to the final sequence where he pretends that he must give his bosses' offer due deliberation there is a continual succession of smiles, chuckles and honest-to-goodness laughs smoothly developed and spontaneous, growing logically out of the action.

Pola Negri Is Given Strong Comedy Relief in Story of Countess in Midwestern Town

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

IN CARL VAN VECHTEN'S story "The Tattooed Countess," which has been screened by Paramount as "A Woman of the World," Pola Negri whose characteristics are too markedly foreign to convincingly portray an American woman and whose stories with European settings has not appealed strongly to many patrons in small towns, is now provided with a congenial foreign role and at the same time with the better liked American locale.

Properly, this is a psychological study of a reformer who hits the nail on the head when he says love repressed finds outlet in fanaticism and a craving to interfere with the rights of others. This is the real idea of the story but as it is too mentally subtle for pantomimic expression the director has painted with broad comedy strokes the picture of fiery Italian noblewoman seeking forgetfulness in the home of distant midwestern relatives. The result is a vivid story with a wealth of comedy relief most of which is genuinely amusing.

The Countess Natatorini seeks to forget a faithless lover in the home of her cousin Sam Poore. Richard Granger, newly elected district attorney and reformer, is strongly attracted to her. Because a series of innocent events arouses his jealousy he denounces her alleged immorality and demands she be ordered out of town. She avenges the insult with a horsewhip, but when she draws blood forgets all but her love and we last see them in a hack on the way to the station and the honeymoon and he is offering her the cigarettes he denounced so strongly.

There is so much comedy development that the real plot loses some of its intensity, rising to high power at the close, but the average audience will prefer the comedy.

Miss Negri never was so human on the screen. She is not the constantly wrought-up bundle of nervous passion, but a woman with a strong sense of humor. Holmes Herbert is convincing as the reformer and Charles Emmet Mack as the innocent cause of his jealousy gives a fine picture of an amorous young man.

The comedy falls largely to Chester Conklin, with an almost impossible moustache with Lucille Ward as a feeder in the role of his wife, but many others contribute to the local color is the comedy scenes

There is a delightful scene where the Countess finds that they are selling the right to talk to a real Countess at a quarter a head, and this is built up when one curious old man offers to donate another quarter if she will show the tattoo mark that is the ineradical reminder of her foreign love. When Conklin seeks to console her by showing that he has a railroad train running from his right wrist to his left hand, clear across his chest the last development of the situation is reached. The direction is kept well in hand and this presentation should please many who have not cared for the earlier Negri pictures.

Helene Chadwick and Huntley Gordon Featured in Human Interest Melodrama with New Twists

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

WITH HUNTLEY GORDON and Helene Chadwick in the featured roles, Warner Brothers are offering "The Golden Cocoon," an adaptation of a novel by Ruth Cross, which deals with a woman's fight for love and honor against a campaign of slander which had as its motive the defeat of her husband in his fight for high political honors.

Miss Chadwick appears as an innocent country girl who wins a university scholarship offered by a wealthy judge. She falls in love with one of the professors who jilts her on the wedding eve. Aimlessly she wanders about and faints in front of a house of evil reputation and is taken in and revived. As she emerges she is seen by a grafting politician who later seeks to use this knowledge to force from the race the judge whom she has since married. The wife disappears, feigning suicide, but is found by the professor just before the election. He goes to the governor and the wife follows. In a struggle the professor is shot and exonerates the wife who keeps her secret.

The story is smoothly told and develops good dramatic moments. There is a strong dependence on coincidence. The story hinges on the failure of the wife to confide in her husband. There are two good twists to the story, the finding of the girl in such damaging surroundings and especially her clever ruse to keep her story out of the paper by feigning suicide, depending on newspaper ethics to prevent publication of any slander against the dead. Neither of these are entirely convincing, but they provide punch situations that hold the interest, and the trend of the story cannot be easily foretold. This adds to the interest.

The featured players give excellent performances. Richard Tucker as the professor, a thorough cad and Frank Campeau as the politician are well cast. The average patron will probably consider "The Golden Cocoon" pleasing entertainment.

"The Midnight Limited"—Rayart Pictures Corp.

Popular Cast in Melodrama of Railroading with Good Human Interest and Punch Climax

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

AS one of the newest releases on the independent market Rayart Pictures Corporation is offering on the independent market "The Midnight Limited" produced by Gerson Pictures Corporation. Heading the cast is Gaston Glass and Wanda Hawley and included among the players is Richard Holt who has been starred in several Gerson productions.

As indicated by the title, "The Midnight Limited" is a railroad melodrama, in which a vagrant who stops at a lonely station to rob, is touched by pity when the elderly agent is seized with a stroke of paralysis and his beautiful grand-daughter left helpless. Formerly a telegraph operator, he remains to aid and falls in love with the girl. Former crook pals appear but he outwits them and saves a gold shipment. They cut loose the car and as it is speeding down grade, the hero averts a collision with the Limited by blowing up the bridge. Despite his past record, his heroism brings praise from the officials and he wins the girl.

There is a good human interest angle to this story wiith several dramatic situations. A novel one is where the old agent, unable to move, watches the "crook" make love to the girl, and by tapping on a plate with his ring in the telegraph code threatens him with revenge when he recovers. Interest in the romance is heightened by the rivalry of the son of the president of the road, who is faced with a decision where as chief despatcher he orders that the express with his sweetheart aboard be ditched to save the hundreds of passengers on the mail.

The work of the entire cast is satisfactory and the scene of the blowing up of the bridge is effectively staged. There are several little details of railroading that are well handled. "The Midnight Limited" offers pleasing entertainment for melodrama fans and lovers of railroad stories.

Charles Ray Scores in Pleasing Rural Drama Replete with Humorous Touches and Pathos

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

CHARLES RAY again appears in one of his oldtime roles in the Chadwick picture, "Some Punkins," directed by Jerome Storm, under whose supervision the star made most of his successes. This latest Ray feature is a light rural comedy with flashes of realism and pathos, but mostly comedy involving a small-town romance and a trick country fire department.

Charles Ray appears to much advantage, through the vehicle is in most places very light entertainment and though in the dramatic moments Ray seems to over-act a bit. The story is well-knit and dramatically constructed, though comedy is its chief ingredient.

Playing opposite the star is Duane Thompson as an unsophisticated country girl. Her work is uniformly good although she is not quite the type. George Fawcett has the character part of farmer, heavy drinker and, finally, would-be bootlegger, and gives a most effective performance. Fanny Midgley is very good as the mother.

Ray plays Lem Blossom, who falls in love with Mary Griggs, already the possessor of a beau in the worldly person of Tom Perkins. Mary's pa frowns on the romance but Lem persevers. When Lem fails to sell a load of pumpkins, his father in desperation turns bootlegger. Mrs. Blossom and Lem smell the bottles and Pa Blossom drives Lem away. On the way to the station Lem conceives the idea of a corner on pumpkins and puts it over to the tune of thousands of dollars. Mary's house takes fire and Lem, after trying the fire-pumper he invented, risks his life to save her life. Everything, then is rosy. Lem has the money and the girl.

About That Buck We're Shelling Out

WE'RE getting a good kick out of handing over a dollar for any major error that one of you folks writes us to point out. The letters are coming along often enough to show that you're taking real interest in helping us make this the most accurate Chart being published.

But, remember this, please!—Major errors, such as wrong feature footage. A parenthesis left off after a star name—or a release eliminated as we do cut them out at top of list when we add new releases—those aren't major errors. They don't work any hardship on exhibitors.

Last week we got three different letters from exhibitors—glad to get 'em. They brought out the point that Paramount's "Golden Princess" footage was away out. One said correct footage was "less than 7,000"—another gave it from an exchange measurement as 6,400, and the third had it 6,502.

So you see, prints differ SOME in different places—BUT—these boys will get the buck because we were away up around 8,000, as we got it with the information published with the review of that film. But it shows you that minor differences are bound to occur—just wise us up when they're REAL ERRORS.

Oh, yes—the New York Paramount office gives that footage on "Golden Princess" as 6,546.

Your Equipment

Service for You—Theatre Owner—Builder—Studio—Laboratory—Exchange Executive—From Your Angle

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

To the interest in the "Protect the Print" movement of the following folks and their willingness to co-operate is due the credit for the picture above—W. Gluck and Joe Hornstein, of Howells Cine Equipment Corp.; Frederick Watson, of Duplex Motion Picture Industries, Inc.; P. A. McGuire, Nicholas Power Company. They sure have assembled a good aggregation of the things that protect the print.

MERRY CHRISTMAS—to you, Mr. Exhibitor—to you boys in projection rooms, to you folks in the exchanges! My brothers and sisters all ask me to get them in on that!

Boys, lookit the Christmas Tree what this poor, hard-workin' Print has got up.

I got all hopped up a couple of weeks back about what a punk deal the world was givin' me and stood up in meetin' and beefed about it.

But it's about time for the poor, hard-workin' Print to horn in again, and I thought I'd like to tell you about a dream I drump the other night.

Seemed like I was laying on a nice, clean table in some exchange and there was a sweet lookin' girl rewindin' a reel by the side of me and then she picks me up and she lays me on another table alongside of the swellest splicin' block what ever I seen, and then she makes some figures about what pitcher I was a part of and then she starts in to run me through her fingers.

Oh, what a wonderful thrill! That girl tested every patch and when she come to some what wasn't made right or didn't look like they would be strong, she took that wonderful patchin' block and some cement that was so good it was like nectar to me, and she made perfect patches. Then she takes and pulls out where some of my perforations all got ripped out and she has a roll of new film of that scene which her boss, the exchange manager, has saw to it that she has got ready to hand, and she puts that new scene in.

And when she rewinds me, on a set that is so bright and so perfect and smooth that I spin like a happy top, she watches to see she ain't missed nothin'.

Seemed like I was movin', then, through space, in a strong case with others of my friends and relations, and when we'd get a bump the case would take the strain off our reels. And next I knowed I saw light again in a swell little projection room where a feller lifts me out careful, looks over my reel and puts me through one more inspection—but there ain't nothin' to be did to me!

And then I was runnin' through a projector—oh, boy! the film valve was workin' right, the tension rollers and the aperture plate and whole intermittent movement was NEW—and genuine, belongin' to the machine of which it was a part of.

Seemed like when I was all rolled up again, down in the lower magazine, that feller took me out and took me over into a room where they was a lot of boxes all Christmassy and tied up with ribbons and this feller says, "Open 'em—they're all for the hard workin' Print"—and—

I can't tell you about it. There was all sorts of parts for projectors and things to help protect the poor, hard workin' print—from the picture on the wall to the things in with the decorations on the little Christmas tree that was set up in a corner, right through all the boxes, big and little.

Oh—it was sure one SWELL dream!

Has it got to be only a dream?

Or will you buck up and gimme the welcome at the front door instead of givin' me the gate?

Protect the Print!

Gimme the benefit of projector replacements where the parts has got so wore that they pull and tear me.

Gimme the backbone that decent patches, made with holdin' cement, on the right sort of patchin' block will make sure of me havin'. Rewind me right. Ship me safe.

Gimme all the things what will let me stand up and get the people to comin' to the theatre more!

Yeah—I know I sound like a flapper coaxin' her daddy—"gimme—gimme!"

But yet, however, even notwithstanding that it is more blessed to give than to graft, I'm doin' this beggin' so's I can make your whole year happy—each and all of you—by givin' the exchange man more sales, the exhibitor more pleased quarter-shellers, the projectionist a chance to get a real rep for good screenin'.

Gimme a Merr yChristmas and I'll give you a whole year of good will and good business.

Make this a "Protect the Print" Christmas all 'round!

An Event!

LOUIS B. MAYER—a name that commands respect for ability and one that guarantees to you vital interest in what that leader in production has to say—has very kindly honored a request for an informal interview on the subject of the part that studio equipment plays in the insuring of quality in production.

YOUR EQUIPMENT is honored and you of the studios will get this red-meat, straight-to-the-point chat next week. More good things coming for you.

To Stimulate Protect-the-Print Effort

NAME THE OBJECTS in, on and around the Christmas Tree, in the picture yonder, that are going to make this such a happy season for the hard working Print. All are in plain view. Every one of you who handles prints should know all of them.

Write a letter telling what you are doing to protect the print and send the list and letter together, with your name, address and theatre, exchange or other motion picture connection, to VAN, MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S YOUR EQUIPMENT DEPARTMENT, 516 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

For the most accurately named list of Protect-the-Print objects with the best letter on what its writer is doing to protect the print, Moving Picture World will award the sum of Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00), allotted to YOUR EQUIPMENT department by the Chalmers Publishing Company in the effort to stimulate better prints.

For the second most accurate list with a letter as above, will be awarded a Duplex Film Patching Block, donated by Duplex Film Laboratories in the interest of the campaign for protection of the print—to make more perfect patching possible.

For the third most accurate list with letter as above, will be awarded a Rewinder Set, donated by Independent Movie Supply Company of New York, in the interest of this campaign for print protection—an important item in the rewinding of prints safely and quickly.

In the event of a tie in any of the three award classes, a similar award will be made to each of the tying contributors. While this is a series of awards arranged in an effort to promote interest in film protection rather than a prize contest, it will be well to set the date of mailing this issue of Moving Picture World as an opening date for the sending of letters and lists; and Saturday noon, January sixteenth, will be the closnig time for the acceptance for consideration of letters and lists... ..With the exception of members of the staff of Moving Picture World or of the staffs of Duplex Film Industries, Inc., or of Independent Movie Supply Company of New York, anyone is eligible to submit accuracy-testing list and protect-the-print letter.

The judges who will pass upon the accuracy of your list and decide the value of your protect-the-print work are as follows:

F. H. Richardson, editor Moving Picture World's "Better Projection" department, a man constantly boosting for print protection.

H. H. Buxbaum, Sales Manager for New York and Eastern New Jersey for Fox Film Company.

The Editor of YOUR EQUIPMENT department.

These judges will base their decision on the accuracy of your naming of protect-the-print objects in, on and around the Chirstmas Tree and upon the value of your contribution to print protection effort as stated in your letter. Spelling, grammar or correct use of English will have no bearing upon their decision.

Write your name, address and film activity plainly.

Awards will be made and their recipients named in an issue of Moving Picture World as soon as possible after the date of closing this protect-the-film campaign on January 16th.

Publix Theatres to Build Big Studio For Adequately Equipping New Presentations

A MAMMOTH STUDIO BUILDING, designed for the construction and rehearsal of elaborate stage presentations and manned by a staff which will include several of the country's foremost experts, is the ambitious and revolutionary project announced by Publix Theatres Corporation. Here will be planned and developed, under the direction of John Murray Anderson, famous Greenwich Village Follies producer, the stage productions which are to be featured in the leading houses of the nation-wide circuit of motion picture theatres operated by the new corporation.

The studio, which is to be a five-story building, 140 feet wide and 225 feet deep, will be erected on a site directly opposite the big motion picture producing studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in Long Island City. The plans for the structure are being prepared in the office of R. E. Hall & Co., Inc., of New York, architects and engineers; immediately upon their completion and final approval contracts will be let and the work of construction will be started.

In it will be a full-sized stage with complete electrical and scenic equipment, a large paint shop and scene dock, a carpenter shop, a special audition hall, six rehearsal rooms, a music library, an orchestra rehearsal room, costume and drapery departments, property room, a picture projection theatre, ballet rehearsal rooms and the offices of the production manager, Herschel Stuart; the director of productions, John Murray Anderson; the musical director, Nathaniel W. Finston; the ballet master, Boris Petroff, and other members of the staff.

One of the special features of the studio will be a theatrical lighting equipment of the most modern type, under the supervision of a master electrician or engineer who thus will be afforded every opportunity for developing new effects in theatrical lighting, a form of visual enjoyment which the public has come unconsciously to accept as a most pleasurable feature of up-to-date motion picture theatre entertainment. Facilities will also be provided for experimentation in the field of interior design and decoration of theatres.

In the screening of films in the studio's projection room special attention will be given to short subjects, the novelty shorter films that are an important part of the program of motion picture theatres. These films, as well as feature pictures, will be musically cued by the director of music. Attention will also be given to the development of scenic, musical and dancing novelties to be associated as a unit with certain particular feature pictures and short subjects.

In the master music room will be filed the most complete music library in the world, the combined resources of some of the finest theatres in the United States. The administration of this library, together with the technical work of arrangements and orchestrations, will be under the supervision of the director of music, Nathaniel W. Finston. Mr. Finston, since the days when he served as conductor at the Rivoli Theatre in New York City, has become a nationally known figure. For some time he was the music director for the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago and for the past few weeks he has been managing the musical presentations at the new Metropolitan Theatre in Boston.

The dancing rehearsal rooms at the studio will offer facilities for a ballet school where dancers will be developed under the direction of Boris Petroff, ballet master. Mr. Petroff also comes from the Balaban & Katz organization in Chicago, with which he served as master of the ballet.

John Murray Anderson, who will originate and direct the production under a long-term contract with Publix Theatres, first came into fame as the producer of the "Greenwich Village Follies." He was immediately recognized as a pioneer in a new field.

Herschel Stuart, who will be the production manager of the new studio, until recently has been associated with Famous Players-Lasky as theatre manager. At the invitation of Sam Katz, president of Publix Theatres, he recently came to New York from the Missouri Theatre in St. Louis, of which he was manager, to accept the new position.

Directly associated with Mr. Anderson, as designer of stage settings and costumes, will be Hermann Rosse, who occupies a position in the theatrical world hardly second to that of Mr. Anderson himself.

Carmine Vitola will be the foreman of the mechanical department, supervising the building and painting of scenery. Mr. Vitola is widely known as a scenic artist, having been identified in such capacity with the Chicago Opera, Music Box Revue and other organizations.

Denver Not Lagging—Theatre Builders Active

SEVEN lots on the corner of East Colfax avenue and Race street have been purchased by Harry E. Huffman as the last big step in the promotion of the new $300,000 Aladdin Theatre for Capitol Hill, Denver. All plans are now completed and the erection of the six-story building will be started immediately. The structure will front eighty-five feet on East Colfax. The main part of the building will be four stories high with a huge oriental tower two stories high atop it. Architects' plans indicate that it will be the most beautiful of Denvers' playhouses, and will be patterned after the Taj Mahai Temple in India. The style throughout will follow the oriental design in lines and color, including every known comfort and convenience found in the finest of modern theatres. One of the interesting innovations will be a section for those who desire to smoke during the show. This will be made possible by a special ventilating system for that section of the theatre. Harry E. Huffman, promoter, has been connected with the motion picture industry here for a number of years, he at present being the owner and manager of the Blue Bird and Bide-A-Wee Theatres, and also President of the M.P.T.O. of Colorado.

Runs a Weekly

Not snce before the war has a theatrical organization put out such a complete publication as is issued in Chicago by Lubliner & Trinz.

This is a twelve page weekly, in the general form of the tabloid newspaper, with ample illustratons, theatre talk and trade ads. It is well edited and with proper circulation scheme should be a powerful advertising aid.

Preddey Prospers

Exhibitors in the Pacific coast territory seem mighty strong for the Preddey reflector lamp. Walter G. Preddy is kept busy cooperating with the folks who plan their equipment for best screen illuminating conditions. That office at 187 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, looks like the proverbial bee hive—only there's no room for drones.

The exchange or exhibitor giving patrons anything less than good prints is working to kill public interest in pictures.

Over $2,000,000 in Next 60 Days—Wow!

MICHAEL GORE, president of West Coast Theatres says they're going to spend over $2,000,000 within the next sixty days! Not just throw it around, either—but turn all those dollars into still more of the sort of theatres they've been building—the sort that get and hold the patron through expert attention to equipment.

This amount refers only to neighborhood houses and does not cover the down town theatres. The Uptown Theatre at Tenth and Western will open in six weeks costing $415,000 and seating 2,000. The Belmont at Vermont and First will cost $485,000 and 1,500. The Manchester at Manchester and Moneta will open Christmas day and will cost $300,000 and contain a seating capacity of 1,500. The Balboa at 87th and Vermont will open in four weeks seating 1,500 and representing an outlay of $280,000. The Mesa at Slauson and Mesa drive will cost $340,000 and seat 1,500 persons. In addition to these theatres the West Coast has 12 more houses under construction.

They Went to Reno But Not for Decree

EVERYBODY knows what grows in Reno —divorce decrees. Naturally when a flock of supply dealers, theatre decorators and other film folks lit out from San Francisco—there were surmises.

'Twas all right, though. They went for no divorces—but to attend the opening of Reno's Majestic Theatre in its new form. The house, which is owned by the T. & D. Jr. Circuit, and operated under the management of Frank Costello, has been transformed into one of rare beauty. The decorative work was handled by the Robert E. Powers Studios. The visitors were entertained on a lavish scale by various clubs and commercial organizations of Reno.

Protect the print—YOUR future is at stake.

KansasCityBuilding—They're Going Strong

MANY plans for new theatres in Kansas City and surrounding territory give promise of one of the most marked building booms in many years in the Western Missouri city.

An office building, housing the largest motion picture theatre in Kansas City, now is under consideration for a site at Thirteenth and Main streets. The largest house at present is the Mainstreet, with a seating capacity of 3,500. The Midland Theatres Company, which controls the site, 177x109 feet at the northeast corner of Thirteenth and Baltimore, would join this property with the northwest corner of Thirteenth and Main streets, 121x130 feet, owned by H. M. Wolff, who is interested in the Midland Company. Mr. Woyff now is in New York, but consummation of the deal is expected in a few days.

In Manhattan, Kas., the Miller Construction Company is building a new 800-seat house, which will be completed soon. The manager of the theatre has not yet been named.

At Thirty-eighth and Main streets, Kansas City, the city's finest suburban house is progressing rapidly. November 17 saw the completion of the prize contest in naming the theatre, which will be known as the Madrid, and under the management of Jack Roth.

But construction is not being confined to theatres alone. Dr. H. Zoglin of Kansas City has announced that he will erect a 2-story building with a 50foot frontage at Eighteenth and Wyandotte street—the heart of Kansas City's movie row—to house film exchanges. F. B. O. and the Exhibitors' Poster Exchange already have leased space.

"How-are-ya Hawaii"—See You Have a "Mainland Style" House

WHERE the grass skirt and the ukelele were bred they have wide-awake showmen. When Adam C. Baker opened the New Palace Theatre, in Hilo, he proved it, and proved it strong.

The house was planned following a visit of Mr. and Mrs. Baker, and their son, Kamakala, to the mainland, and an inspection of the leading moving picture houses in California. It includes the most advanced ideas in arrangement, construction and furnishings found in mainland houses, with such changes as were found advisable to meet climatic conditions in Hawaii.

The lobby is delightfully Hawaiian and in its appointments resembles the lanai of a summer hotel. Wicker settees and lounging chairs are scattered about, decorated with gaily colored upholstery,—with palms giving it the appearance of out of doors. The floor is finished in cement tiling of red, green and yellow, the walls are of cream and coral tint, while the ceiling is finished in flattone Caen-stone. The lights are softened with parchment shades and the entrances to the corridor have draperies in Pistachio, green and burnt orange. To the left of the lobby is the office of Mr. Baker and a vault for the storage of film.

A feature of the foyer are two inset fountains which give it a unique charm.

The auditorium of the house is of the amphitheatre type and is reached by a tunnel entrance from the foyer and by two stairways. The seating capacity is 813, with the seating area divided into five sections.

Owing to the warm climate special attention has been paid to the seating equipment and wide use has been made of cane and wicker. Most of the chairs were furnished by the Haywood-Wakefield Co. and are similar to those used in the best houses at Honolulu. The lounge chairs of wicker were made in the Islands.

The projection room equipment was furnished by the Hawaii Film Supply Company, of Honolulu, and consists of two Power 6B projectors, Power dissolver, Fulco arc controls and Hooker rewinder and cabinet.

Music is furnished by a Wurlitzer automatic instrument, but provisions have been made for the installation of an organ of the divided unit type at a later date. The orchestra pit that has been provided has ample space for a good sized orchestra.

The walls and ceiling of the theatre are finished with paneling and elaborate grill work, the latter allowing outside ventilation from both sides. Three large chandeliers form the main lighting for the auditorium. An interesting feature of the theatre is the fire escape, the first of any building on the Island of Hawaii.

Patrons pay to see perfect prints.

Middletown, Conn. to Have Capital 'Capitol'

"THE CAPITOL" is the name selected for the new theater being built in Middletown, Connecticut, by the S. and S. Amusement Corporation of that city. Miss Katherine O'Brien was awarded a gold prize for naming the theater and writing the best essay and will be the guest of honor at the opening next February. The theater is the second to be erected in Middletown within the last few years and will seat 1,600 people.

The theater will be the largst in Middlesex county. Of its seating capacity, 1,150 seats will be on the main floor. There will be a balcony but no gallery. Reed chairs will constitute the seating equipment, and will be of a type making for relaxation and ease.

The Gordon theater interests of New Haven have a part in building the theater and will in a large measure have a voice in its control although the majority interest is held by Alexander and Salvatore Saraceno.

Legitimate shows, vaudeville and motion pictures will be presented, the management has announced.

Installs Reflector Arcs

THEY know what improvements in equipment mean in East Baltimore, Md. The management of the Patterson Theatre in that thriving community has just installed Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps. They called in the live-wire co-operation of W. C. Haefle Company—and got the best.

A Second Beginning

THE year is passing but the season is in its prime. However, there is something magical in the approach of the New Year. There is a psychological effect which we unconsciously reckon with. The New Year gives us an opportunity and an excuse for another beginning. Many of us have started out on this season with high hopes, ambitious plans, and in many instances found ourselves against a stone wall of patron opposition; we have encountered certain economic obstacles—we have miscalculated in our buying of pictures—we have misjudged our ability as purveyors of entertainment. In fact we can go down the whole length and breadth of managerial litany and find reasons why we should begin again.

The New Year gives us an opportunity. It is our second breath so to speak, and it gives us time to catch up with ourselves and get down to business. During the last year, and since the opening of this new season of 1925-26 we have been privileged to sit on a sort of pinnacle and watch the activities of producers in general. Such a department as this gives us that rare privilege, as it is a meeting point of ideas; it is a junction for suggestions, and as we look back upon the entire year and as we take cognizance of the startling innovations which have marked this present season so far, we are encouraged more than ever that the presentation business will soon be one of the best businesses in the theatrical category.

Managers are realizing more and more that they must offer something more than a picture, and are busily casting in the river of ideas in the hope that they will pull out a policy that will help them to successfully compete and win for them the benefits of good business.

One of the salient features of the large theatrical combine which has just taken place is not so much the picture as its surrounding program. More attention has been focused on the stage features, and music, than on the selection of proper pictures. We are not attempting to summarize the year's business nor to analyze certain features and identify the outstanding mistakes of the year. We want to save that for next week. This is a preparatory retrospect. To successfully accomplish the things we have started out to do it will be necessary for us to believe in our own ability to accomplish these things, to hold fast the faith that the right things, the good things, the artistic things always succeed and get over. And then, after we have a grip on the situation we must take note of the faults we have made, so let us prepare to reason together, and let us not be afraid of the future days nor the shadows of a foreboding competition that may threaten to engulf us. The producers and managers who have consistently developed this presentation business are in on the ground floor. Possession is not only nine points of the law, but it's nine points in success.

Elkins to Appear at Rivoli

EDDIE ELKINS and his orchestra will be one of the permanent new attractions at the Rivoli Theatre when that house, following its closing for alterations, reopens on Christmas Day with the new policy of which the John Murray Anderson presentations will be an outstanding feature. The contract with Elkins, according to the announcement from Publix Theatres Corporation, was closed Wednesday through the William Morris Vaudeville Agency.

Elkins and his orchestra have been Night Club favorites in New York for some time. They are at present the chief attraction at a New York City club, and for several months were featured at the Club Richman. The engagement at their present club will terminate just prior to Christmas week.

The Rivoli contract calls for an orchestra of twenty-five pieces, nearly twice as many as Elkins has been conducting during his Night Club engagements.

Elkins is one of the foremost artists in his line in the country, with a tremendous local following. His appearance at the Rivoli in a new type of musical divertissement is certain to further popularize the entertainment to be provided under the new policy.

Wenger to Europe

WE are in receipt of announcement that John Wenger has been placed under contract with Famous Players-Lasky to design the sets and supervise the lighting effects for the various stage units and musical accompaniment surrounding the programs of motion pictures for the Capitol Theatre in London. Mr. Wenger will embark on this mission early in January and he is expected to take three months for the execution of his work. Mr. Wenger will introduce his new scenic ideas which have met with the metropolitan approval, and may enjoy the distinction of being the first American designer to be engaged for a European motion picture theatre.

Personalities

AMONG the interesting items which we have noted in the mail and reported through various sources, we learn that EDDIE ELKINS AND HIS ORCHESTRA, who are exponents of a policy similar to that of Paul Ash will be presented at the Rivoli Theatre during the holidays, and that Ben Bernie will undoubtedly leave the Rialto. HUGO RIESENFELD is taking a flyer into vaudeville for a limited engagement and is appearing at the New York Hippodrome with his symphony orchestra.

Simple, Effective Settings

The Utmost in Simplicity is the Keynote to a Successful Setting When Used as a Background for Singers—Trio of Novelties Arranged in Combination—May Be Used at Slight Expense By the Showman

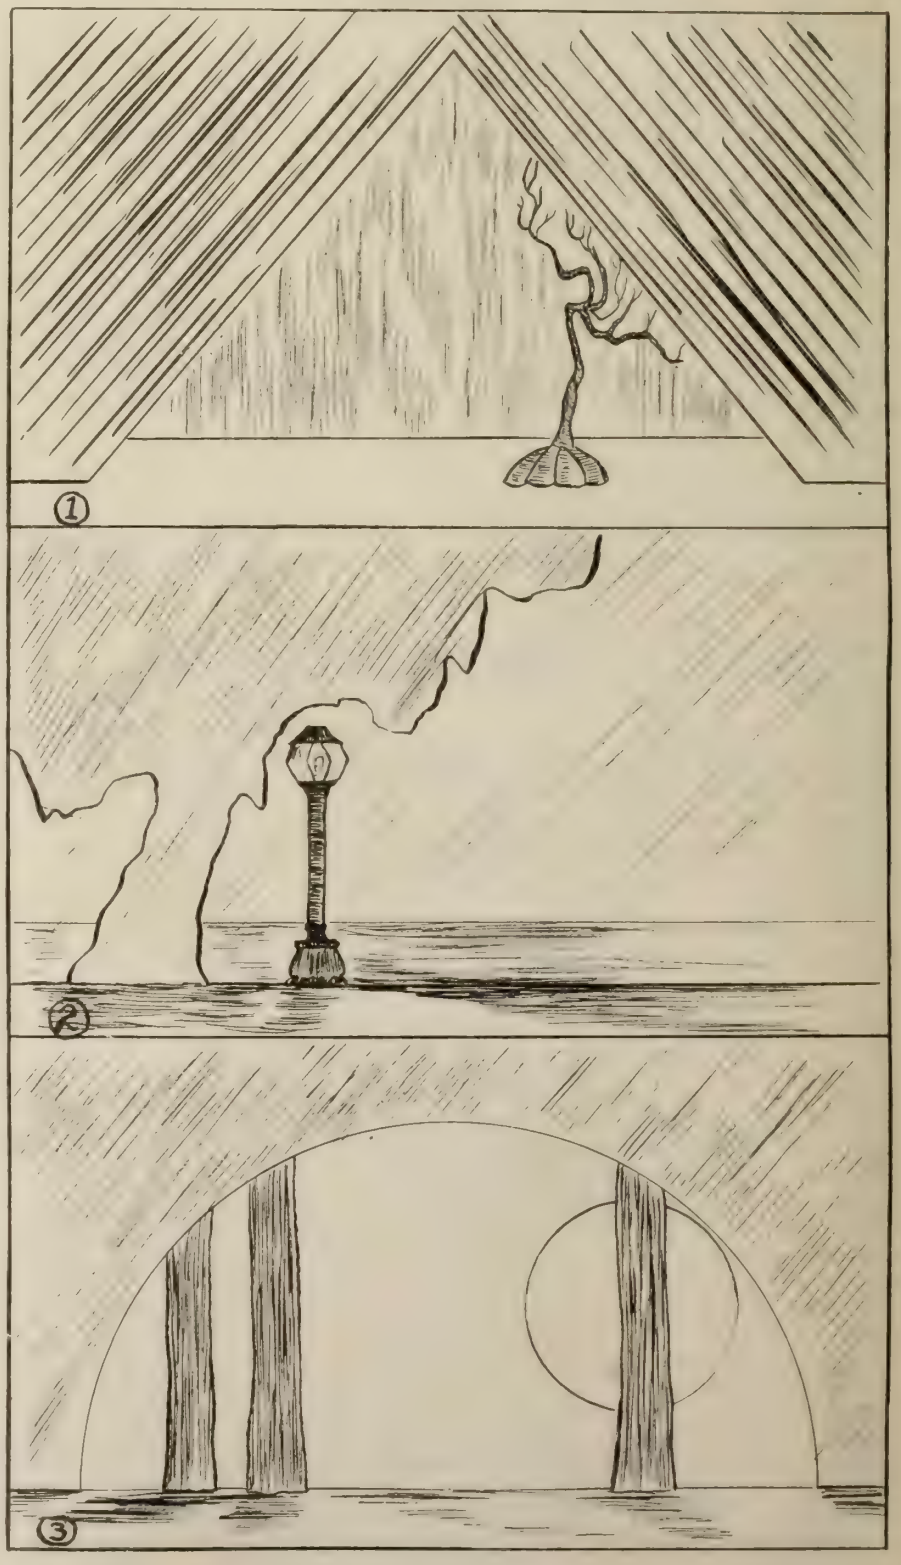
Moving Picture World Presentation—Devised by Colby Harriman

IT is not necessary to spend a great amount of money to secure effective settings. Experience has taught us that some of the best sets that get over are those which do not entail a large amount of realism in their composition. Simplicity is the keynote to a successful setting used as a background for singers in particular. The three suggestions which we are offering this week have been given a practical demonstration by us and we have found them to be sure-fire backgrounds. Naturally, lighting plays an important part in the following suggestions, and producers who use these ideas are requested to particularly take cognizance of the value of shadows in their lighting.

Fig. 1. A Patent Leather Combination. An excellent background for a singer dressed in a gown or costume of shimmering material such as a silk and satin Colonial costume or a white silk costume studded with rhinestones. The set consists of two units. The foreground of two pieces of black patent leather (oilcloth) hung on a battan and brought on an angle to the floor forming the triangular opening. White patent leather should be hung about eight feet back to serve as a backing. A constructed tree in fantastic form painted aluminum or painted white and then shellacked, mounted on an oval base, should be placed midway between the front and back drops. A green tone from olivetts should flood the white patent leather from right and left. No lighting whatsoever on the front drop. A shaft of blue light highlighting the tree with a green and amber highlighting the singer.

2. A Study in Shadows—A cut tree drop hung at the curtain line. A park or street lamp placed beside it. A scrim hung in loose folds in two with another scrim about two feet back of it and a blue sky drop back of the second scrim. Blue sky drop should be toned a very deep blue. A very dim blue should tone the lower part of the second scrim and a green tone highlighting the top of the first scrim. A green and blue shaft of light coming from the left in front of the tree highlighting the trunk. A dim orange amber lamp in the park lamp area. The scrim in the foreground should be split in two and three places to permit the characters to enter. All lamps should be down about one-half on the dimmers, no other lighting should be included. The various characters will give the appearance of coming out of the mist and reaching the street lamp area their faces will be highlight.

3. Semi-Silhouette—A cut arch drop hung at the curtain line. Three strips of fabrics fastened on the back of the drop and extending to the floor, giving the appearance of tree trunks. A blue sky drop hung back, a large orange moon box; a silhouette lamp placed back of the sky drop toning it blue. No other lighting used for the number. Characters appear in a semi-silhouette. Their features are barely visible but the effect is most striking.



Presentations at First Run Theatres

MOSQUE THEATRE
Newark, N. J.

Featured Picture: "Cobra" (First National)

Music: Irvin Talbot, musical director of the Mosque Orchestra, is presenting "Raynond" as his overture feature. Mr. Talbot has arranged a special score for a scenic entitled "The Brook," linking it in a manner to make it an orchestral feature rather than an accompaniment to a picture.

A Dresden Dream

Two characters, singer and dancer, dressed in silk Colonial costumes are posed on two white patent leather pedestals back of which a white enamelled tree is placed. Silver balloons are hung on the branches of the trees with strands of silver tinsel hanging from the twigs. The pedestals are placed right and left center. The characters and the set pieces are toned a light blue from the sides. The background is a black patent leather drop with a large rose basket medallion made of metalline cloth in various colors cut out and fastened in the center of the drop. This is toned a pink and canary with a baby spot. The singer renders "Remember" and during his action the dancer descends from her pedestal and does a pretty waltz number. The two characters return to the pedestals for the finale of "Remember."

Imperial Balalaika Ensemble

10 Balalaikans with Paul Yartin at a grand piano are placed on a bank of platforms against a silver drop which is highlighted with shafts of vari-colored spots from the sides. The orchestra is dressed in colorful Russian blouses and highlighted in orange amber from the bridge. Cut arch drop forms the opening. The orchestra presents a group of Russian folk songs and characteristic interpretation of popular selections.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: "Joanna" (First National)

Overture: Excerpts from "La Forza del Destino," Verdi; "Pace Pace Mio Dio," sung by Kitty McLaughlin; Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, conductor, Carl Edouarde.

Lighting: Magenta, flood, foots and top borders, top flood of amber covers a circular space in center of orchestra. Orchestra rail trough lights, magenta. Full blue spot on close in curtains.

Supplementing the excellent overture, the solo, "Pace Pace Mio Dio," by Miss McLaughlin was effectively staged.

The setting was a blue sky of night, visible through a jagged cut between two high rocks, which were set as though from the bottom of a cave, the opening of which was reached by climbing, shoulder high, over a rough rocky floor. Though not screened by transparency, there seemed to be a haze over all.

Lighting: Blue foots on dimmers, top borders of blue in fourth, the soloist is spotted with white.

"The Hunt"—Mark Strand Quartette, Ray Bolger and Ensemble—Against a blue toned flat, a tallyho, loaded with ensemble, in regulation red jacket and peaked cap hunting garb, with Mark Strand Quartet in front of coach, which was masked in from both sides, with velvet carry-off hangings in third. At finish of vocal numbers the quartet mounted the tally-ho and a very effective illusion was created by the driver cracking his whip over imaginary horses, as the stage goes dark and a landscape kaleidoscope is operated on the flat in fourth. There was no attempt at lighting, except flood banks from sides, with full stage on.

Costumes—Colonial, in varied pastel shades.

Lighting: At draw back of close in curtains, which were lighted magenta top and purple bottom, from flood there was disclosed, through a transparency, the figure dancing ballet in the flood light and overhead X-rays of white, while on the metallic trees there were a series of baby spots of different colors, magenta, green, purple, blue and canary; these are sometimes blended and at other times lighted with single colors. The solo dancing was spotted throughout.

APOLLO THEATRE
New York

Prologue to "Stella Dallas"

There is no overture to "Stella Dallas." The sounding of a gong. The house is dimmed and the orchestra plays, very softly, a kind of a theme refrain. The velvet curtain rises on a dark stage, with a transparency hung in second, the lights on stage are magenta foots with magenta and purple mixed borders, and a ma of baby spots of different colors, magenta, green, across stage in third, so constructed as to represent billowy clouds against a backing of rose colored velvet, hung in fourth, and an arch piece of the same velvet hung in front of third. Through this arch piece, atop the clouds, at a child's cradle, sits a woman. She sings the theme song, which is a kind of "mother song." At conclusion of song, the stage dims and the picture, "Stella Dallas," begins. Rothafel staged the prologue.

BROOKLYN MARK STRAND

(Program from Saturday, December 12 to Friday, December 18)

Feature Picture: "We Moderns" (First National)

On the Stage: Modern Moments Musicale, atmospheric prologue to "We Moderns," with eleven people and in special setting, twenty minutes.

Overture: "William Tell" (Rossini) by famed Mark Strand Orchestra, with electrical effects.

Xylophone solo, "Some of these Days," Harry Breuer.

"Hungarian Fantasy," piano solo, by Lilly Kovacs.

Brooklyn audiences have come to know Edward L. Hyman's prologues at the Brooklyn Mark Strand as incidents which are 100 per cent. entertainment and decided assets to the show. With Colleen Moore in "We Moderns," Hyman staged a Modern Moments Musicale, a big song, instrumental and dance offering with eleven people. Although any one of the artists in this presentation appeared to have been copied from the picture itself, there was nothing used to detract from the picture or give information about it. The general atmosphere of staging and costuming followed the film story, but there the likeness ended. The artists included five girl dancers, two male dancers, a tenor, a soprano, a saxophonist and a harmonica-guitar expert. Twenty minutes' time was given over to the presentation, in special setting, the offering being well balanced up between vocal, instrumental and dance numbers.

To his method of staging prologues Hyman traces a great measure of his success at this theatre. Among the most appreciated of the recent prologues, and ones which brought in real money, were the ones for Harold Lloyd in "The Freshman" and for Mary Pickford in "Little Annie Rooney."

RIALTO THEATRE
New York

Featured Picture: "The Splendid Crime"

For the final week of Ben Bernie and the Rialto Gang, Bernie's offering is more pretentious than ever. Burnoff and Josephine, late of "The City Chap," are the dancing soloists; Eleanor Shaler of the Greenwich Village Follies, and the Rialto Dancers contribute to the stage offerings. Bernie and the orchestra play some interesting and entertaining orchestral numbers. Nothing further ned be said of Ben's inimitable introductions and humor. Hy C. Geis at the Wurlitzer, offers a get-together novelty, "Looking for Talent." Oliver Strunk and C. Herbert MacAhan will alternate at the organ during the regular performances.

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "Keeper of the Bees"

Capitol Grand Orchestra, Albert E. Short, conductor. Overture, "Mignon," Thomas. Aria by Lorna Doone Jackson.

Waltz Dreams—(a) "When I Dream of the Llast Waltz with You," Fayette Miller, Baritone; (b) "The Last Waltz"; (c) "Dream Waltz."

Leo Terry at the organ, spreading "A Little Christmas Cheer."

Better Projection Pays

Mighty Poor Policy and No Encouragement

EXACTLY why the policy set forth below is followed it is hard to say, but read and see what your answer to it is.

Recently, through the courtesy of the Samuel Goldwyn organization, myself and daughter viewed that splendid emotional photoplay "Stella Dallas." Of the play itself, and of its projection, save for the inevitable unsightly distortion due to projection room location, I have naught but words of praise.

The programme, distributed to the audience, however, was in one way a wee bit amusing, or would have been were it not so foolishly unjust. Examining it I found the following, all on one page, with ample space to spare:

CAST

Stephen Dallas .....Ronald Colman
Stella Dallas .....Belle Bennett
Helen Morrison .....Alice Joyce
Ed Munn .....Jean Hersholt
Laurel Dallas .....Louis Moran
Richard Grovesnor .Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.
Miss Philburn .....Vera Lewis
Mrs. Grosvenor .....Beatrix Prior

Helen Morrison's Children..... Maurice Murphy, Jack Murphy, Newton Hall

Her Children (Ten years later)..... Charles Hatten, Robert Gillette, Winston Miller

Presentation by Roxie
Clark Robinson, Art Director
Graham Haris, Musical Director
Josef Stopak, Solo Violinist
STAFF FOR MR. HOLDWYN
Abraham Lehr, General Manager
Victor M. Shapiro, Director of Publicity
A. P. Waxman, Business Manager
George F. Morley, House Manager
Technical Staff
Stewart Heisler, Cutter
Arthur Edeson, Cameraman

And that was that. You will observe that while even the "children," concerning the names of whom not one soul in the entire audience probably cared one single whoop about, were carefully set forth. The film cutter—and I will wager at least ten cents that four fifths of the audience did not even know what a "film cutter" is—had his name set forth. The name of the cameraman was there. I doubt if any other than a photographer was in any degree interested in, or cared to know, two seconds after the title was gone, what his name was.

Yes, they were all there except the studio janitor, BUT right there in that theatre were two men UPON WHOSE SKILL, KNOWLEDGE AND CARE THE ENTIRE EFFECT OF ALL THE WORK DONE BY EVERY ONE OF THOSE ACTORS, BY THE PRODUCER AND BY THE CAMERAMAN WAS ABSOLUTELY DEPENDENT, INSOFAR AS HAD TO DO WITH THAT PARTICULAR AUDIENCE.

Certainly that audience had every right to be really interested in knowing who those two men were—at least a hundred times more interested than they were in the name of the "cutter," or the cameramen, or in the name of any one in the cast except the principals. And were they named? No.

I hunted up Manager Morley—a most pleasant gentleman, and undoubtedly a capable manager, too. We had a most interesting chat during intermission. His view of the omission was that (A) There were too many names, which I met with the proposition that it was not so much the individual I desired to see given credit, as it was to see projection, upon the excellence of which so very much depended, officially recognized. Projection should be placed under the supervision of one selected man, and the statement: "Production under the supervision of John Doe" appear upon the programme. (B) Manager Morley also objected on the ground that the men themselves evidenced little interest in their business, beyond "operating a machine" and working so many hours a day—also he made the statement that they had nothing to do with it except run the machine, hence projection was purely a mechanical operation, and of small importance, so far as skill on the part of the men went.

Manager Morley did not put the matter in exactly those words, but that nevertheless was his meaning, and everything considered it was difficult to successfully controvert his argument, BECAUSE OF THE ATTITUDE OF THE AVERAGE MOTION PICTURE PROJECTIONIST.

Another thing Manager Morley said: "Why, Mr. Richardson, why should I give these men credit when they are sent here by their union? I cannot even select the men I want, but must accept what is handed me by the union."

AND IN THAT I HOLD HIM TO BE

Question No. 429—Suppose the neutral fuse to be blown and the load to be unbalanced, the system being 110-220 volt Edison. Were you to connect a single 110-volt lamp between the neutral and one outside wire, on the "heavy" side, would or would not the test lamp filament glow, assuming the unbalanced amperage to represent sufficient amperage to equal the amperage capacity of the test lamp? Explain the effect of such connection.

Question No. 430—Name the various types of switches commonly used in theatres.

Question No. 431—Name the various parts of a knife switch and tell us what care switches should have.

Question No. 432—What point or points are to be considered in installing knife switches?

Question No. 433—Describe the various types of knife switches.

RIGHT. I hold, and have always held that the employer has the RIGHT to select any union man he may wish to have work for him. True there might be cases where there would be collusion as between a manger and a projectionist in the matter of wages, but that does not alter the matter of right and wrong. Moreover, handing over to union officials the right to thus place men is placing literally tremendous power in their grasp. Perhaps it will not be misused, but the fact is that it very often is. Morely is, in my opinion, perfectly right in his objection to this particular thing, though he is not to be in any manner blamed, mind you, for this expression of editorial opinion, which will probably surprise him as much as it does some of the rest of you, when he sees it in print.

Understand this clearly: There is nothing in all this designed to criticise the Samuel Goldwyn organization, which in this matter merely follows precedent—though in my opinion a very harmful and mistaken precedent. There even is no particular criticism of local 306, because it is but doing what all unions, or nearly all do, when they are powerful enough to disregard justice and right, and have their own way.

Parabolic Condenser Needed

S. R. LIME, Projectionist, Grand Theatre, Bend, wants to know:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Am confronted with two problems, the solution for which I do not find in the Bluebook. Have worked out the diagram used for finding the proper lens combination, as explained on page 199 of the Bluebook, but am unable to apply same, as it calls for a projection lens 2 3/16 inches free diameter, whereas my lenses are only 1½ inches free diameter. What I want to know is, what would be the most efficient condenser combination for the projection lenses we now have. The following is the data:

One and one-half inch free diameter Snaplite, focal length not marked. Working distance 4⅛ inches. Crater at its narrowest point (what do you mean by that?—Ed.) measures ⅜ inches. Projection distance 85 feet. Picture 12 feet. Current is taken through a two-light Westinghouse motor generator set, rated at 55 amperes at 75 volts (got that backwards, hav'nt you?—Ed.).

The other trouble is a bad heat wave in the picture, which utterly ruins it. The auditorium is about 95 feet long by 33 wide. It is heated by four steam radiators, two of which are located against the wall about fifteen feet from the front of the house. The other two are about fifteen feet from the proscenium arch. The heat seems to travel up the walls on either side, and meet in the center of the ceiling, which is only about 18 feet high. When these heat waves meet they seem to come straight down, causing the waving effect. The projection lenses are located slightly above center. There are two vents in the ceiling, one about the center; the other about half way between it and the screen. These are always open.

If your crater is ⅜ inch at its widest HORIZONTAL diameter (which is what I think you must surely mean), your projection lens working distance 4⅛ inches and your projection lens free diameter only 1½ inches, and you do not wish to get larger diameter lenses, then there is no argument. You should by all means have Cinephor condensers. Your dealer can supply them. They cost considerably more than the plano convey, but it will be money mighty well expended. You are now working very inefficiently. As a matter of fact I would prefer Cinephor to getting larger diameter projection lenses.

As to the other matter—well, I guess you've got me up a stump. Test the correctness of your heated-air-meets-and-goes-down theory by shutting off the radiators on one side for a while. If that stops the trouble, then it is pretty good evidence that you have doped the thing out right, improbable as it seems to me. Another way should be to make a smudge (audience ABSENT of course) beside the radiators and watch the course of the smoke.

If you are correct in your diagnosis, then it would seem to me the only way would be to change the location of the radiators so that they would not come opposite each other. However, Big Boy, I'm NOT a ventilation man. Projection is plenty big enough to absorb ALL my poor energies, and I just let the air currents current wherever they want to—until they interfere with projection. Then I just make the best guess I can, and let it go at that.

If what I have suggested don't help, I would suggest that you write the Stuyvesant Company, Ventilation Engineers, Boston, Massachusetts. Give them every bit of information at your command, and they will advise you. They are the best in the country. There will be no cost for advice.

Post Scriptum: Gosh. I just had a brilliant idea. I admit it! If your meet-in-the-middle-and-go-down theory is right, then maybe you could stop the trouble by placing a plank about eight or ten inches wide on the ceiling, one edge on the ceiling, so that it hangs down. Place it at an angle to the radiators, so that it will guide the current from one back and the other ahead. I should say the angle ought to be such as will place one end of the board ten feet behind the radiator at that side of the room, and about an equal distance ahead of the radiator on the other side.

Not be very pretty? Granted, but neither is a picture which wiggles and waves. Maybe it's a crazy suggestion, but—maybe not.

Wind Up Your Projector

A CLIPPING from the "Michigan Film Review"—whatever that may happen o be—prints what seems to be an editorial headed "Damaged Film." Several projectionists of that state have sent me the clipping. The editor (?) proceeds to say that "many complaints are again being made by exchange managers that exhibitors are very careless in the projection of film."

Well, well, well. So Michigan exhibitors have turned projectionist? Yes? No? I really don't believe this editor has the right dope. Oh yes, reading a bit further, the editorial (?) (1 question the editorial because I may be in error about it being one. —Ed.) says: "They attribute this to the fact that exhibitors either have poor projection equipment or careless operators."

Perhaps this means that they employ machine operators rather than projectionists, but then, too, it may mean that the exhibitors are acting as projectionists, as it says in the first place, and employ careless men to operate the theatre.—Gosh: I dunno!

However, I guess it is a case of machine operators, not withstanding the first statement that the exhibitors are "careless in their projection," because the writing goes on to say—get this; it's good: "We know of one exchange that had six brand new prints damaged in the past few weeks. The edges of the film were broken, or there were scratches right down the center. THE OPERATOR APPARENTLY HAD HIS MACHINE WOUND TOO TIGHT, OR ELSE LET THE FILM RUN THROUGH WITHOUT STOPPING IT."

Well, that's quite sufficient of that! The dumbbell who wrote that bon mot presumes to discuss matters of which he evidently knows about ten bushels less than just exactly nothing at all. "Machine wound up too tight!" Well, I guess that will hold even the "machine op'rator" for a couple of minutes.

Whoope! By golly I'll just have to read you a bit more of this particular "gem" of wisdom. Here it is: "We know that in many of the small towns, inexperienced operators are used. They know nothing about proper threading of the projector and they simply don't care, inasmuch as the film doesn't belong to them."

Huh! "Inexperienced operators are used." Use them like a (monkey) wrench or pair of boxing gloves, what? And it's just awful that they don't know anything about the "proper threading of the projector." Under such a horrible condition anything might happen! They might get the fillum in crosswise or some'thin! Might even think the projector (the writer of the article did get one term correct—wonder how it happened) was some sort of a needle, and try to thread the film through the aperture into the projection lens. Really they should be more careful out there in Michigan—and not let untamed writers write writings concerning things they apparently have not anything more than the most nebulous, foggy, hazy, blurred and badly mixed-up and out-of-focus ideas of.

Bluebook School Answers No. 407 to 411

Question No. 407—Name the various negatives and positives of an Edison 3-wire system and explain the function of each.

The following made more or less satisfactory answer to this one. G. W. Bennewitz, Sious Falls, South Dakota; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey, who has been playhookey; Rodney L. Clark, Lincoln, Maine; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Ill.; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; Chas. S. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and Dwite R. Truax, St. Paul, Minnesota.

To show how easy it is to err, I shall point out the mistake brother Fell made. He sent a drawing in which one generator is marked A and the other B. Now I have no doubt but that Fell understands the electrical action, but his answer nevertheless errs, because he says: "The upper wire, C, is the true positive of dynamo A and the lower wire, E, is the true negative of dynamo B."

This is not correct, brother Fell, though what you really meant doubtless is: The upper wire, A, is the positive wire of dynamo A, and the true positive of the SYSTEM. The lower wire, E, is the negative of dynamo B, and the true negative of the SYSTEM. Do you see the difference? The proof is that if you use current by attaching the entire load between upper wire C and the neutral, the only current flowing will be over wire C and the neutral, so that then wire C is only positive to dynamo A. If you attach exactly the same amount of load between both outside wires and the neutral, no current will flow over the neutral and wire C is then the positive wire of the system.

This, as I said, I think you certainly very well knew, but you expressed it in such a way that your answer was incorrect.

Bennewitz makes an excellent reply, as follows:

The various negatives and positives of an Edison 3-wire system are as follows: one outside wire is the true positive, and the other the true negative of the system, while the other, the neutral wire is both positive and negative. That is to say, it is negative to the true positive of the system when used to complete a circuit through the generator to which the true positive attaches, and is positive when it and the true negative of the system complete a circuit through the generator to which the true negative attaches.

Were we to connect electrical-energy-consuming devices across both "sides" of the circuit that is to say, between the true positive and neutral and the true negative and neutral—in such manner that the load would be perfectly balanced (a rare condition in practice), then current would flow from the true positive of the energy delivering device, along the true positive to and through the energy-consuming device or devices on that "side" of the system, and into the neutral, where it would flow in either direction or in both directions, depending upon how the energy-consuming devices might be located with relation to those on the other side. Thence it would pass through the energy consuming devices on the other side and into the true negative, which it would follow back to the true negative pole of the energy-delivering devices. Under this condition the electrical-consuming devices operate in series with each other, under double the voltage pressure of either electrical-delivering device singly, across the two outside wires. Under this condition (perfect load balance) there will be no current at all flowing through the neutral wire between the electrical-consuming device located nearest the electric-delivering devices, and the said electrical-delivering device, and the neutral wire might be broken at any point in that distance without in any way disturbing the operation of the system as a whole.

If, however, the load be unbalanced—more load connected between the positive and neutral than between the neutral and true negative, then there will be an amount of current returning to one of the electrical energy delivering devices over the neutral, or flowing from one of the electrical energy delivering devices out over the neutral equal to the amperage difference in the load. Which way this current will flow, and whether it will be negative or positive, depends upon whether the greatest amount of load is on the true positive or true negative side of the system.

Question No. 408—Explain just why it is that the neutral of an Edison 3-wire system is both positive and neutral.

This question is really very fully answered in Bennewitz' reply to the last question. However, Brother Budge puts the matter into a few words, thus:

Since the neutral takes the place of the positive of one of the two generators necessary to such a system, and the negative of the other and is connected, in effect, directly to the positive pole of one and the negative pole of the other, it follows that it must, upon occasion, function as positive to one generator and negative to the other, in order that the system itself work perfectly as one unit.

Not so bad, Brother Budge! Not so bad. Taken with Bennewitz' reply to question 407 it makes the thing very complete.

Question No. 409—What advantages or disadvantages does an Edison 3-wire system present?

Hanover answers well, thus:

The Edison has the advantages that (A) there is an installation and upkeep saving of one conductor or wire. In other words the 3-wire system will convey exactly the same amount of power which may be conveyed by two 2-wire circuits having the same length and size of individual wires. Put still, another way, in a 3-wire system three No. 6 wires will convey the same horsepower that two 2-wire circuits of number six wire will convey, distance of transmission being equal in both cases. (B) with the 3-wire system it is possible to use motors of two voltage, one twice that of the other. This has particular advantage when circuits are used for both light and power, since while incandescent lamps of comparatively low voltage are more economical than are those of higher voltage, motors of relatively high voltage, on the other hand, are more economical in operation than are those of lower voltage. (C) still another advantage, where alternating current is used, lies in the fact that whereas one transformer will serve a 3-wire system of given capacity, for two 2-wire circuits of equal capacity, two separate transformers would be necessary. Also there is a saving in switches, fuse blocks and fuses as between the 3-wire and two 2-wire circuits of equal capacity.

Excellent, friend Hanover. Excellent, though perhaps some other minor point might have been dug up in favor of the 3-wire, such as saving in conduit, still the reply is as I have said, excellent.

Question No. 410—Explain what is meant by a "balanced load" on a 3-wire system, and tell us how you would test for load ballance.

Fell answers this one quite fully, as follows:

In a 3-wire system the load is said to be balanced when the lamps, motors or other current consuming devices connected between the true positive and the neutral, and the neutral and true negative, consume exactly the same amount of power. Under this condition all power consuming devices operate in series, and no current at all flows over the neutral between the generator and the first power consuming device attached to it. Under this condition the neutral fuse at the power house, or at the fuse block controlling the balanced circuit, might be removed without in any way affecting its operation.

It is always possible to ascertain exactly how much the load is unbalanced by connecting an ammeter into the neutral ahead of all the load.

Doe suggests a practical test. He suggests the connection of an ammeter and adds:

It is not, however, always practicable for the projectionist, especially in the smaller towns, to connect an ammeter in for test, simply because there is either none at all, or none of sufficient capacity available.

Under this condition I would suggest: Connect a test lamp across each side, close to the main fuse block, and lay them side by side where you can watch them. Then, being all ready to clap the fuse back if there is too much unbalance, firemove the neutral fuse.

If there is no visible difference in the burning of the two lamps, you may then (if you can get hold of such fuse wire—it was plentiful enough years ago, but will perhaps not be so easy to get now) lay a one-ampere fuse wire across the neutral fuse contacts, holding it with a pair of pliers, but NOT looking at it, since if it blows while you look at it your eyes will suffer. If it does not blow after a few seconds you may be assured that the system is balanced within an ampere and a half. If it blows the intant it touches, try several of the one-ampere wires twisted together, increasing or decreasing until you find what capacity fuse blows, and that is pretty close to the unbalanced load.

I have myself done this when minus an ammeter and wanting to know the approximate condition as to balanced load. If you do it carefully you can get away with it, BUT it is not a stunt for one who works carelessly; also if the unbalance is heavy, you must NOT leave the neutral open more than the fraction of a second.

Question No. 411—Explain the effect, under various possible conditions, of an unbalanced load on an Edison 3-wire system.

Colby says:

There are several possible effects from an unbalanced load on an Edison 3-wire system. First, more load is carried by one generator than the other, which may be bad if there is just sufficient load to work both generators up to their full normal capacity, or if the unbalance is such that, regardless of that, one generator is overloaded.

Secondly, unbalance of load has a tendency to cause one of the outside wire fuses to blow before the others, because it is carrying the heaviest load of them all. Also it may cause the overloading of that fuse, while the others carry current below their normal capacity. Thirdly, it operates to give one side better protection against grounds, since one fuse carries more load than the others, hence will blow more quickly with additional load.

Fourthly, unbalance has, however, the more serious effect that in case of the blowing of the neutral fuse the lamps and motors on one side will be overloaded, perhaps to an extent which will do serious damage to motors, or burn out incandescent lamps almost instantly. It therefore follows that a well-balanced load is always desirable.

Werry good, Brother Santa Fe, werry good. And now here is an argument Brother Benewitz puts up concerning my statement (Page 498, Dec 5 issue) that he was full of prunes on his fuse-the-projection-room-main-switch-on-the-live-side argument, or words to that effect. And his argument should be good because it is written on Sioux Falls Y. M. C. A. stationery. He says:

Am taking advantage of the "maybe" in your discussion of my answer to question 395, Dec. 5 issue. It takes more than that to squelch So. Dakota. Assuming the switch be so placed that when it is open the fuses are dead, granting this to give ample protection against short circuits on the projection room side of the switch, suppose that we drop (accident) something across the switch blades, and thus cause a short. Remembering the fuses are on the dead side of the switch, certainly a fuse down on the main board or elsewhere, will let go, means the show stopped until the trouble can be remedied, which may require several minutes. True, with the fuses on the line side of the switch there still is the possibility of shorting across the fuse contacts, but we have nevertheless reduced the probability to a minimum.

This is Our Frank Opinion

Since we manufacture both incandescent and arc light equipment it is natural that many exhibitors come to us for an unbiased opinion of the relative merits of each method of projection.

The chief advantages of Incandescent Lamp Projection are:

1. Lower consumption of current.
2. Steadier pictures.
3. Better operating conditions.

The Incandescent Lamp can be operated efficiently on from 25% to 75% less current than is required for arc lights. But it does not generally give as good screen results as high-powered arc lights in theatres having a throw exceeding 120 ft. or picture width exceeding 16 ft.

The light source in Incandescent Lamp Projection is fixed and steady and screen flicker is thereby eliminated.

As there are no fumes, dust or excessive heat emitted from an Incandescent Lamp, operating conditions are much improved. But as the following letter points out, it is the type of equipment used that largely determines the success of Incandescent Lamp Projection.

DE LUXE THEATRE
HUTCHINSON, KANSAS

Mr. W. E. Green, June 20, 1925.
The Precision Machine Co.,
317 East 34th Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Green:

I have now used your Simplex incandescent equipment almost a year and it is a pleasure to report that the results have been very satisfactory. The saving accomplished in lessened electric light bills is a Godsend to exhibitors and is available and applicable to over seventy-five per cent of the theatres. I displaced a 75 ampere arc on a throw of 118 feet and a picture 12 by 16 feet.

On four different occasions in the last five years we tried Mazda in this theatre without satisfactory results until at last we tried your improved type with a special Mazda screen. We were naturally dubious but the results were astounding. Let no one tell you that his house cannot use Mazda without a trial.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) W. D. FULTON.

The GREEN ARCHER

WITH Allene Ray AND Walter Miller

As great a mystery as any Sherlock Holmes ever had to solve.

A heartless, cruel, criminal millionaire brings a castle from England, stone by stone, and erects it on the Hudson.

Does he also import the ghost of the ancient archer who haunted the historic structure in England? How else can be explained the mysterious figure which stalks the corridors at night, a deadly menace to the oppressor?

Is the charming girl who lives near by, the Green Archer? Is it her father? Is it her father's friend? Is it the handsome captain of the state troopers who is in love with the girl?

As a feature it would be great. As a serial it is a sensational, surprising triumph.

Directed by Spencer Bennet
Scenario by Frank Leon Smith
From the book by Edgar Wallace
